The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George L. The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BOUTELL in the chair (in the temporary absence of Mr. Watson).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, at the time the committee rose last evening there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] and a substitute for that amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], to which points of order were reserved by me in both cases.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Do I understand the gentleman makes the point of order upon this amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have reserved the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], the Chair understands, offered a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota, and that is now pending.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, after examining the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, I am of the opinion that it is not subject to the point of order. limitation upon this appropriation, and I will withdraw the point of order, or will not make it, and will allow the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wyoming to be made at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair if of the opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming is not in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota, but seems to be an independent amendment coming in at a different point of the bill.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota again.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 96, line 15, after the word "dollars," insert:
"Provided, That no portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used in examining or investigating any entry or final proof hereto-fore made under the homestead laws upon which final receipt has been issued unless there shall have been filed against said entry some charge of fraud or noncompliance with the law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers a substitute for the amendment just reported.

The Chair hears none, pause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment which I have proposed will limit the appropriation which is made in the paragraph. The expenditure will be limited so that no portion of it can be expended to investigate any entry under the homestead laws where final proof has herelimited so that no portion of it can be expended to investigate any entry under the homestead laws where final proof has here-tofore been made. I want to state in the outset that I am in favor of liberal appropriations or of any legislation that may be suggested that will improve the present conditions in regard to the land laws of the country, and that I am just as anxious that fraud may be prevented as any other Member of this House or any man connected with the Land Department. On December 18 last an order was issued by the President suspending all entries where final proof had been made, and that order in effect provided that thereafter no final proofs should be accepted and receipts issued until after there had been an inspection of the land by an agent of the General Land Office.

Mr. Chairman, I am not taking any exceptions, and I do not object to the order so far as it may affect the future. Department thinks that it is desirable before issuing a final receipt that the land affected should be inspected by an agent of that Department, I am not going to object to it, but after final proof has been made before the order in question was issued, made in accordance with the law and in accordance with the rules, regulations, and practice governing final proof that have been in force for many, many years, I do object to saying that those entries may be suspended pending an examination by an inspector of the General Land Office.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is limited to final proofs heretofore made. The order of December 18 practically prevents the making of any further commutation final proofs until an investigation is had. If this amendment prevails and this bill becomes a law, the appropriation will not be available until July 1. At that time the entries that would be affected by this amendment must have been made prior to December 18 last. So they would have been made for a period of about six months, and many of them for a much longer period.

I say that in that class of entries there should be no expenditure of money for the purpose of investigating them unless there shall have been filed against said entries some charge of fraud or noncompliance with the law. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is a reasonable provision and one that ought to prevail, and I can not see how there can possibly be any objection to it. I certainly hope that the gentleman in charge of the bill will be willing to accept this amendment.

I want to say, further, if you will observe the language of the amendment you will see that it is limited to homestead entries only. I have not broadened it to include entries under the timber or the mineral or the desert land laws, but simply confine it to settlers who have made proof under the homestead

I want to say, further, that if this appropriation in this bill of $250,000 is not sufficient to enable the Department in the future to employ such a force of special agents as they believe to be necessary to carry out the policy of the Department as indicated by recent orders which have been issued, then I am in favor of increasing that appropriation; but I certainly do object to appropriating money to investigate entries where final proof will have been made more than six months by the time the appropriation will be available, and to permit going back, in some instances perhaps eighteen months, and investigating to ascertain whether or not the entryman had complied with the law

Understand me, Mr. Chairman, I am not objecting to the most liberal investigation of all classes of entries at any time and at all times prior to making final proof, but I do object, as I stated before, to going back and looking into those cases where final proof has been made for many months.

I have here, Mr. Chairman, a case where it appears that final proof was made on July 19 last. That entry comes under the order of the President of December 18 and is not in the class of cases within the President's modified order of February 12, and yet it appears that in this particular case the special agent of the General Land Office was present when the final proof was made, and that he approved and recommended that the entry go to patent; but it does not appear that he actually visited and examined the lands. Consequently, the Assistant Commissioner, in his letter of February 12, says that the case does not come within the exceptions named in the President's order of January 25, and therefore the patent can not issue until after an investigation of the land by a special agent. If that entry is not investigated when this bill under consideration becomes a law, the proof will have been made for a period of about one year, and I say that, in the absence of some protest or some contest or some charge against the entry, it ought not to be further suspended, and that the patent ought to issue. ter referred to is as follows:

a special agent of this Office was present at the submission of final proof.

In reply, you are advised that, while the records show that Leroy O. Moore, a special agent of this Office, has recommended that the proof be approved, it does not in any manner appear that he was present at the taking of the proof nor that he ever made an examination on the ground present at the taking of the proof for that he tion on the ground.

The case therefore does not come within the exceptions named in the President's order of January 25, 1907, suspending the issuance of patents on all forms of entry, and for the present patent can not issue on the entry named.

Very respectfully,

G. F. POLLOCK,

Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. Chairman, I have lived in a public-land State for almost twenty-five years, and I am personally familiar with the homestead settler, and, as a rule, I know him to be honest and sincere and striving to better his condition and to acquire a home for himself and family. Senator Carter, of Montana, in a speech recently delivered in the Senate, paid tribute to the benefits of the homestead laws in a few words, and in more expressive language than I am capable of using, and I want to repeat what he said, as follows:

The homestead law has been one of the chief inspirations of home life, domestic virtue, State pride, and national patriotism in the West for nearly half a century. Homes, States, counties, cities, yes, and a typical sterling manhood and womanhood are its imperishable monuments.

In the same speech, referring generally to homestead settlers, he stated:

They are the same class of people who felled the trees, grubbed the stumps, and prepared the fertile fields of Ohio; they are the same class of people who turned the sod of Indiana and Illinois; they are the same class of people who gave to the country men of the Lincoln stamp; they are the same class who brought the rolling prairies of Iowa from a state of nature to a state of superb fertility; they are the same people who reduced Kansas and Nebraska and conquered every arable acre under cultivation between the Alleghenies and the Pacific Ocean. For this class of people this hearing is sought. They are as honest to-day as when they felled the trees and grubbed the stumps in Ohio; they are as honest to-day as when they cheerfully gave their best manhood in defense of the flag of this Republic. They are entitled to the consideration of a fair hearing and to a just, honest, and fair-minded administration of the laws of this land.

Homestead settlers are, as stated by Senator Carter, entitled Homestead settlers are, as stated by Senator Carter, entitled to the consideration of a fair hearing, and to a just, honest, and fair administration of the laws of this land, and I say that when a settler files upon his homestead and makes his final proof in accordance with the law and the regulations of the Department, which require him to publish a notice for a period of thirty days in some paper of general circulation, nearest his land, a copy of which notice is also posted in the land office and another copy mailed to the special agent of the General Land Office who may be located within the district in which the settler resides, and that when on the date of proof he appears and submits his testimony with that of two of his neighbors, which proof is under the solemnity of an oath and satisfactory to the register and receiver of the local office, and a final receipt has been issued, and the claimant has paid the price of the land, that then, after a reasonable time, he is entitled to his patent, and the same should not be withheld upon a mere suspicion that his entry is fraudulent. As soon as the final proof is made and receipt has been issued as aforesaid, by the receiver of the land office, the claimant then acquires a vested right, and it was held by the honorable Secretary of the Interior in the case of the Kern Oil Company v. Clarke (30) L. D., 556) that-

In the disposition of the public lands of the United States under the laws relating thereto, it is settled law: First, that when a party has complied with all the terms and conditions necessary to the securing of title to a particular tract of land, he acquires vested interest therein, is regarded as equitable owner thereof, and thereafter the Government holds the legal title in trust for him; second, that the right to a patent once vested is, for most purposes, equivalent to a patent issued, and when, in fact, issued patent relates back to the time when the right to it became fixed.

In the case of Witherspoon v. Duncan (4 Wallace, 210), in disposing of the case, the court said:

disposing of the case, the court said:

In no just sense can lands be said to be public lands after they have been entered at the land office and a certificate of entry obtained. If public lands before entry, after it they are private property. * * * But it is insisted that there is a difference between a cash and a donation entry; that the one may be complete when the money is paid, but the other is not perfected until it is confirmed by the General Land Office and the patent issued. * * If the law on the subject is complied with and the entry conforms to it, it is difficult to see why the right to tax does not attach as well to the donation as to the cash entry. In either case, when the entry is made and certificate given, the particular land is segregated from the mass of public land and becomes private property. In the one case the entry is complete when the money is paid; in the other when the required proofs are furnished. In neither can the patent be withheld if the original entry was lawful.

The last decision is in accordance with the decisions generally of the courts, and it certainly shows that after final proof has been made conditions are altogether different than before proof, and I maintain that after a reasonable time has elapsed that an entry should not be subject to any investigation by a special agent unless, as stated in my amendment, some protest or charge has been filed alleging fraud or noncompliance with the law. As I have already stated, final proofs are made by the claimant, supported by two witnesses, all under oath, and their attention is directed to the penalties to which they are liable in case they commit perjury.

On the blanks furnished by the Land Office for these final proofs is printed section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

TITLE LXX-CRIMES-CH. 4.

SEC. 5392. Every person who, having taken an oath before a competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly, or that any written testimony, declaration, deposition, or certificate by him subscribed is true, will-fully and contrary to such oath states or subscribes any material matter which he does not believe to be true, is guilty of perjury, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $2,000, and by imprisonment at hard labor for not more than five years, and shall, moreover, thereafter be incapable of giving testimony in any court of the United States until such time as the judgment against him is reversed. (See sec. 1750.)

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Just a question. I only have a minute or two.

Mr. MANN. Supposing that the Department has suspicions and no protest and no charge has been made, ought not the Department to have the authority to make an investigation?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Suppose the Department has a suspicion as to all of them?

Mr. MANN. Suppose it has. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that in view of their own reports, showing that not to exceed 15 per cent of the contested cases reported by special agents are finally canceled, that there is any justification for the suspicion that all entries are fraudulent.

Mr. Chairman, I want to incorporate in my remarks a report of the Secretary of the Interior touching on the amount of fraud as well as the number of indictments that have been found in South Dakota, and I also want to submit the decision of the court that was rendered over a month before the report was made, where a verdict of acquittal was directed by the court against four of the defendants who appear in the Secretary's report as being under indictment. I simply want to put it in to correct a misleading statement that appears in this report as to the number of indictments pending in South Dakota.

In the report of the Secretary of the Interior, dated November 30, 1906, on page 29, under the heading "South Dakota," appears a statement which is as follows:

appears a statement which is as follows:

For conspiracy to defraud the Government, John I. Newell, Thomas H.
Ayres, John F. McGuire, and Howard Binford; for perjury, Carl Pitan, eight indictments, and Lizzie Burke: for subornation of perjury, John Q. Anderson, four indictments, and Elmer Hawkes; for forgery, A. H.
Cobb and Royal B. Stearns. Proceedings against Carl Pitan for conspiracy to defraud the Government have resulted in a sentence of twelve months in the county jail and a fine of $1,000, to stand committed till paid.

At the time the report is constituted.

At the time the report in question was made the first four parties named had been tried, and for the purpose of showing the disposition made of that case and to also show that the report is misleading, so far as indicating the number of indictments pending against these defendants, I submit herewith a copy of the proceedings and the memoranda opinion by the court, filed October 23, 1906, which was over a month prior to the date of the Secretary's report, as I have before stated. The copy of the proceedings is as follows:

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA FOR THE SOUTHERN DIVISION OF THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH DAKOTA, IN THE EIGHTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

The United States of America, plaintiff, v. John I. Newell, Thomas H. Ayres, Carl Pitan, John McGuire, and Howard A. Binford, defend-Ayres, Carl Pitan, John McGuire, and Howard A. Billord, defendants.

At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendants made the following motion:

The defendants move the court to advise the jury in this case to acquit the defendants made the defendants be discharged, upon the ground that there has been no testimony in this hearing in any way, shape, or manner tending to prove or sustain the allegations of the indictment that any conspiracy of any kind or character was ever entered into by these defendants, or either of them; upon the ground, further, that there is no evidence whatever to show any conspiracy entered into by the defendants, or either of them, to defraud the Government of the United States out of anything, or out of these lands, or the title, possession, and use of the same.

And as a part of this motion I desire to ask the court on behalf of the defendants at this time to take judicial notice of the decision of the Secretary of the Interior in the case of Townsend against Patterson (18 Land Decisions, 241), to the case of Lanb against Ulrich (10 Land Decisions, 528), and to the decision of the Secretary of the Interior in the case of In re Ella I. Dickey (22 Land Decisions, 351), and to the decision of the Secretary of the Interior reported in the case of In re Elmira Jates (33 Land Decisions, 41).

At the close of the defendant's motion the court gave the following oral opinion:

I also want to submit the following letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to show the number of final proofs suspended in South Dakota by the order of December 18.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1907.

Hon. Chas. H. Burke,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of the 18th instant, requesting to be informed as to the number of final proofs from South Dakota pending in this Office, the issuance of patents to which are suspended until examinations on the ground can be made by special agents in pursuance of the departmental order of December 18, 1906, you are informed that there are 1,948 final proofs from South Dakota pending and awaiting examination by special agents.

Very respectfully, W. A. RICHARDS

I will also submit the following statement to show the total number of entries examined by special agents and the number of entries canceled from 1890 to 1905:

Mr. MONDELL rose. Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized in oppo-sition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. LACEY. I wish to be heard in opposition to both amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa in opposition to the amendments first.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, there was an ord Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, there was an order issued of a very wide and sweeping nature by the President in regard to the proof upon various land entries. That order has already been several times modified. It has not been modified as fully as I think it ought to be nor as fully as I think it will be. But there is no reason why, because we think the order is broader than it ought to be, we should enact a law that would hamper the Land Department or the Department of the Interior in their efforts to protect the public land against fraud and for the use and benefit of the actual bona fide settlers and homesteaders.

The proposition offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] is that no part of the appropriation for special agents shall be expended in investigating or examining any entry heretofore made or final proof under the homestead laws where a final receipt has been issued.

Now, we know that in the State of Arkansas some years ago very large entries of land under the homestead laws were made on coal lands, land that was not subject to homestead entry at all. These entries were fraudulently made, patents were issued, suit was brought to cancel the patents, and the cases went to the Supreme Court of the United States and the patents were canceled.

Here is a proposition now to prevent the examination unless there has already been actual notice of fraud; that there shall be no examination-none made, perhaps, for fear that they may find fraud.

We have appropriated $250,000 in this bill for special agents. What for? To investigate the fraudulent entries and other violations of the land laws of the United States, Now, they propose frauds committed shall be immune after making final proof, either in commutation or after five full years' alleged residence or pretended residence, which would be the question involved in this case—that no agents shall receive any pay for going and looking at them. Take South Dakota, the State of my friend. There has been a vast area that some years ago people would not even look at; they would not take it at We put the commutation down to 50 cents an acre under the Sioux treaty. Six or seven years of abundant rain has brought that land into the market to such an extent that people want to get it. Thousands want to get it, perhaps, merely to sell, I assume. Perhaps I am wrong about it, but that is the suspicion that I have harbored in my mind. The attraction of buying land at 50 cents an acre, a quarter section for $80 for a commuted homestead, is pretty strong, and many people, I have no doubt, have gone out to that region for the very purpose of getting a quarter section at $80, and many of them will be tempted to stay there and become permanent residents. If they remain, the whole area will be settled, and there is no doubt that large numbers of people who have passed beyond the fourteen months' stage or beyond the eight months' residence, as required for commutation, have filed their proof. Now, how easy it is to send a special agent through that region, hurriedly examining that whole country, and he can come back and report that practically there is nothing to justify specific examination.

point I wish to say this: That in every land district in this country to-day, and in the land district in which I live, there is a special agent who is going over that district all the time, and every final proof notice when it is issued is sent to the special agent.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. LACEY. Very well. The gentleman proposes to put in this appropriation bill a provision forbidding the examination of any case after the final proof has been filed, forbidding the examination of any case unless some charge of fraud or noncompliance with the law has been made, or, in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], unless the Department has information furnishing good ground to suspect fraud or noncompliance with the law as to a specific entry. They propose that these agents shall not get their pay if they look at a claim, unless there has already been some charge against that particular claim. We ought not to do foolish things here simply because we think an order has been made that is too broad, an order that in some respects may have worked a hardship against some individuals.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that, according to the rules of the Department, there is a special agent present, a Government agent present, at every final proof that has been taken, and that that has been the rule for some time?

Mr. LACEY. I think that has been done in several localities; in some localities it has not been done.

Mr. GRONNA. It has been done for several years.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman wants to put me in the position of stating what he undertakes to say I did state. If this bill becomes a law, I will ask him when it will go into effect?

Mr. LACEY. The 1st of July.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As no final receipts have been issued since December 18, unless there was an investigation, therefore the final proofs would have been made about six months. Now, I say that if there has not been some protest up to that time, they ought not to investigate that class of entries.

Mr. LACEY. Why should it not be investigated after six months?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How long would the gentle-man hold him from patent before he would issue the patent?

That is a matter I would leave with the Land Mr. LACEY. Department. There has been no serious injustice done to claimants heretofore. There has been, I think, in this order. too sweeping an order. It is liable to bring about injustice, but it will not justify the change of the law, and this limitation upon the appropriation is just as effective as a change in the law itself.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If this amendment—and I presume it is the one offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] that the gentleman is talking about—is passed, would it not preclude the Government investigating a claim, if afterwards found to be one which should be investigated?

Mr. LACEY. It would if, as a matter of fact, the final proof had heretofore been made. That is, it would preclude sending an agent to see in that particular locality or that particular claim whether there ought to be any action taken to set aside the final proof. Let me take, for instance, entries under the Kinkaid law. We have passed a law there giving a section of land. I have reason to believe, and at least reason to suspect, a good many of the entries under that law have been colorable. The temptation to take a whole section of sand hills under the homestead law by one individual as a homestead has led a good many people making filings there who really would not live in the sand hills, and who never expect to live in there, to take They want to get the land in order to arrange with them up. the cattlemen to authorize them to fence the same. No doubt most of the entries are bona fide.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five the Committee on Public Lands, of which I happen to be a member. From his observation or from the evidence that we have had before the committee this winter, does the gentleman see any necessity for tying the hands of the Government in the manner that this amendment proposes to curtail them and preclude the Government from looking into any wrongful entry or taking of land?

Mr. LACEY. I will answer that in this general way, that the original order as issued, I think, was entirely too broad. The President, when his attention was called to it, modified it, and undoubtedly I think will make such further modification as will relieve the hardships my friend has in his mind. many of his constituents feel that they have not been justly treated by reason of the severity of this order, and I sympathize with them, but not to the extent of making such change in the law as would interfere with the action of the Department in suppressing fraud.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Did I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that there was no wrong or hardship perpetrated upon public-land entrymen except this last general order, which was modified?

Mr. LACEY. The trouble always comes when somebody does wrong that an innocent man is liable to suffer for it. has been fraud upon the public domain, fraud not only against the Government, but against the very homesteaders my friend desires to aid in this matter, by taking the land for other purposes than homesteads that ought to be reserved for homesteads and homesteaders alone.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My amendment only affects the homesteaders.

Mr. BONYNGE. Can the gentleman from Iowa state what percentage of claims that have been contested have actually been canceled on the ground of fraud?

Mr. LACEY. I do not think anybody can state. There have been attempts to state. The President of the United States picked out four districts. He limited it to four districts, and I do not know what districts they were, and in his message he did not state what the districts were. But if the conditions are as bad as stated in those four districts there ought not to be many homesteads allowed final entry without a specific examination. But I am inclined to think those four districts have probably been exceptional.

Mr. BONYNGE. Were not those cases in which the agent had simply reported adversely and upon which no final con-Clusion had been reached?

Mr. LACEY. I think so, and I presume the agent reported as he believed to be right.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to set the gentleman right on these They were not cases of an entire district. certain cases picked out in certain townships, and the percentage was figured on a certain number of cases, and not on a percentage of the whole.

Mr. LACEY. I care nothing about those percentages.
Mr. GRONNA. That is my point.
Mr. LACEY. The per cent of the number of people who are convicted of larceny, as compared with the general public, is not large, but at the same time that fact would not justify the repeal of the laws against larceny, nor justify limitations against various law officers forbidding them from drawing their pay unless the people they prosecuted were shown to be guilty before commencing proceedings.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. LACEY. No; I can not.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. LACEY. I yield simply for a question.
Mr. GRONNA. The gentleman says it makes no difference whether the percentage is figured on the whole or not. Take, for instance, the Devil's Lake district

Mr. LACEY. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask a

Mr. GRONNA (continuing). Where last year some three thousand proofs were made. Now, this percentage is figured on 100 cases picked out in certain townships. They were figured on those specific cases

Mr. LACEY. And I have made no argument, Mr. Chairman, based on percentages. There have been frauds; there have been a great many convicted of fraud under the land laws, and no one connected with this House ought to shelter those frauds, and the effect of this amendment would be to interpose the shelter of this House as against the detection of fraud.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

I ask for another extension of time. I have Mr. LACEY.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. I will ask my colleagues to allow me to proceed without interruption for that length of time, because I do not want to consume the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman declines to yield during his five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I shall not decline to yield, but I hope I will not be interrupted during that time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are confronted, not with a theory, but with a condition. We know that there has been a profound interest manifested for the past two years in the public land question. We know that there has been a widespread belief that the whole system was honeycombed with fraud, and that the entries were very largely fraudulent. I do not believe I believe that the land laws in the main are wise. are the laws under which Iowa has been settled and under which the land has passed into the hands of honest, reputable They are the laws under which Kansas has been settled. And I am not ready to join in the hue and cry that because there has been fraud under these land laws that they all ought to be repealed. But we do not know that there have been a considerable number of frauds, and that those in the main have been such frauds as would deprive homestead settlers of opportunity to go on the land which the Congress of the United States has attempted to reserve for them. The President of the United States is sincere and earnest in endeavoring to enforce these laws. He is no doubt advised by some that because the laws have been violated they ought to be radically changed. There are counterfeiters who are imitating national-bank notes, but I would not repeal the nationalbank laws because bills have been counterfeited. I would not repeal the land laws because they have been violated, but I would enforce them. And that is the proposition in this bill, namely, to give $250,000, not to change the land laws, but enforce them, and the proposition now is to incorporate as a condition on that amendment the provision that under certain circumstances a fraud shall become sacred; that it shall pass beyond the domain in controversy. No more unjust proceeding could be had as against that country out there than proposed in this amendment. Let this money be placed with the Administra-tion. There will be on the 4th of March a new Secretary of the Interior, a new Commissioner of the Land Office-and I notice my friend applauding, perhaps as to both, certainly as to the one; but I wish to say that we never had a more honest, earnest, and sincere administrator of public affairs than the Secretary of the Interior who goes out of office on the 4th of March.

Mr. CUSHMAN. And no more mistaken one.

Mr. LACEY. He may have been mistaken, as everybody is liable to mistake, but he has had no temptation to mistake on the wrong side, as Congressmen have, for a man is liable to make a mistake in behalf of his constituents when he finds them going wrong. A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind, and it is pretty hard to look at a friendly constituent and feel that he is a bad man. But the Secretary of the Interior has endeavored to enforce the law, although I think in some instances with severity. But he has enforced it, and he has stances with severity. But he has enforced it, and he has caught some very big game, we know that—some very large game, that failed to get through the meshes of the law, and he has been enforcing this law perhaps with a rigor that has annoyed some men who were innocent. But we know that there has been much fraud, and we know that a special agent re-peatedly traveling through the country, with eyes and ears open, has the best of all opportunities to ferret and find out frauds. And it is in the interest of the honest settler out there that these special agents should not be hampered in their work, that there should be enough of them, and that they should go on and do this work as rapidly as possible, and I think also that the order ought to be modified to such an extent as to make it apply to localities wherever there is reason to suspect that there is anything wrong there. For instance, take the Sand Hill region that I was speaking about when I was interrupted a few minutes ago. I am satisfied they will find entries there that are colorable. Perhaps my own suspicton is not sufficiently justified. I would hope that an examination of the region would prove that I was mistaken, but in this proposed amendment after a final proof has been made there could be no investigation. I believe that the effect of the amendment will be to nullify the law or at least impair its usefulness. It will be of no advantage to the honest settler. If would aid the dishonest man in acquiring land in violation of the land laws, and I trust that this committee will not adopt this amendment, but will leave a free hand to the President of the United States. He is a western man. He has lived out in the cattle country. These men are his friends. There is out in the cattle country. no reason why he should treat them unfairly, nor have I known in any instance where it has been brought to his knowledge; and the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, who is soon to be in charge, is a man of integrity both by education and inheritance

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. STEENERSON, Mr. GRONNA, and others addressed the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota was exhausted some time ago, and the committee is now proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to speak to my amendment offered as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to speak to his substitute, but the Chair desires to suggest that if there are other gentlemen who desire to speak on the Burke amendment, and wish to ask unanimous consent, it would be better for them to speak first before the gentleman takes up his substitute. The Chair has been asked by several gentlemen for time to speak to the Burke amendment, and if that will meet the views of the gentleman from Wyoming, the Chair would like to recognize some gentleman in favor of the Burke amendment.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota will be reported, and also the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The amendment and substitute were again reported. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to recognize the gentleman from North Dakota in favor of the Burke amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, as one who has lived in the Western States for the last quarter of a century, I wish to say that I hope that this amendment will pass. As I tried to explain to my friend from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] in the figures that have been presented by the Department of the percentage of land frauds that have been perpetrated in the Western States, so far as North Dakota is concerned, I claim that the Department has not done us justice, as will be shown by a report made by the Public Lands Commission for the year 1905, which I ask leave to print in the Record. They have figured, not on the total number of proofs made, but this percentage is figured upon a certain number of cases picked out. I do not wish to be understood, Mr. Chairman, as being opposed to any appropriation so that the Department may investigate frauds. I am heartly in favor of such an appropriation. I believe rather than $250,000 we could well have $500,000 for such purposes. So far as the settlers of North Dakota are concerned they are not afraid to be investigated, but they do object to being held up and not only have their patents suspended, but also to having their proofs suspended. I will take, for instance, a poor man who lives from 50 to 100 miles from the land office. He goes with his witnesses, by whom he wants to prove that he has complied with all the provisions of the law, and when he gets to the land office he finds that all he can do is to submit his testimony and the testimony of his witnesses. If it is a commutation proof, he is permitted to leave with the land office his money and his testimony under oath. He is permitted to pay to the Government his $1.25 an acre, or $200 for a quarter section of land, when the Department says: "We will not even issue a receipt for your money; but you can leave your money with us, and when the special agent has investigated your case we will issue you a receiver's receipt." A receiver's receipt is an evidence of title, and when the settler is in possession of the same it places him in a position so that he can borrow money, which the poor settler very often has to do. He can even sell his land, although the courts have held that the purchaser buys it at his own peril.

When a homestead settler has complied with all the provisions of the homestead law; when in good faith he has made his improvements, made his residence upon the land, lived upon the land the full time required by law, it is not only a hardship to the settler, but it is also a wrong act of the Department to place a construction upon the law which I believe to be in conflict with the law upon the statute books.

So far as I am personally concerned, I will say that if it is impossible to acquire land honestly under the commutation act, it would be better to repeal that part of the homestead law. But, Mr. Chairman, such is not the case. It has not been the case in my State. There has been no great fraud committed by the taking of lands under the homestead law in my State. take it that the same is true in other States where nontimbered and nonmineral lands have been taken by homestead settlers. I am strictly in favor of allowing only the poor man to get this land on the western domain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him, would the passage of either the Burke amendment or Mondell amendment cure the situation of which you are complaining?

Mr. GRONNA. The passage of either the Mondell or the Burke amendment would cure the situation to a certain extent. There were nearly 20,000 entries pending June 30, 1906, which, if the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] passes, would all be cleaned up. I do not want any of these entries to go to patents, I do not want any final proofs made or commutation proofs made where there is any charge of fraud of any kind whatsoever or a noncompliance with

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are you opposed to reopening this afterwards, if there is fraud?

Mr. GRONNA. You can investigate that at any time before the issuing of the patent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the amendment would prevent that.

Mr. GRONNA. Not at all.
Mr. WILLIAMS. The Department could, of its own accord, hunt up fraud.

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], it is simply a provision to clean up the pending proofs and patents—proofs that have been made heretofore, say, for instance, six months or a year ago—where no charge of fraud is made.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Under my amendment, where any final proof has been made prior to December 18, 1906, in the absence of some charge that fraud has been committed or that the law has not been complied with, after this bill becomes a law, which will be July 1 next, they can not withhold the patent any longer in that case under a suspicion that there is

Mr. GRONNA. That is exactly as I understand it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And if there has been no protest filed, they must proceed; and they can not use any portion of this money; and in the case of a great many entries proof would have been made for one year or eighteen months.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not this amendment provide that none of this money can be used in investigating cases that have been closed by the issuance of a patent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It does not say anything about a patent at all. In cases where the lands have been patented that is a matter for the courts. The Department has no jurisdiction.

Mr. GRONNA. As I said, I am heartily in favor of giving the Land Department a sufficient amount of money to make investigations, for the reason that by the employment of a greater number of these clerks or special agents the hardship which is now done to the settler will be mitigated. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson] and I went to the President and to Mr. Pinchot and the members of the Geological Survey and explained to them thoroughly the situation as it then existed.

I will say that the President and the members of the various Departments gave this question a great deal of attention. The President was kind enough to arrange for a conference. We held our first conference with the President on the 6th of Feb-Arrangements were made for another conference on the ruary. Arrangements were made for another conference on the 11th, the following Monday. The President showed great interest and said that he realized the importance of the question. To use his own words, he said that he "certainly did not mean to hurt the poor, honest settler in the sod shanty." An agreement was reached as to what extent he would modify his order of January 25, and the matter was left for Mr. Pinchot, Secretary Garfield, Commissioner Pollock, and Mr. Steenerson and myself to agree upon the modification so as to exclude fiveyear homestead proofs and ceded Indian lands.

Of course the modification was not all that we asked for, as in my State a great number of commutation proofs are being made, and while it can not be shown that any fraud has been perpetrated by these settlers, there may have been irregularities. It is true that many young men and young women have taken claims; it may be that they have not lived there continuously, and still made commutation proofs. But so long as they have taken the claim with the intention of making it their future home it should not be said that the act is fraudulent.

I want to insert in the Record a table of the Public Lands Commission for the year 1905:

The following table has been prepared from the same townships to show the lapse between filing and proof, in periods of half years, beginning with eighteen months:

Average period between filing and proof, 25.8 months.

The first table, Mr. Chairman, shows 80 sales in 6 townships in Towner and Pierce counties. The second table shows 100 sales in 8 townships in Ward County, in the Minot land district. Then these two tables are combined into one table, showing 118 sales in 14 townships. From this they arrive at the conclusion that 77.78 per cent have been transferred within one year and 95 per cent within two years. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that these figures are calculated to deceive. Even admitting that the figures are correct, they are extreme cases which have been selected. It is not the percentage of the total number of proofs made in this, the Minot, land district, as I understand that there were over 3,000 proofs made at this land office during this year. If you figure the percentage on the total number of proofs made by the number of sales made, the percentage would be small. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the mere fact that these claims were sold after the proofs were made, we have no right to charge these claimants with fraud. They have a perfect right to mortgage or sell their land as soon as they receive a receiver's receipt, which, as I have heretofore said, is a sufficient evidence of title, but that the purchaser buys the land at his own peril unless the patent has been issued. It makes no difference to the Government who is the possessor of this land; if they can discover fraud, they have the same right to cancel the entry and refuse the issuance of a patent as though the claimant were in possession of the same.

I received the following resolutions from the Commercial Club of Minot, which I ask to have printed; also a letter from

Mr. E. F. Fisher, of White Earth, N. Dak.; also a clipping from the Williston Graphic:

Resolutions of the Commercial Club of Minot, N. Dak., memorializing the President of the United States.

the President of the United States.

Whereas it appears that the President of the United States has, under date of January 25, 1907, promulgated a certain order in lieu of the order made by him December 13, 1906, in which order he requires, in substance, that in the matter of all final proofs no final certificate, patent, or other evidence of title shall issue under any of the public-land laws until an investigation has been made by an authorized officer of the United States; and

Whereas it is a patent fact that said order if enforced will create great hardship, loss, and suffering to the settlers on public lands within the Minot land district, as well as in the whole State of North Dakota, because of the fact that practically all the said settlers are unable through lack of means to properly cultivate, improve, or reside upon their lands or make final proof on same without securing a loan, for which they must give a mortgage (the great majority of them having no other land). With barely sufficient means to carry them until the time of making final proof, many have been compelled to get their actual living necessities upon credit in order to continue residence, and particularly is this true in case of commutation proof where the settler pays $1.25 an acre for his land, and no money can be borrowed upon such land until final or commutation proof is made and approved and until the final certificate and receiver's final receipt is issued by the local office; and

Whereas, from information received from credible sources, it is estimated that between four and five hundred final proofs are now pending before the local office of Minot land district, and notices of the intention to offer final proofs are now being published, and fully 90 per cent of the homesteaders making proof are securing loans and are using the money borrowed to improve their land, pay the Government fees, pay for buildings, purchase stock and machinery, and pay debts incurred during the time of their residence, and if such loan can not be made it

Whereas, in the judgment of this club, the President of the United States believes in a "square deal;" we believe that the order complained of has been issued by the President under a misapprehension of the facts: Now, therefore, be it *Resolved*, That the Commercial Club of Minot, N. Dak., does most respectfully appeal to the Fresident that this, his said order, be rescinded or modified so as to permit of the issuance of final certificates and final receipts in all cases of homestead proofs, excepting where there are reasonable grounds to believe the proof fraudulent, with power vested in the officers of the local land office to determine whether or not final receipt should issue in each case as the proof is presented.

The above resolution unanimously carried at a special meeting of the Commercial Club of Minot this 30th day of January, 1907.

Hon. A. J. Gronna, M. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I wish to stake that this particular section of Ward County will be very seriously affected by the President's recent order, unless you can secure a modification which really goes to the heart of the order and permits certificates to be issued in commutation proofs. The modification relating to five-year proofs was really not an important one for us. One proposition alone stands in the way of the justice of this order, and that is our people are too poor to live on their lands five years without financial sid, which can only be had by mortgaging their homesteads. If the Department will not consider this proposition there certainly is no use spending time with the President or Department, and we know from conversation with hundreds of business men and homesteaders here that they will expect relief from Congress before the adjournment of its present session. Congress is the lawmaking body, and when the executive department takes it upon itself by Executive order to legislate our homestead laws out of existence, according to the idea of the President as to what they should be, it is high time that our delegations in Congress assert themselves.

We have come in intimate contact with the working methods of the Department for over one year, and have given it careful study from the standpoint of the homesteader and that of public policy. From personal knowledge I will say frankly that the Department has been conducted in an incompetent manner. More, than this, its blunders and unjust and vacilitating regulations have amounted to such perfidy and faithlessness toward the settlers as to make the cases of fraud from the settlers sink into insignificance in comparison. This sounds strong, but I can furnish affidavits from people here who have acted in good faith on representations from the Land Department, and have been literally robbed in amounts from $5 up to $500 at one time, to say nothing frustrated plans, inconveniences, and general injustice. People here are financial ald just as soon as he can get it, and in some cases if he is really to farm his homestead, fourteen months is none too soon for him. We have within the last few days been treated to another example of how figures can be made to lie. We understand that Pinchot alleges that 90 per cent of the proofs here are followed with mortgage. He thinks this a badge of fraud. Can not you induce him to come out here. We will donate a week for the good cause and take him out to look over the country and talk with our farmers who have borrowed money on their land and have him get acquainted with our settlers, their problems, trials, and conditions. We are quite sure he would then be competent to advise the President.

We take pleasure in inclosing a few clippings from our exchanges. We are heartily in sympathy with them. Our paper is supporting the sentiments given. The opinions therein expressed come from every exchange on our table with one exception—The Dickenson Press. It may, in passing, be interesting to note that this last paper gives two of its pages to advertising cattle brands. Cattlemen want nothing better than to discourage homesteaders. They did it in this locality several years ago, Our cattle ranches are about gone here. If the President's order is modified, as it should be, the last cattlemen of this locality will be gone by next fall.

Mr. Gronna, you have been doing us good service in this matter. We appeal to you, however, not to compromise this question until you have given our settlers what they had in the way of rights when they were induced to come out here. It is injustice to give the mens. It may be difficult for you or the people of the East to fully realize what this order fully means to us. Believe me, our people are all agreed that its effects in this community will be seriously disastrous. Very truly, yours,

[From Williston Graphic.]

[From Williston Graphic.]

The speech by Senator Carter, of Montans, delivered in the United States Senate, a synopsis of which we give this week, tells many truths that have needed telling for a long time, and Senator Carter delivered his blows straight from the shoulder. Thousands of our best citizens have been driven to Canada by the harsh and unjust rulings of the Department of the Interior, and Senator Carter justly calls Hitchcock to account for his unjust rulings. Homestead seekers are among the best people of our land, but judging from Hitchcock's view one would think they were all grafters. One of the excuses put forward recently by the Department, to account for their recent ruling on not allowing receipts to be issued, was that the proofs showed that mortgages were put on the claims shortly after proof was made. We would like to make a loan in order to work his farm. But, then, this is as good as many of the reasons the Department has for rulings made hampering the claim holder. the claim holder.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that the question of protecting the public domain is an important one. ricultural and lignite coal lands, such as we have in my State, but we have in other States the bituminous and anthracite coal fields and the valuable forest lands. This Administration, while willing and ready to protect the honest settler, has undoubtedly been confronted with some serious problems in trying to protect the public domain in such a manner that the honest settler shall not be done an injustice. I think that I am able to judge the attitude of our President. He has sought to inaugurate reforms and to prevent frauds. His policy is undoubtedly calculated to benefit the many and not the few.

public domain have been given to the poor who have been home-I believe that it was one of the wisest acts which our forefathers did. Let us continue this policy in the future the same as has been done in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter in which the people of Minnesota, and especially the people of my district, have a vital interest. When, on the 25th day of January, the President issued his now famous order forbidding the issuance of final certificates, patents, and other evidences of title in all homestead proofs and commutation proofs of all kinds until a full examination had been made by a special agent, it struck the people of that section of the country—and I have no doubt the people throughout the public-land States where there are settless man the rubble down. settlers upon the public domain-with astonishment. I believe when the President issued that order he was not aware of the hardships that would necessarily result from it. In company with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] I called upon the President and explained to him the results of that order. I pointed out, for instance, that in my own district Congress had opened millions of acres of land which had formerly been Indian land, not to free homesteaders, but to settlers who had to comply with the homestead laws and also pay annual payments. The last bill on this subject, which I introduced in this House and which became a law, provided that the right to take these lands should be offered at public auction at not less than $4 per acre, and it was done. The land in some cases brought as much as $25 per acre, and still the purchaser could only take one quarter section, and he had to live there five years and make his payments in five annual installments.

Now, the idea that a man who goes upon wild land on the frontier and complies with the homestead laws, and in addition pays from $1.25 to $25 an acre for it, is trying to defraud the Government, is decidedly a novel idea. Most of the land to which the public-land laws are applicable belongs to this class, what we call "ceded Indian lands," which has to be paid for at a fixed price per acre in five annual installments. When these installments become due and are not paid the entryman's right is forfeited, or at least subject to forfeiture. Most of the settlers are poor, and have had a failure of crop, and in order to make payment of the purchase of the land have to prove up and give a mortgage on the land as security.

The object of making final proof in such cases is to get a final receipt, evidencing title in order to mortgage the land to private lenders, and thereby save it from forfeiture. The five-year homesteader, who lives on the land for that length of time, is not likely to be a man who is trying to defraud the Government, but he, too, must make final proof within two years from the expiration of the five-year period or within seven years from date of entry or his land will be forfeited to the United States. We called the President's attention to this class of cases and the improbability of there being any great amount of fraud in them and the great hardships that might result to the settlers from withholding final receipts in such cases for an indefinite period.

He called in Mr. Pinchot, who seems to be the one who inspired this drastic and arbitrary, if not illegal, order in the first place, as well as Mr. Garfield, for consultation, and very promptly directed the order to be modified so as to exclude from its operation final five-year homestead proofs and commutation proofs on ceded Indian lands in which annual payments are required. I will insert the modified order in the RECORD, which was made February 12. As amended, this order requires that no final receipt shall issue in a commuted-homestead case until an officer authorized to make field examination has made such examination or has obtained information of equivalent The President was quick to see the defects of the order and the hardships it would inflict upon the settlers when it was pointed out to him. Mr. Garfield also seemed most anxious to avoid doing injustice or inflicting hardships on the poor settlers, and he is to my mind one of the fairest-minded men I ever met. Now, what is a commuted homestead proof? It is where a man has taken 160 acres and he gets it free by living on it for five years, but rather than do that he prefers, after fourteen months' residence, to pay $200 into the Treasury. Now, it is usually this class that are suspected of fraud. If any of these men have been hired by syndicates for the purpose of geting control of the land they ought to be investigated. Such cases remain in the order.

Now, as to the Burke amendment, it limits the Secretary of the Interior to the investigation of entries against which "contest, protest, or information alleging specific violation of law has been filed." If this order of January 25 had remained as originally issued, as I told the gentleman from Wyoming and many others, if that order was not modified, I should refuse to vote to appropriate one dollar to these special agents. It would be utterly useless, for it would cost the Treasury as much as the land is worth, and there would be no end to it. order is modified. It is so limited that examination will be narrowed down to those cases where there may be a reason for

Mr. MONDELL. Then, if I understand the gentleman's po-sition, it is this: The President having issued an order that was oppressive to all settlers, the gentleman was opposed to that policy. They modified the order so that it does not op-press so much the gentleman's own constituents, and now he is willing that the balance of the settlers on the public domain shall be oppressed by it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that is not a fair construction of my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The gentleman from Minnesota asks that The CHAIRMAN. his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the limitation proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota on this appropriation will not help anybody. It will hamper the Department. If the commuters want to prove up before the five years' period has expired, they ought to be willing to be investigated. By letting the appropriation go as it is in the bill they will get a speedy investigation. So far as we can judge, there is no settler on the public domain that is not willing to be investigated if he can be investigated speedily. What he objects to is the delay and having the title suspended. To secure a speedy investigation I would vote to double this appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If they use the money to investigate cases where final proof has been made they will not have any money to investigate people that want to make final proof.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, yes, they will. I believe these amendments will only hamper the Department. I believe it wise to leave the Department unhampered. I believe that they will use the money so that all those that are anxious to prove up may be investigated. I do not believe it would be fair now to put this limitation on the appropriation. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota will be voted We are doing down. What the settlers want is prompt action, them a poor service if we do anything that will tend to delay.

The amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming is not so objectionable. It limits investigations to cases where the Department has "information furnishing good ground for suspicion of fraud or noncompliance with the law." The most that can be said against this is that it is unnecessary, but I see no great objection to that. It might be useful as an expression of the opinion of Congress in the premises. I shall not oppose it.

I believe the President is as anxious as any of us to encourage the honest settler on the public domain, and I am one of those who believe that our public-land laws could be improved that fraud in acquiring title would be more difficult. I believe if more were required in the way of visible improvements on the land instead of "residence" there would be less opportunity for fraud and less need of expensive investigation by special agents.

The following is the President's order on the subject:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 12, 1907.

The Secretary of the Interior.

The Secretary of the Interior.

SIR: Since there is some uncertainty concerning the meaning of the order of January 25, relating to issuance of evidence of title under the public land laws, I reissue the order in the following more specific form:

To facilitate the final disposition of proper applications for patent and to prevent the fraud now practiced in the acquisition for patent lands of the United States, I have to direct that hereafter no final certificate, patent, or other evidence of title shall be issued until an officer authorized to make field examination has made such examination or has obtained information of equivalent value. This order, however, shall not be taken to affect or modify the following:

1. Final five-year homestead entries heretofore made where the proof is satisfactory and complete.

2. Final certificates and receipts in final five-year homestead proofs heretofore or hereafter made when the proof is satisfactory and complete.

3. Homestead entries commuted on ceded Indian lands in which annual payments are required.

tofore or hereafter made when to a coded Indian lands in which amnual payments are required.

4. Entries where claimant's compliance with law has been established by contest or other regular adverse proceedings.

5. Entries confirmed which may have been confirmed by virtue of any act of Congress.

6. Selections and entries in which no residence or improvement is required by law when the lands embraced therein are situated in non-mineral localities, as shown by the records of the Geological Survey, or when their character has been fixed by investigation and classification made in accordance with law.

7. Reissuance of patents because of some clerical error occurring in patents heretofore issued.

8. Military bounty land warrants and other similar warrants when the requisite proof has been made.

This order is to replace my order of January 25, 1907.

Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the desire of the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Wyoming to protect the interests of the settlers in their own States. It is a praiseworthy motive to see that the people who have actually gone upon the lands now in their territory shall be protected in their rights. But, Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States has a duty also to the people of the rest of the I was peculiarly struck by the language of the Secretary of the Interior in his annual report, a portion of which I wish to call to the attention of the House. Following the reading and examination of that report, Mr. Chairman, I made it my duty to make some examination into the facts in regard to the land frauds, and I hope at a little later period in this session to have the privilege at least of putting into the Record some evidence so damning in its character that it ought to drive at least away from the confines of civilization some gentlemen now of apparently the highest respectability.

It is time that Congress provided that the stealing of land by rich men away from the poor shall be as much punished as The gentlemen who bring in the amendments any other theft. proposed say that these amendments are in the interest of the poor settlers. It may be that they are so designed. But. Mr. Chairman, the purpose in investigating the land frauds has been to save to the poor man the public domain and to prevent it being taken by the rich men for pasture lands and otherwise. Secretary of the Interior, whom many gentlemen in the House do not love personally, but who, after all, is entitled to the credit of his position and to help in his work, in referring to this matter in his annual report, says:

The prosecution of all persons conspiring to defraud the Government of its public lands is being continued with vigor, as is shown by the fact that 490 persons have been indicted in the various land States and Territories for the violation of the public-land laws, 89 have been convicted, and indictments are still pending against 401.

I call special attention to these words, now, of the Secretary:

(It is to be regretted, however, that the efforts made to release it from the grip of its despoilers have been met by every embarrassment that human ingenuity could devise; powerful influences have been concerned, and have not hesitated to aggressively exert every agency that could be commanded to weaken the hand of the law; even local land-office officials have been subservient to such influences, and the punishment imposed by the courts has, in many cases, been so conspicuously inadequate as to encourage rather than deter violations of the law. Whether this official stagnation is due in any degree to local political influences to which these officials are more or less indebted for their commissions and the retention of their positions is not important to discuss at this time, it being sufficient to state that it is a deplorable fact that such action, or rather inaction, is bringing reproach upon the public service, besides enhancing the difficulties which beset the administration in any efforts that it may make to rescue the public domain from serious peril.)

I ask, does the House of Representatives, in the face of the charge of one of the Cabinet officers of the President, that every influence, political and otherwise, is being exerted to protect the despoilers of the public lands, the thieves of the public lands, propose to set its approval upon these frauds and to protect the thieves and prevent the Secretary of the Interior from investigating the frauds charged?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gertlman has expired.
Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no especial desire to inject myself into this debate, but I believe that this is a serious matter, and those of us who reside in the West have felt the influence of present conditions most seriously. A little while ago my friend from Illinois [Mr. Mann] was speaking, and he looked in my direction when he said that there were some present who did not love the present Secretary of the Interior. Let me say at the outset that I regard Mr. Hitchcock, the present Secretary of the Interior, as a man who is honorable and honest, high-minded and well-intentioned. But I am bound to say that he is suffering from a very severe mental disease which has developed into a chronic suspicion on his part regarding the integrity of the people of the West.

I hope to make my position in this matter clear in the very beginning. I am not here to defend men who commit frauds in the land business or any other business. Please understand that. And when I have closed let no man garble my words or distort my ideas by asserting that I approve of fraud or defend those who commit it.

What I cry out against is the wicked, idiotic, and assinine policy of the present Secretary of the Interior, by which policy he seems not only willing but anxious to tie up the welfare and the material interests of 499 honest and unsuspected men and make them wait while he chases one man whom he thinks may have been guilty of fraud, and in the meantime advertises himself as the only simon-pure reformer and thoroughly honest man who ever came down the pike.

There has been nothing in the record of these Land Office investigations to justify this continuous cry of calumny that has been sent forth regarding gigantic land frauds. There is nothing in the record to justify this. It is true that here and there, now and then, there have been rare and isolated cases of individual frauds in the land business. There have also been instances of fraud in the grocery business and fraud in the banking business and fraud in all other lines of business and avenues of trade. But no man has risen by reason of these few cases to defame our entire business structure and the men who have The only difference between the two is that the present Secretary of the Interior has advertised and given currency to a great degree to these few lonesome instances of fraud until he has saturated the public mind with the belief that the men who reside upon the public domain are a gang of thieves and looters. That is not true, and it never has been true. The very life blood, I may say, of our western progress and civilization depends on the ownership of the public domain passing as rapidly as possible in legal form into the hands of individual settlers and owners. And any policy which tends to delay that programme is against the vital interests of the West.

Now, there has been a great deal of noise made at the Interior Department and a great many sensational statements sent out regarding the frauds they have uncovered in that Department. But the truth about it is that the records do not justify the statements and the assertions that have emanated

Of course, Mr. Chairman, we of the West have become somewhat accustomed to having men from the East, in whose States there has not been a foot of public land for twenty-five years, tell us exactly how the problem of the public domain ought to be handled in the West. It is easy to understand how a gentleman living in the outskirts of Chicago, like my friend here [Mr. MANN], must naturally be a great expert on the public-land question.

Mr. Chairman, when I was a child I was very fond of reading fables and fairy stories. Thus, unfortunately, in my youth I cultivated such a diseased taste for the romantic and the unreal that even now I find a great deal of pleasure in listening to the speeches of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]which are along the same literary lines.

Sir, I remember once as a child I read a fable or a story of certain bird, a buzzard, that was flying across the country with a piece of carrion in his beak. He soared above a country that was as fair and fertile as ever lay outdoors. But as that bird flew the only odor that he could detect emanated from the one small piece of carrion he had seized upon. And when he reached the home nest he told his companions that the entire country over which he had traveled was one continuous and expansive stink.

Sir, the present Secretary of the Interior—and I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of him-with his abnormal appetite, whetted upon his imagination, has seized upon a few lonesome and isolated bits of fraud, and he has hugged these morsels close till to his diseased olfactories the whole public domain is nothing but one vast stench.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to my associates here, that for the last three years my mail has been freighted with the letters of men—homesteaders and entrymen—who desire not to perpetrate a fraud upon this Government, but to have the Government decide and determine their claims. Only a short time ago, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], an entryman on the public domain wrote me in regard to his land claim. He inclosed to me a letter from the Interior Department stating that his claim was held up. The date of that letter was about four years ago. They said to him in that letter that his claim was being held up for investigation. Four years had gone by, and I called upon that Department for a statement in regard to his claim, and they still said it was being held up pending an investigation. How long, in God's name, must a man wait until the Government of the United States decides upon a suspicion? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], my personal friend, has stated here, with a great deal of eloquence and enthusiasm, that there is a great deal of fraud going on in the West on the public domain and among the people in our region. And yet my friend comes from Chicago. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that as between the people who live in his district and the people who live in mine I will cheerfully permit a comparison between the two.

Mr. MANN. We are not afraid of investigation, though. Mr. CUSHMAN. And we are not afraid of investigation. Mr. MANN. Then why do you seek to put in a provision which will prevent investigation?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Simply because when a man makes an entry of land upon the public domain there is every avenue and every opportunity to investigate without the aid of a special agent.

His neighbors all about him who are likewise anxious to secure a portion of the public domain can make protest if he This amendment simply fails in a compliance with the law. seeks to place a limitation upon the law which will prevent the Secretary of the Interior from sitting down on the interests of these men and waiting for five or ten years trying to hatch a suspicion into a case.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my friend I do not see any intimation of that kind in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington may be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CUSHMAN. In order that my remarks may be understood I shall insert in the Record the paragraph of this bill

which is under discussion.

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $250,000: Provided, That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares.

There are two proposed amendments offered and pending to

There are two proposed amendments offered and pending to this paragraph. The first amendment is offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], to insert at the end of this paragraph the following language:

Provided, That no portion of the amount herein appropriated shall be used in examining or investigating any entry or final proof hereto-fore made under the homestead laws upon which final receipt has been issued, unless there shall have been filed against said entry some charge of fraud or noncompliance with the law.

The second amendment is offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], in the nature of a substitute for the first amendment, and is as follows:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be available for the examination of the lands embraced in any entry upon which final proof has been made, unless the Department has information furnish-ing good grounds to suspect fraud or noncompliance with law as to this specific entry.

I think the latter amendment—that is, the substitute—is the better of the two, and I hope it will be adopted upon a vote

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in the expenditure of this. or any other fund designed for a special investigation there should be some definite basis upon which to proceed. If no contest against the entry is made, if no protest is filed, if the testimony of the witnesses show compliance with the law, and the report of the Government's own officers at the local land office is favorable, what more is desired? Why should the Government of the United States start out on an exploring expedition? Why should a Government "smelling committee" be organized to go chasing over the public domain hunting for fraud in that case? Why should the Government of the United States turn loose a lot of cheap-john detectives to draw their pay from the Government for aspersing the motives of honest men? While I do not stand for fraud nor for fraudulent methods, I say that it is far better that one dishonest entryman should get title to a claim unlawfully than to have five hundred honest men with their claims tied up for ten years-suspended, like Mahomet's coffin, betwixt heaven and earth. Speaking for myself, sir, I have always assumed that all men were honest until something to indicate the contrary appeared.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason you are poor. [Laughter.] Mr. CUSHMAN. That may be true; but if it is true, I don't I would rather go through life believing and trusting regret it. in humanity and be swindled once or twice than to live all my days suspecting and distrusting my neighbors. [Applause.]

But the Secretary of the Interior—and I do not seek to unduly criticise him-proceeds in these land matters upon the violent presumption that all men on the western domain are dishonest until the contrary affirmatively appears. What a rotten philosophy that is. What a calumny upon our civilization and our manhood. I live in that western country. I have lived there a great many years, and I state a simple truth when I say that, judged by industry and rugged honesty, the surface of the habitable globe does not contain the equal of the men who live beyond the Missouri River, and who have made the western half of the American Continent both valuable and respectable.

This country of yours and mine has never suffered from any depredations of the American pioneer. On the contrary, his achievements have added miles and acres to our public domain, glory to our history, and vitality to our civilization.

Sir, as one who is an humble mouthpiece and representative of that class, let me say that there is no sight more grand and pathetic than that of the American citizen who bids farewell to the fields his father tilled, gathers his wife and little ones about him, and turns his face toward the setting sun to carve out of the heart of a mighty wilderness a home for those he loves.

Never before within my knowledge has there arisen any wellbalanced American citizen who had aught but good words for the American pioneer. And certainly never before have we had in our official life any man whose chief title to fame is that he has tried to indict this whole brave band upon a foundation of fact so infinitestimal that the science of arithmetic can't express the fraction.

There is no reason why the people of the West should be watched by a cheap herd of Government detectives. like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who seems to think that it is necessary to have these special agents watching the men from my State in order that they may perpetrate no dishonest act, who is to guarantee the honesty of the special [Applause.] Where does this assumption find any ngent? basis that a special agent, frequently appointed through political influence, can be depended upon and that his report will always be honest? What an infamous proposition-that the man who has marched out on the public domain with his little family, endeavoring to secure title to a piece of our Federal domain, ought to be watched like a common criminal by a herd of private detectives! [Applause.]
Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Certainly.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has agreed to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee in opposition.

Mr. MURPHY. I want to ask the gentleman a question in

Mr. CUSHMAN. I will be glad to yield for a question.
Mr. MURPHY. Is there any opportunity afforded a homesteader to combat a charge which may be filed against him by an inspector?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I am glad the gentleman asked me that question. There is no opportunity afforded the homesteader or the entryman upon the public domain to ascertain what charges of fraud have been filed against him. All he can do is to wait in darkness and in suspense. My letter files are jammed full of letters from men whose entries have been held up by the Department report, "Entry is suspended pending investigation." They have no opportunity to find out what the charge is, who made it, or what evidence has been submitted to sustain it.

Mr. BONYNGE. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is it not a fact that the entryman's proof and that of his witnesses are on oath, while that of the inspector is a mere letter to the Department, and even his name is never revealed to the entry-

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; that is true—
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And, Mr. Chairman, is it not also true, let me ask the gentleman, that many of the complaints are anonymous communications?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; that is true. And another thing that is to be considered is that when the special agent starts out from the office of the Secretary of the Interior he is saturated before he starts with the idea of fraud. He is going out to find The very existence of his job depends upon his finding fraud. [Loud applause.] Because, if he does not find fraud, the necessity for his official existence ceases. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Why not abolish the courts and be done with it? Mr. GRONNA. Who is it that has helped the Department to have these men convicted? Is it not true that the settlers have helped to bring about the convictions that have been brought

Mr. CUSHMAN. Of course it is true. There has never been any difficulty in my country of securing settlers who would testify to every material fact in a controversy involving the public domain. And the word of these men who have lived in these communities for twenty years, with their neighbors all about them, is infinitely more valuable and worthy of belief than the word of a special agent appointed from perhaps the suburbs of a slaugterhouse in Chicago, through political influence, to investigate the public domain of my country. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am always gratified to listen to the delightful utterances of my gifted friend from the State of Washington [Mr. Cushman]. I am very much grieved that he is so distressed because he finds that the officers who are to go out and investigate these land frauds are political appointees. It is a Republican Administration, and the presumption is that they are faithful "Republican" officers. These land frauds have been discovered, and should have been years ago, by a Republican Administration. The law against them is being enforced by a Republican Administration, and appropriations are being made in a nonpartisan way to enforce them, and I congratulate the country that it is being done. And I am surprised that the gentleman denounces in effect the good work of his own party and his own heroic, splendid, and courageous President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt. We have been investigating these land frauds in the Public Lands Committee this winter, holding investigations nearly every day for some weeks, unearthing by the splendid witnesses that have come before that committee fraud after fraud, whereby not only homes are being taken from the honest settler in the West. but those who have homes are being frozen to death by the land thieves and the railroad sharks.

The fair women of the great West have been employed to go out and preempt coal lands as agricultural lands, and then go to town and sell them to the railroads for fifty or sixty dollars. [Applause.] That Mr. Commissioner Clark and possibly othstated to the committee.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. Cushman] is a very brilliant lawmaker. Possibly I am not; but I have been trying to catch up and help rid the country of a lot of land thieves that I believe infest the West. Let us give all the money to the Attorney-General-

Who does the gentleman refer to, if I may Mr. CUSHMAN. What particular individuals? ask?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, the record. My heaven and earth! Here it is.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I am familiar with the record.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will present the gentleman with all this. I will ask him to read it. I have read it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My time is short.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman has made a statement that is not correct, in my opinion. Will the gentleman point out one single instance where the information has come to the Committee on Public Lands from the State from which the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Cushman] comes?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not talking about his particular State, but about the West in general.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman has not any before his committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I cite the State of Utah in particular. Mr. Clark, of the Interstate Commission, came before the committee and said that they hired women to go out and preempt coal lands. I have no personal feeling in this matter, but I say we are doing just what good people of the West, in the States of Washington and Utah and Wyoming, want. Mr. Chairman, if we tie the hands of the President and tie the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and tie the hands of the Department by curtailing this appropriation-

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman please excuse me? I have only a minute or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, why should we curtail this money? Why should we say, "If you do not do so and so, you shall not do it at all," that "If you do not do so and so in a certain time, you shall not do it at all, fraud or no fraud?" That is what this proposition means. None of this money shall be used, Mr. Chairman, to ferret out these frauds. Why do you say that? That is the effect of it. Why not turn on the light? Give to your Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior and the President the sinews of war to separate the smallest lawless man and the law-abiding man, and give the latter a home to live in and protect him in its possession, and send good faithful Representatives here, as they do now in many cases

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the purpose of the pending amendment, as well as the other one, has been slightly misunderstood by some Members of the House. There is certainly no disposition in Western States, so far as I know-and I am in touch with many of them-to discourage the system of investigation of fraudulent charges relating to the entry of public lands. The purpose of this amendment and the one offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] is in a speedy manner to separate the cases of undisputed good faith from the few cases of a fraudulent character and to turn the force of investigation upon that class of cases that really need While I am in favor, in a general way, of the investigation. particular amendment offered by my colleague from South Dakota and was quite against the original amendment offered last evening by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I am disposed to think that the substitute offered this morning may be better in some respects than either of the two, by reason of the fact that it does not, I think, offer any unnecessary impediment in the way of these investigations. It simply provides a speedy way in which all entries against which any suspicion of fraud or irregularity is obtained may be examined before the issue of patents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of getting for myself and the House a little parliamentary information as to the correct resolution now before What the gentleman has just said is about the subthe House. stitute, whereas the matter before the House is the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]. Now, the language which was just quoted, about having any information furnishing good grounds for suspecting frauds or cause of complaint, is in the substitute. Now, some of us are not opposed to the substitute, but are opposed to the amendment, which provides that no examination and investigation shall be had unless upon charges filed. Now, I ask the Chair, for my information as well as the information of the House, which one of the two things we are now considering?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Mississippi and the committee that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] offered an amendment to page 96, line 15, which amendment has heretofore been reported, and subsequently the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr.

MONDELL] offered a substitute for that amendment. Debate up to this time has been proceeding by unanimous consent on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr.]

BURKE]. After that the Chair said, for the sake of good order, he would recognize the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-DELL] or somebody designated by the gentleman to debate his

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are now debating both problems. The CHAIRMAN. The debate is now proceeding on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman if he will not now consider the substitute; and I know he will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will my colleague yield just a moment?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to say that after conference with a number of gentlemen, including the gentleman in charge of the bill, and believing that the substitute goes further than my original amendment and does more than was contemplated by my amendment, I am willing to accept the substitute, and I therefore move that the substitute be accepted in lieu of my amendment and that that be pending. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will permit-

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I will now ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read for the information of the House.

Without objection, the Clerk will read the The CHAIRMAN. substitute proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the examination of lands embraced in any entry upon which final proof has been made, unless the Department has information furnishing good ground to suspect fraud or noncompliance with the law as to that specific entry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks that the amendment proposed by him be withdrawn. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. That leaves only the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell]. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Martin] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes' additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. MARTIN. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, I think that the phraseology of the amendment now considered as the substitute is an improvement upon the amendment as originally offered. I believe it is apparent that that amendment has only one purpose in view, and I do not think that that purpose differs in any important degree from the policy of the Interior Department or the Administration upon this subject. Now, the purpose of this amendment is that some speedy method shall be arrived at to separate the unsuspected cases from those which have some suspicion of fraud or irregularity about them.

As the gentleman from Washington has very well said, the comparatively few cases of real fraud in recent years in the entry of public lands have, for one reason or another, been considerably advertised over the country more than, I think, could be done in justice to the real conditions. Within a few days I have obtained from the Interior Department answers to questions I submitted for the purpose of knowing precisely the condition of the public-land entries in my own State of South Dakota during 1906. I think a study of this concrete case will throw some light on the general subject for the benefit of the I find from the report dated February 11, which I will, with the permission of the House, make a part of my remarks, that during the year 1906 there were made in the State of South Dakota and approved for patent final entries of various kinds of the public lands to the number of 2,885. During the same period 23 entries were disapproved for reasons of fraud or serious irregularity. In other words, with a corps of special agents—and we of the western country know that every land district has had one or two special agents for the purpose of inspecting proof—it seems that with all the inspecting force out of 2,908 final entries 2,885 have been passed and approved and 23, or less than 1 per cent, have been disapproved after investigation.

Mr. LACEY. Does not that show that these special agents are not doing any serious harm to the settlers?

Mr. MARTIN. They are doing no harm to the settlers of South Dakota, and at the proper time, when these amendments are out of the way, I propose to offer an amendment increasing the appropriation for the inspection force from $250,000 to $500,000, in order that the same class of work—the detection of real fraud—may be speedily carried on. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not oppose this general policy at all. Certain orders were made which, if strictly interpreted, would have been very embarrassing to settlers. The orders of December, 1906, and January 25, 1907, if they had remained in force, would have placed the innocent man on the same plane as the The positive instruction that the inspector must go on the ground of the bona fide settler as well as the suspected settler would have delayed the honest entryman a long period of years in obtaining title unless we should increase the force of inspectors to a point absolutely out of the question. But the order now in force, of February 12, 1907, is in important respects a modification of the former orders, and it will, as I understand the order and as I believe it will be interpreted by the Interior Department, simply place the Department in position to follow its former method of keeping the special agents in the field; and their first duty will be to sift out the unsuspicious cases and pass upon them and then turn their attention with more deliberation to the cases of actual fraud.

The correspondence with the Commissioner of the General Land Office to which I have referred is here given:

Hon. Commissioner-General Land Office,
Department of the Interior.

Sir: Will you please furnish me information as follows:
(1) The number of final public-land entries suspended in the State of South Dakota on January 1, 1906, and of what kind—homestead, mineral, or otherwise.
(2) The number of additional final public-land entries suspended in South Dakota during the year 1906.
(3) The number of final entries examined on the ground by agents in South Dakota during 1906.
(4) The number of such final entries found to be fraudulent in character in South Dakota in 1906.
(5) The number of final public-land entries approved for patent in South Dakota in 1906.
(6) The number of final public-land entries under suspension in South Dakota in 1906.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, D. C., February 11, 1907.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN,

House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of February 6, 1907, requesting information as to certain classes of land entries in South Dakota, you are informed as follows:

This report refers only to final entries. Under the provisions of the circular of January 25, 1904, and subsequent instructions, agents are required to make the investigations after final proof before certificates issue; consequently there are but very few investigations of final entries and the number represents only a small per cent of the investiga-

Very respectfully, W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am thankful-and I mean it as no discourtesy to the gentlemen from the far Westthat I do not live in a public-land State. I am thankful that I live in a region where we paid for the lands at the Government price and did not acquire them under any existing laws. I think that this amendment ought to be agreed to. The truth is that the estimates for the carrying out of the laws with reference to the disposition of the public lands this year show that the total expense of disposing of the public lands amounts to more than 25 per cent of all the proceeds of the public lands.

The irrigation law passed by Congress did not provide that the expense of selling the lands should be deducted from the purchase money before it was turned over to the Reclamation Service. And so it is that, under existing law, we pay out of the Treasury of the United States an amount equal to 25 per cent of the gross proceeds of the public lands in order to sell them, and then turn the proceeds over to the Reclamation Service. So that these expenditures are absolutely lost from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman has made a mistake in regard to my State. We paid $375,000 into the United States Treasury for public lands last year.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I did not say anything that conflicted in the slightest degree with that statement.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman stated that the publiclands money went into the reclamation fund, as I understood

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The public lands of the Western States. The bill to divert the proceeds of the lands in the gentleman's State to the reclamation of the swamp lands of Minnesota has passed the Senate, but has not passed the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. It has not passed the House.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I stated that. If the gentleman would cease to correct me when I agree with him in his statements we would get along more rapidly.

There were, Mr. Chairman, last year 185,000 entries of public lands. The President's original order directed that not a patent should issue upon any of these lands without a field inspection. The subsequent orders of January 25 and February 12 have to some extent modified that order; but, as no estimates are furnished of the number of entries excepted by his supplemental orders, we have no information except as to the total number of entries covered by his original order. Last year, with $250,000, they got reports from inspectors of 4,197 entries, or at a cost of practically $60 per entry. So that, if this Presidential order had been carried out at the same relative expense, it would cost more than $11,000,000 for inspectors alone if they kept up with this work. The total expenses of the Land Department in selling six or seven million dollars' worth of land a year would be more than $12,000,000. I trust I am as much in favor of suppressing fraud as any man upon the floor of this House, but when the proposition is made that we are to squander, in protecting the Government against fraud, more money than all the proceeds of the public lands, I can not indorse that policy. [Ap-

The amendment in question gives to the Land Department all the period between original entry and the right to patent in which to get even a reasonable ground of suspicion of fraud. When the homestead entryman has taken his land and the Government has had five long and weary years in which to get a suspicion that he is not living upon the land, ought the Government then, after his final proofs have been made under oath and he is ready at last to realize upon this work of five years and get his land so he can handle it and utilize it-ought the Government then, without grounds of suspicion, to say that this patent shall now be suspended that we may investigate whether five years ago he made a bona fide entry upon this land? This amendment will simply require prompt action upon the part of the Government, an action that is but simple justice to the settlers, and at the same time we will then have here an adequate fund for the investigation of all even suspected frauds; but we will not squander all the proceeds of the public lands and more in avoiding their being obtained from us by fraud.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Whether, in the gentleman's judgment, this amendment imposes a limitation upon the Department which good policy would not require to be imposed upon every district attorney in the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not at all; and I want to say further that while I have pointed out that we are now expending 25 per cent of the proceeds of the public lands, I have not called attention to the large appropriations we make for special counsel to prosecute frauds in these cases, or any of the expenses of the Federal courts that are involved in their prosecution. It is simply a question whether we are to say that we will enforce the laws against frauds, but we will not squander all the proceeds of the public lands lest here and there some case of fraud may arise. Mr. Pollock, the Deputy Commissioner of the Land Office, as a striking example of their needs, said that in many cases of commuted homestead entries the parties did not actually live upon the land the eight months required by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. He said that was a common type of fraud. Now, what kind of fraud is that? If a man commutes, he pays the Government $1.25 an acre; if he does not commute, he gets the land for nothing. The law ought to be obeyed, and he ought to live there the eight months; but how much of the public money are you going to spend just to see that he does not defraud the Government by paying his $1.25 an acre in place of nothing at all for the land?

Now, that is a simple question, it seems to me. have a reasonable enforcement of the law with adequate means, or shall we squander the public revenues in investigating 185,000 cases a year, the overwhelming majority of which are not fraudulent, and no fraud suspected concerning them?

[Applause.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, I presume I have spent as much time as any Member of the House in a public-land State and have known a good deal of the workings of the public-land laws, and I believe I am safe in saying that as time goes on there is more disposition to try to get public lands without properly fulfilling the law for the reason the lands are becoming more valuable. As the gentleman from Iowa suggested that the State of Iowa had been settled under the public-land laws and Kansas had also settled, that is true; but at that time

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. REEDER. I was referring to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We paid for our lands.
Mr. REEDER. But they were taken under the land laws, just the same.

A large portion of the northwestern portion of Mr. LACEY. Iowa was taken under the land laws.

Mr. REEDER. The point I wish to make is this. If at that time a man did not get the particular quarter he wanted he could get another just as good. Now, it has come to pass that persons desiring large tracts of land find they have little choice. They must secure certain tracts or get no land, and the result is that there is a good deal more disposition, in my judgment, to try to get land without complying with the law than has ever existed before, and but for the disposition on the part of the Government to look into these cases of law violation more carefully, I think that the cases of fraud would be on the increase. In the course of this argument it seems to me that persons have been talking about matters not pertaining to the subject. They are constantly talking about the disadvantage to the settler who desires to make a home on the land.

This provision is intended to expedite and determine the character of proofs. It is intended to give the man who lives on the land a minimum of disadvantage, because if it is his purpose to live on the land, there is little difference to him whether he gets his title a year earlier or later, but the purpose is to reserve the best land of the public domain for actual settlers, and I do not believe there is a more important matter now before the Government than the giving to the people homes on the public lands, and I do not believe there is any one thing which needs to be guarded more carefully against than the permitting persons of wealth to secure this land as against the homesteader. This provision of $250,000 for speedy inspection was intended to permit the man who actually desires to make a home on the land to obtain his land, rather than the speculator. seems to me it would be wrong to adopt this amendment and thus preclude an investigation of any fraud simply because it was committed in the past. The fact is that since this move has been on to see that the law is enforced, there is likely much less disposition to violate the laws than was the case before, and if by any means it should go into the hands of rich men by means of this amendment, which I believe would be the case, then we certainly have made a great mistake if we pass it. We should not have made a mistake as to the settler, because whether he should get title to the land to-morrow or next week or within a year makes little difference. In fact, he does not have to pay taxes until he gets the land, and his purpose is to live there anyway, so the only man who can probably be hurt, should this amendment be defeated, is the man desiring to cover up his tracks, the man who is intending to get land by commutation, perhaps. Hence I say that this House—

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.
Mr. MARSHALL. I presume it is fair to say that an honest man who lives on a homestead would ultimately get a patent as it now exists, but is it fair to him, having taken it under the existing law, that the final receipt should be held up for years? You might as well take the land away from him.

Mr. REEDER. It is no great detriment to him if his purpose is to occupy the land.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is a detriment.

Mr. REEDER. He does not have to pay taxes, and he is residing on the land, and where is the detriment? If he means to commute the homestead and secure money on that land and dispose of it, it is a detriment to him, and it is an advantage to the man that gets the land.

Mr. MARSHALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.
Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to have the gentleman tell me how a county of homesteaders living on their homesteads and who did not have to pay taxes would benefit the Govern-I think the quicker he pays the tax the better it is for

Mr. REEDER. Not for him. It is better for the Government, but not for him. I have not noticed anybody trying to pay taxes for the benefit it is to them. It is a benefit to the mmunity. I grant that. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. community.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, debate on this amendment has continued now almost two hours, and I must insist upon the fiveminute rule being enforced if we are to make any progress today at all on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Reeder] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] to object?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will not object now.

Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of consider-The gentlemen from the public-land States, Mr. REEDER. able importance. where lands are being taken up under the public-land laws, may have constituents interested in having this amendment carried, but I do not believe it is in the interest of the actual settler. I believe that all those men in all the Western States who have the most influence in every direction are not homesteaders; it is not the man on the homestead. It is the man that desires this public land for pasture or for speculation. But, nevertheless, I believe that we ought to look further and do what we can do in the interest of the man who will actually make a home on the land. That is the strength of the action. and in recent years when land has become scarce there has been a disposition upon the part of wealthy men to secure large tracts of this land, which is a great detriment to everybody except that man himself. And they do it by means that in ordinary business they would not regard as quite square. There has been said, and truly said, that there is such a thing as a public-land conscience. I have lived long enough in the Western States to know that that conscience sometimes does very queer things, and yet the men who do them are honest and law-abiding in all other matters and regard they are doing no great harm in this. They do not regard the land of any particular value. I believe this amendment should not prevail for the reason that we should examine as to these titles. It can be no great disadvantage to the man that is actually making a home on the land. It can only be a disadvantage to the man that has got a fine scheme fixed up, six or eight months or a year or two since, for securing a large tract of land somewhere by getting a number of commutations, and I believe we should stand against that man and in favor of the man who desires to make a home on the

I think this proposition of $250,000 is intended for the protection of the man who is honestly trying to get the land for a home, because the investigation will only prevent the scheme of the man who is trying to get the land for speculative purposes. I do not think that this proposition or this amendment will ever have any effect against the man that is residing on the land. Its effect will be in favor of the man who is buying up commuted homesteads. If there were no fraud except by the man who has lived on his land for five years and obtained title by that process, there would be but little fraud. in the commutation propositions, and I guess almost anyone who knows anything about western settlements knows that at times a good many persons go at one time to one place and settle upon the land for the purpose of commuting, then sell out to some individual who has the money that he desires to invest in that manner. I do not believe that there is any great danger that we will expend the large amounts of money, as has been suggested by my friend from Iowa, to the detriment of the Treasury, in seeing that people who desire to make homes on the land get the land; get it as against the speculator.

He surely shows that he has a very prolific imagination when he thinks we are going to make the investigation of homesteads to the extent that they will cost more than the land is worth. I am convinced that all Members who have only the interest of giving the people who desire to live on these lands and make homes there on the lands as against the speculators will vote against this amendment.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman— Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending amendment be closed in fifteen minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope that motion will not be put. I would like to have a little time to speak to my amendment.
Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I believe I was recognized before the gentleman from Minnesota, and he can not take me

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Colorado. The Chair understood the gentleman from Colorado to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BONYNGE. No, sir. The CHAIRMAN. The C

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado for five minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, the Representatives from the Western States can not be placed in the position of attempting to protect fraudulent acquisition of the western lands. We are vitally interested, and perhaps more so than the people or the Representatives of any other section of the country, in a proper and legal administration of the land laws of the United States. Upon the administration of those laws depends, in a very large measure, the growth and the develop-ment of our country. We favor and insist upon obedience to those laws, both by the settlers and all officials of the Government. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Reeder], who has recently addressed the committee, has said that as the land becomes scarcer there is greater competition upon the part of settlers to acquire certain of the lands. That is absolutely true, Mr. Chairman, and that very fact, it seems to me, goes far to prove that it is unnecessary to have a herd of inspectors guarding and watching each of the settlers. The laws of the United States provide sufficient safeguards in the ordinary case to detect fraud wherever fraud has been committed, and an inspection upon the ground by an agent of the Government in each case is unnecessary, a useless expenditure, and in the great majority of cases results only in delay to the settler or locator in acquiring the title to the land which under the law he has earned, and thereby retarding the growth and development of the country. I believe an investigation of the records of the Land Department will show that the number of frauds that have been committed and have been detected have been to a very large extent those that were detected under the safeguards provided by the statutes and not by reason of the diligence of the inspectors appointed by the Land Office. records of the Land Department, as I am advised, show that only 1 per cent of all the entries of all kinds are canceled for fraud, and in the case of homestead entries only 1 out of every Congress has by statute declared what steps are necessary to be taken by the entryman under the different land laws of the country and the proof that is required to show compliance with those laws. The Departments of the Government can not by order add new requirements or make additional evidence necessary. The rules and regulations that the Interior Department can make are those intended to carry out the laws, but not to supersede them.

In the case of a homestead entry the entryman is obliged to give thirty days' notice by publication in a paper in the district where the land is situated before he can make proofs before the register and receiver of the Land Office. When that day arrives he is obliged to appear before the register and receiver in person with his two witnesses to prove that he has complied with the statutes of the United States. He and his witnesses are subjected to cross-examination by the Government officials, and if we have these other settlers who are seeking to acquire the land they will be very diligent to hunt up cases of fraud and to see that they are properly presented to the register and receiver.

There is another class of entries, Mr. Chairman, to which attention has not been called, which are also covered by the order read by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. refer to the mineral entries. Anybody who has had experience in the mining country knows very well that if mineral lands of value are discovered, there will be plenty of people ready to file adverse claims provided the locator has not complled with the statute. Now, in the the case of a mineral entry the locator is required to post notice of his application for patent upon the claim itself. Then he is required, before he applies to the register and receiver for his patent, to give sixty days' notice by publication, and at the expiration of that time anybody who has any knowledge or any information of any violation of the laws upon his part can appear before the register and receiver and file his adverse claim.

What, Mr. Chairman, could an inspector determine by going upon the mineral claim and making a personal investigation? As a matter of fact, the mining experts who went to Cripple Creek in the early days, nearly every one of them, turned down the camp, and said the geological formation in that district was such that you could not possibly expect to find gold there; and if these mining experts, with all their knowledge and experience, turned down a camp that has added so much to the wealth of this country as Cripple Creek, what could you expect from one of those slaughterhouse inspectors, to whom the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Cushman] referred, who might go upon any of these claims to make an investigation? Many of our richest mines have been turned down by mining experts. submit, Mr. Chairman, that the establishment with reference to the mineral lands of the requirement of a personal investigation upon the ground is absolutely of no value to protect the interests of the United States, but will in nearly every case be of great detriment to the locator and will retard the development of the mining industries of the West. In any case where there is any reason to suspect fraud the Department, under the amendment, will have full authority to make an investiga-The appropriation is amply sufficient to cover all such investigations. We want the Government's interest fully protected, but we do not want the ninety-nine honest settlers locators upon the public domain to be deprived of their rights or delayed in their enjoyment of those rights because of the fraud committed by the one dishonest man. In the effort to detect fraud and to punish the perpetrators the Department is entitled to and will receive the support of Congress. We do resist emphatically the wholesale denunciation of all the settlers upon the public domain and submit that there is nothing in the record of the Department to justify it. The amendment proposed and the amount appropriated will enable the Department to ferret out all cases of fraud without doing an injustice to the honest settlers.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. TAWNEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that an debate close in ten minutes on this paragraph and amendments thereto.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the chairman of the committee will not move to close debate on the paragraph. There are other amendments that gentlemen desire to offer, and we have only been discussing one.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that the amendment that the gentleman has in mind has been discussed with the amendment now pending.

ending. It simply means an increase in appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minesota moves to close debate on the pending paragraph and amendments in ten minutes.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the gentlemen who have spoken against this amendment fail to understand what its effect will be, and that if they had a clear understanding of the effect of the amendment they would not object to its adoption. I wish to call attention to the fact that the adoption of this provision will not in any way hamper the Department in any proper investigation of land entries. The intent of the amendment is simply to prevent the tying up for an indefinite period of land entries upon which final proofs have been made in accordance with law and in regard to which the Department has no information of any kind or character whatsoever to warrant it in suspecting fraud or of noncompliance with the law in any particular.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this will not prevent the same investigation that has been going on from the beginning of the Government up to this time into all land claims and entries. It will have the effect of limiting the use of this appropriation to investigations made while the entries continue to run their course and right up to the date of patent, but it is hoped will discourage the suspension of entries without any ground or reason for such suspension except an ill-grounded suspicion on the part of officials that public-land entries are largely fraudulent. Gentlemen all understand that in the case of all land entries those living in the locality are constantly on the alert to detect noncompliance with the law. They have a right to contest on the ground of fraud or noncompliance with law, and if successful in the contest they have a preference right of entry. After having run the gantlet of this scrutiny of the people in the locality for a year or fourteen months or five years as may be the case, in every entry proof is made, widely published, witnesses are sworn, every question which is suggested by the Land Office is asked and answered under oath, and at the end of this examination the final certificate is issued.

Now, in the usual course of business of the Land Office it requires from eight months to a year to pass a case from final proof to patent. During that period, as well as during all of the period during which the entry runs up to that time, the Department has the right under this amendment to protest the entry, to hold it up to examine it whenever it has any information furnishing grounds to suspect fraud or noncompliance with It will not prevent any investigation which is now ordinarily had or which has been had under the Government. It will, however, it is hoped, discourage the further issuance of orders peremptorily suspending thousands and tens of thousands of land entries against which no breath of suspicion of fraud has ever been raised.

There are in the archives of the Land Office to-day 5,000 final entries passed to patent, all the way from six months to two years after final entry was made, against no one of which a breath of suspicion has ever been raised, against which no protest has ever been filed, against which no man, either agent of the Government, settler in the locality, or anyone else, has ever raised a question as to fraud.

sent his time was extended five minutes.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I would like to ask the meaning of his amendment. The Burke amendment confined the investigation to those entries against which a protest or contest had been filed charging specific violation. The gentleman's amendment limits it to those cases against which there is information furnishing good grounds for suspicion. Does the gentleman suppose that the Department would investigate unless good grounds?

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say to the gentleman that he has reason to know that the Department has suspended something like 30,000 cases, and that in at least 28,000 of them there has never been a question raised as to their validity.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment; I think it is a better proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. All my amendment proposes is that the laws of the country shall run; that they shall be allowed to continue to operate; that they shall not be suspended by Executive order. My amendment simply provides that the laws of the land shall be respected, that the rights of entrymen under those laws shall be respected, and that when there is no breath of suspicion against a man's right to claim an entry he shall receive in the due course of business a patent which the laws of the land and the courts of the land have said he shall have when he has complied with the law.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield for a question.
Mr. SULLIVAN. I will ask the gentleman whether, in his judgment, there is any law which justifies the Executive order of January 23, 1907?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I say, most emphatically, no, and no condition exists which warrants it, and the best proof of that fact is that that Executive order was modified radically twice in six weeks and that it now affects half or a third of the cases that it originally did. Yet it stands a bar against the lawful rights of thousands of citizens of these United States who have complied with the land laws, who have done every thing the law requires them to do, who have gone before the officials of the Departments and made their proofs under oath, against whose right to their lands no man has ever raised a voice. These entries are suspended contrary to law and to the decisions of the courts.

I would like to inquire of the gentle-Mr. LITTLEFIELD. man from Wyoming why it would not still be possible, if this appropriation is to be refused or this limitation is adopted, for the Secretary of the Interior to continue to make the kind of orders that the gentleman has been describing, and, in that case, of what consequence upon that proposition is the failure Is there objection?

to appropriate? That is, would it not be possible for him to do

Mr. MONDELL. I would remind the gentleman that we do appropriate a goodly sum, a sufficient sum, for all proper purposes of investigation and inspection, and if the Congress expresses its view on this question clearly, as provided in this amendment, to the effect that those cases where no question has been raised about compliance with the law-if the Congress clearly indicates that those cases must not be suspended, and if suspended that they can not be examined with this appropriation, I assume there will be no further orders of wholesale suspension.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But he would have the power to make them just exactly as he has now?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; the Secretary has the power to write such orders so long as he has power to wield a pen. I do not believe he has any authority to do so, however, but that doesn't seem important these days.

I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not Mr. LACEY. true that, if this amendment is passed, where a homesteader commits a crime in his final proof, swearing he has lived on the land when he has not, this will bar an investigation?

Mr. MONDELL. I am surprised at my friend from Iowa, who probably knows more about the land laws than any man in this House, for making that kind of a suggestion. I want to call attention to the fact that this does not prevent an investigation at any time prior to the issuance of a patent, and it can not and does not attempt to amend the law under which a criminal action will lie for three years after patent issues.

Mr. LACEY. It forbids the investigation to find it out, does it not?

Mr. MONDELL. It does not. It simply forbids the spending of the people's money trying to hunt up fraud where none exists.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not if there is any ground of sus-

Mr. MONDELL. It simply provides that entries indefinitely suspended without suspicion, without any suggestion as to their having been made in violation of law—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to remind the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] that it takes all the way from eight months to a year to pass a final entry to patent, within which time, under this amendment, at any time the Department can suspend an entry on any information coming from anywhere, wafted by any wind, no matter how anonymous, no matter how indefinite; if it raises any suspicion of the validity of the entry, it can still be suspended under this amendment. But under the amendment this appropriation can not be used for the useless, wasteful purpose of investigating entries on which the entryman has complied with the letter and the spirit of the law. It is hoped it will prevent the issuance of sweeping orders under which the orderly procedure of entries after proof toward patent is arrested and the entryman is denied the patent which is his due.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. date on the pending paragraph and all the amendments thereto is exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair reported that the ayes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were-ayes 104, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 96, in lines 14 and 15, strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to read: "$500,000."

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to address myself to the amendment for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to discuss the amendment for five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, before unanimous consent is given I desire to have an equal amount of time in opposition to

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I have read with considerable care the hearings upon the subject of the amount of this appropriation before the subcommittee on appropriations. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office asked an increase of $500,000 above the usual amount appropriated, which is $250,000. The purpose of my amendment is to take middle ground between the request of the Secretary upon this subject and the amount heretofore and to increase the amount from $250,000 to appropriated. $500,000 in all. At the time the hearing was had before the subcommittee on January 30 the order of the Executive was still in force, which required an investigation upon the ground of every entry that should thereafter pass to patent, with certain specific exceptions. That order was very materially modified on the 12th day of February, so that now the instruction is that evidence of title shall not be issued until an officer authorized to make field examination has made such examination or has obtained information of equivalent value. words, under the order now existing, especially since the amendment already made to this paragraph, the purpose and policy will be to make what is known as "field" examinations—that is, examinations anywhere out of the city of Washington, the seat of Government-and it is simply continuing in force the general policy heretofore pursued in the Department of investigating cases that require investigation because of suspicions surrounding them. It seems to me we ought to aid the Government to catch up in this class of work. There were pending entries in the General Land Office on the 1st day of December, 1906, in round numbers, 36,000. Final entries are coming in at the rate of about 5,000 a month, or about 60,000 per year. The present force of the Department can investigate only a little more than one-half of the cases which must necessarily be investigated. Of all the cases, as experience has shown, that come into the Department, about 90 per cent are passed without a suspicion attaching thereto.

About 10 per cent require investigation on the ground, and it is believed by the officers of the Department that by the increased appropriation asked by my amendment absolute justice might be administered in this Department. I think we ought not to embarrass the officers of the law in making investigations. The testimony before our Committee on Public Lands in the last month on the subject of coal lands disclosed no considerable fraud in the acquisition of coal land under the coal-land law, but disclosed a good deal of fraud in the acquisition of coal land by other or agricultural laws, particularly in the use of the right of lieu-land selection which the States have by virtue of their constitutions or enabling acts in these Western States. was asserted before our committee, and it was shown recently in investigations by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the State of Utah and in the State of Colorado, that large quantities of public coal lands of the United States, which, under the law, can only be entered upon the payment of $20 per acre if within 15 miles of a railroad or $10 an acre if more remote from a railroad, had been taken under what is known as the "lieu-land selection laws," and that thousands of acres of valuable coal land of the country have in that way escaped into private ownership and under the control of monopolies. Now, for one I am against fraud. I am equally particular in eliminating all innocent cases, as we are trying to do now in this legislation. I do believe that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and that $10 of timely investigation which may prevent fraud is worth more than a hundred dollars spent by the Department of Justice in running down criminals and attempting to punish them under the criminal law.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope this amendment will not prevail. This appropriation carried in the bill is the same that has been carried now for a few years, since the extraordinary diligence displayed by the Interior Department in the prosecution of these cases. It has been an adequate appropriation, and even after the President's order was issued it has only been claimed that a $20,000 deficiency appropriation is necessary for the current fiscal year. It is only claimed that in the first six months of this year they ran be-It may be that if this $250,000 in this bill is appropriated that when we assemble next winter it will be found that there is a deficiency of $10,000 or $20,000. I do not believe there will be any deficiency if the judgment of Con-gress is respected as to the degree of investigation that should be conducted. But it would be, indeed, an extravagant thing with the showing made.

In the current year they had the same amount carried in this bill, and they only ran $10,000 behind in six months, and only claim a deficiency of $20,000 if we should swell this appropriation by the enormous amount of $250,000—100 per cent. It would be a waste of public money. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee upon the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to object to my friend from Wyoming, but he has discussed the proposition generally. I want to commence the reading of this bill this afternoon, if I can. I demand the regular order.

by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I understand this proposition is closed up; and I now ask, in accordance with the arrangements of yesterday evening, to turn back in the bill to page 48, under the head of "Transportation of minor coin."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, for the information of the committee, that on yesterday the section to which the gentleman from Ohio has referred, the middle section, on page 48, was passed without prejudice until to-day. And the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] now calls that up with the consent of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney], the chairman of the committee. At that time there was an amendment pending to the section, offered by the gentleman from Ohio, and that amendment will at this time, for the information of the House, be reported, without objection.

Amend by inserting after the word "transportation," in line 8, page 48, the following: "of silver coin, including fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $120,000, and"

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to be recog-

Mr. SULLIVAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask if this is proceeding by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this, that I do not care at this moment to take the floor and discuss the amendment if there are other gentlemen who desire to be heard, and I will yield the floor for that purpose. I want to be heard before the close.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I think I will take the floor for two or three minutes, in accordance with the usual practice in the last five or six years, and oppose this amendment. In doing it I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to a statement made by the Treasurer of the United States last year on this subject. I will ask the attention of the members, and I will not detain them but for a moment or

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield? Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this matter was debated last night to some extent and it has been debated in previous Congresses, and I move that the debate on the pending amendment and paragraph be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that will not be done. There were a number of gentlemen who wanted to be heard last night and who desire to be heard now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the motion.

Mr. TAWNEY. The subject was discussed for an hour last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Taw-NEY] moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments proposed by the gentleman from Ohio be closed in twenty minutes.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, how is that time to be divided? The CHAIRMAN. The time is under the control of the Chair, under the five-minute rule, but the Chair will endeavor to give both sides opportunity to be heard.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, on this question as to whether we shall make this appropriation of $125,000 or not, I am still opposed to it, as I have been for many years, for the expenditure is even more useless now than it ever has been before. Mr. Chairman, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that-

The amount in circulation June 30, 1905, was $73,584,336, and from the changes observed in the past six years it is estimated the maximum of circulation has been reached. The annual movement of these dollars under present regulations entails great expense not only for transportation, but for labor in counting, bagging, handling, and storing. By constant and repeated movement the "wear and tear" is producing a result that will ultimately require an additional expense to make good the loss by abrasion.

Now, if we had the dollars to transport in the first place, and if any advantage would come from such transportation to the people at large, I would not oppose it; but as a matter of fact, it is almost wholly a gratuity extended to the banks and express companies. Now, notice. The appropriation was made last year. During three months of 1906 it was exhausted, and the result was very striking. During the nine months when the dollars could be transported free, during which they were carried backward and forward to the banks, the amount shipped averaged about $4,000,000; but during the three months after the appropriation was exhausted the shipments fell in April to $400,000; in May, to $400,000, and in June, to $800,000. other words, these months indicated the necessary movement of these coins. Again, we have not got the dollars to put into an increased circulation. The Treasurer says the circulation has reached the maximum, and when you vote $125,000 to carry silver dollars around the country you are simply transporting the same dollars backward and forward to save the banks from the express charges which they would otherwise be obliged to pay for transfer of funds in the transaction of their own current business. If you are going to do that with the silver dollars, why do you not do it with all other kinds of

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Because they are in use all over the country

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Because of the expense of carrying it all over the country. You are simply doing this in pursuance of an old practice that was initiated years ago, when the effort was made to get silver into circulation. We have it there now, and you are only carrying it around as a substitute for other money, to the profit of the express companies, and loading all that expense on the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand you to say that the maximum had been reached, and according to that statement it was about seventy million.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That was about two years ago. Mr. KEIFER. I only wanted to say that on the 1st day of February, 1907, there were 83,173,000 silver dollars in cir-

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If you will take what is sent out and what is returned the very same year, you will find an entirely different state of affairs. I have the figures which show that last year there were sent out $41,502,000, and there came back $42,679,000 during the fiscal year of 1906. the use of talking about taking out an amount in a single month and comparing that with months two or three years ago? million more came back than went out last year, and we paid about $140,000 for the privilege of doing the work in handling it. That is the situation; and if the Congress of the United States wants to be generous in this matter and give $125,000 to accommodate a few bankers, why this is a good opportunity to do it, but the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States say it is a mistake, and it is a mistake, and you can only correct the mistake by striking out the $125,000. That is all there is to it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of the Mint, and the Treasurer of the United States all concur in recommending that no further appropriation be made for the carriage of the standard dollar.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit just one question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The expense to the Government is $2.15 per thousand for all this silver that is shipped out. The Government gets nothing out of the transaction. People come and tender to the Government other money the equivalent of this, and we, for the privilege of exchanging money at par with them, pay them $2.15 on every thousand. We do not do it upon any other kind of money except fractional currency, and there any other kind of money except fractional currency, and col-lars a year of profit upon the minor coins alone, and a large sum upon the fractional currency, and once shipped out, these forms of money do not come back. These dollars when shipped forms of money do not come back. These dollars when shipped out come back and come again, that we may time and again have the high privilege of paying $2.15 on every thousand for trading even up with people who may want to exchange money This ought to cease. We do not do it on any other kind of standard money. It has well been said that there would be a reason for our paying it on the paper money, because that would encourage the return of dirty and worn and disease-breeding paper and the substitution of clean paper, and disease-breeding paper and the substitution of clean paper, and such a measure might be in the interest of the public health. But when we refuse to do it for every other kind of money, we ought not to do it for the standard silver dollar. I live in a region where we use the silver dollar and not the dollar bill, but my people are able to pay their own expenses in this world and not try to fasten themselves on the Federal Treasury to make it pay the expenses of the transaction of their own busi-

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We are not near a subtreasury; we are 500 miles from a subtreasury—farther than many of the gentlemen who are asking the Government to pay their ex-

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I have not the time to answer many of the erroneous statements made here. The gentleman from Iowa who has just taken his seat stated in this House that the subsidiary or fractional coin sent out never comes back. On the 1st day of January, 1907, there was in circulation $124,120,938 in fractional silver coin. On the 1st day of February, one month later, about $4,000,000 had come back, and there was then outstanding only $120,408,163. Now, then, there is an illustration of this erroneous statement. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] says that we are paying one hundred and twenty thousand to one hundred and twenty-five thousand a year for carrying silver dollars. The gentleman from Minnesota stated last night the sum expended per annum was $135,000. It has never been true, Mr. Chairman, never. We have been carrying the fractional silver coin at more cost each year than we have paid for carrying the silver dollars. The cost of carrying the fractional silver has been about three-fifths of the $120,000, so that it leaves only about $50,000 for the silver dollars, and that is the way they expect to defeat this proposition.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The amount paid for the carriage of silver dollars last year, according to the report-

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, I can't hear that report a second time. Mr. HILL of Connecticut. There were $41,000,000 of silver dollars and $29,000,000 of subsidiary coin, and the average price was $2.15, making two-thirds more for the transportation of the silver dollar than for the subsidiary coin.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman said that it cost $120,000 to $125,000 for carrying the silver dollar.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That is 200 per cent nearer correct than the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. The cost of carrying the fractional coin is much larger, and under the law this year we are paying $120,000 for carrying all of the silver dollars and the subsidiary

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not yield to the gentleman, for I have not the time. Now, the gentleman has said that the banks get the benefit of this. The banks in New York City, in Philadel-phia, in Boston, in Baltimore, and in Washington are getting it, as five of the ten custom-houses or subtreasuries are on the Atlantic coast and one at San Francisco, on the Pacific coast, where they largely use the silver dollar. Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, and New Orleans each has a subtreasury where silver is stored and from which it may be shipped. The banks are not the only people that are permitted to get silver dollars under the law as it now stands and as it has long stood. I venture to say that in the district of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Smith], where he says they pay their own bills, there is not a bank that has not ordered silver dollars from Chicago at the Government expense. That is so all over the country. Mr. Roberts, the Director of the Mint, says it is necessary for the Government to carry silver free, in order that we may equalize this matter of the distribution of the silver dollars and fractional silver. If I had time I would like to read just what he says on that subject.

This appropriation is proposed following that for previous years going back to 1881 in the appropriation bills. Prior to that it was under other laws. We are now proposing to discredit the silver dollar of this country, to keep them from the people who want them, from the miners of the West, from the people everywhere who use them, and allow them to be kept in the banks near subtreasuries, which the gentleman claims they want to attack.

The question is on the amendment offered The CHAIRMAN.

by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Keifer) there were—ayes 76, noes 88.

I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman. Mr. KEIFER.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reportedayes 93, noes 94.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, after line 16, insert the following:

On page 48, after line 16, insert the following:

Transportation of fractional silver coin: For transportation of fractional silver coin by registered mail or otherwise, $50,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries free of charge fractional silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman. A parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend until the Clerk reports the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MANN. But I desire to make the parliamentary inquiry before that is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is this a proposition to amend the amendment which has just been offered, so as to cut off the right to make a point of order

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know what the gentleman's proposition

Mr. MANN. Then I reserve the point of order to the original amendment

The CHAIRMAN. And the Clerk will not report the amendment to the amendment until the point of order shall have been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered is clearly subject to the point of order, because it contains direction in reference to making a report, which is legislation. Whether the balance of it is subject to a point of order I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois inform the Chair whether or not, in his opinion, this amendment is not proposed to be added to a legislative paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I am frank to confess to the Chair that I do not know what the amendment is to be added to. I thought it was an independent proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. It is an independent proposition. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio states that it is an independent proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from Ohio is not authorized to speak for the author of that amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I speak of the facts. The gentleman from Iowa offers it as an independent section.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offered this to follow line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer it by way of amendment to the paragraph that precedes it or as an independent section?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make no further statement, if the Chair will pardon me, than that I offer it at the end of line 16. If the Chair will pardon me, I desire to state the facts. By an oversight in the bill the usual appropriation for the carrying of fractional money, which is actually a profit to the Government, was omitted. Last night the good faith of this committee was pledged to the House that if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] should be voted down, we would offer to reinstate the appropriation for the transportation of fractional silver. We have kept our promise to the House, and we offer it simply for the purpose of keeping that promise.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], one of the gentlemen in charge of the bill, in reference to something that took place last night, about which I knew nothing, I wish to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. KEIFER. I offer my amendment to strike out the word "fifty" and insert the words "one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment, in the second line, the word "fifty" id insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred;" so that it will ad "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that heretofore the appropriation for the standard silver dollar and the subsidiary coins has been carried in one item of $120,000. The Secretary of the Treasury was examined before the committee a year ago and stated that of that sum $40,000 had been allotted to the carrying of fractional silver coin, and the balance to the carrying of standard silver dollars, but that he thought that the amount for the carrying of fractional silver coin should be increased from $40,000 to $50,000. Upon his statement I offer this amendment to carry the highest estimate of the Treasury Department after the amount necessary to carry fractional silver. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] prevails, twice as much as the Treasury Department estimate is necessary for this purpose would be carried by the bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Most certainly.
Mr. SOUTHARD. I want to ask this question: If sub-Mr. SOUTHARD. sidiary or fractional silver, which is the same thing, goes out and stays out, as the gentleman said a little while ago, what is the necessity of appropriating $50,000 to circulate it around?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Because we are constantly increasing our coinage of fractional silver.

Mr. SOUTHARD. And there is a great demand for fractional silver

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And a great profit to the Government in coining and issuing it.

Mr. PERKINS. What is embraced in this "transportation of minor coin, $18,000?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That embraces coppers and nickels. This is fractional silver.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit this one question?

If there is great demand for the transmission of fractional ceins and a profit to the Government in sending it out, why do you resist increasing this item to $100,000? The more coin you send out and the greater the demand met, the more profit to the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is a great demand for all the Government can coin, but we could not send out any more if we had the $100,000, because we send out all the Government has to supply

Mr. BURLESON. You assert that $50,000 will send out all the fractional silver coined by the Government during a given

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; I assert that, and that is why—Mr. BURLESON. Do I understand you assert that this amount will send out all the fractional silver coin minted in a given year?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I state, in my judgment, it will comply with all their estimates for that purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not think so, and I believe a further examination will bring about a change of mind on the part of examination was from Iowa. the gentleman from Iowa. The Secretary thinks so, and it is a question of judgment between the gentleman and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Iowa on his attitude to his constituents. He is willing to appropriate $50,000 in order that they may not all pay their own way in the future in the matter of fractional silver coin. Now, I agree with him in this, that it is not necessary to have $50,000, if he was right in a former statement that he made, that when the fractional silver coin went out it never came back, because we have now of fractional silver coin in general circulation a total of $127.841,386. We had on the first day of February of this year $120,408,163 in circulation, and we had a month ago nearly $4,000,000 more than the last-named sum in circulation, but the fact is that the need of fractional silver coin is very great, and I am not opposed to it; but my proposition now, in view of the very close vote in this House and in view of the fact that a full House would be in favor of carrying all silver free, as the Government has hitherto done; in view of the fact that during the last session the Senate and House were in favor of this proposition, is to attempt to have at least $100,000 appropriated to carry silver dollars and fractional silver coin.

I say to the committee if my amendment should be adopted now I shall move to further amend the amendment by striking out the word "fractional," so as to leave it substantially as it was left in the last Congress, but appropriating $20,000 less for the purpose of transporting silver. I am satisfied if the House understood fully all the needs and wants of this country and could cut themselves loose from their local interests that they would be in favor of continuing the free distribution of silver dollars. It is a great mistake to say that the banks of the West are to get the benefit of the proposed legislation and that they ought to do as the banks of Connecticut and New York and Boston do. In general these eastern banks will still continue to get silver free. The law has always been that in-dividuals can get silver coins free as well as banks. Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is that my distinction or the distinction made by

Oh, you can get your money from the customhouse in New York, and you do not care anything about it, and I understand you do not use silver in your part of the East, but that great silver mining and producing country of the West, where the miner wants the silver dollar and uses it, and that great vast country in the South, where if they want the money they have no custom-house to which they can go to get it, desires it, and if they get it will have to transport it at their own expense unless we reenact the law as in the past.

More than one-half of the territory of the United States is west of St. Louis, where they have but one custom-house, and that at San Francisco.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recog-

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate is not in order. The debate has proceeded thus far by unanimous consent. The motion that I made was that all debate on the pending amendment and paragraph should be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that he asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], who introduced the proposition, whether or not this was an amendment to that paragraph or an original section, to which the gentleman from Iowa declined to respond. The Chair, after examining it, came to the conclusion that it was an independent section, and therefore the motion of the gentleman does not

Mr. TAWNEY. I move, then, that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee for five minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I only want two minutes for the purpose of making this statement. The gentleman has stated that we have a profit of a clean million dollars as the result of coining our small coin, and that it cost heretofore to haul the copper coin and the silver dollar, and so forth, $100,000 all

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is not what I stated. There is $18,000 carried in the bill, as heretofore, for the carrying of copper and nickel coin. The appropriation of $100,000 was for the standard silver dollars and the fractional silver coin.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Fractional silver coin?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, then, take the gentleman's statement as an actual fact—and, of course, I do, as I just misunderstood him-that we have a clean million dollars, Mr. Chairman, a profit that belongs to the American people, and yet we can not get a poor little $120,000 to haul to at least half of the people of this country that want the silver dollar with which to carry on their affairs. They say that the express company is the cause of their cutting out the appropriation, and yet we do not hear of the express company being hauled up before the courts in this country, neither do we hear of this great committee bringing in a proposition to have those rates looked into by the Department of Justice, nor does this great committee look into it and investigate that oppressive taxation wrought by this great monster that is coiling itself around the rights and liberties of the people. I say that this great committee has knowingly, or unwillingly, or unwisely, certainly, deprived the American people—certainly those in the South and those in the West—of that justice out of this million-dollar profit of $120,000 that they are entitled to have as freemen and as American citizens. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to. Mr. TAWNEY. Now I ask that the amendment be reported. understand that there are two propositions pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer].

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KEIFER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 85.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Keifer, and the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Tawney, will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 93, noes

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment in the nature of a new paragraph offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill on page 96, line 22.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Minor having taken the Chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5119) authorizing the extension of W and Adams streets NW.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Nelson, Mr. Knox, and Mr. Bacon as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Secate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8535. An act for the relief of certain white persons who intermarried with Cherokee citizens.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

H. J. Res. 31. Joint resolution recognizing the change of name of the Regular Army and Navy Union of the United States to the Army and Navy Union of the United States of America.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Examinations of desert lands: The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,000 made by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to examine, during the fiscal year 1906, under such regulations and at such compensation as he may prescribe, the desert lands selected by the States under the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved August 18, 1894, is hereby continued and made available for expenditure in such examinations that may be made during the fiscal year 1908: Provided, That if such examinations be made by detailed clerks or employees of the Department, they shall be entitled to actual necessary expenses of transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, and not exceeding $3 per day in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to the end of line 25, page 97, the following:
"And no sleeping-car company shall charge such Government agent or employee more than $3 for each night of twelve hours, and no railroad company shall charge such agent or employee more than 3 cents per mile as fare."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order on that, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this only applies to New Mexico and Arizona, in which Territories the charge for sleeping cars is unlimited, and the charge on some of these roads for fare is 6 cents a mile. I think that Congress ought to take that matter up and correct it. I have introduced a bill on that subject, but have not been able to get consideration of it in the committee or the House. I think 3 cents a mile for fare and $3 a night on a sleeping car is ample. It is the same rate as has been adopted in most of the States which have limited their fares, if I am not mistaken; and I hope that the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly out of order, and there is no use wasting time in discussing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitancy in believing that it is out of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman wanted to be heard on the point of order, and was waiting. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read to line 22, page 102.

DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, this next subject, United States Geological Survey, is one that is going to attract a great deal of attention on the part of Members on both sides of the House. Numerous amendments are to be offered; a very considerable time may be necessary for discussion; and I ask unanimous consent that the subject of United States Geological Survey may go over without prejudice until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the section headed "Geological Survey" go over until to-morrow without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I would like to know of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is meant to hold a session to-

Mr. DALZELL. For a little while.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Florida that the proposition is to proceed until 7 o'clock this evening and adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, if I understand-The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to understand how much of it is included in the request?

That all expenditure of money appropriated herein for school purposes in Alaska shall be under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Education and in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may from time to time be recommended by him and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order against the paragraph just read. I will state, Mr. Chairman, it is new legislation, and unless some explanation can be given to show its wisdom, I shall be inclined to insist upon the point of order. It seems to me to regulate all the in-struction in Alaska by the Commissioner of Education in Washington, which is not a proposition that impresses me with

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the committee thought it was far more appropriate for the National Commissioner of Educa-tion to regulate education in Alaska than it was for the Secretary of the Interior, who heretofore has had exclusive control and jurisdiction over this question. The present Commissioner of Education is a man well known in the educational world.

Mr. PERKINS. Who is the Commissioner?

TAWNEY. Professor Brown, formerly of some California college, a man of very high reputation, a comparatively young man, and a man who has taken hold of the work of the Bureau of Education in a way that gives the Committee on Appropriations ground to believe that it will hereafter be a live organization instead of a semidead one.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman think that this education in Alaska could more properly and profitably be regulated by somebody in Alaska?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say for the information of the gentleman from New York that this relates only to the education of those natives who are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Interior Department, Mr. PERKINS. V What do you mean by the natives?

The Indians, the Eskimo, and Aleuts. The Mr. TAWNEY. education in the cities is under the control of the local boards of The education in the villages and in the larger places in Alaska is entirely under the control of local officers,

Mr. PERKINS. Then this is for the education of the Indians and the Eskimos?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is exclusively for the natives.

Mr. SULZER. We have a commissioner of education in Alaska now-Prof. Sheldon Jackson.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman who now has control of the schools and why is it necessary to make this change?

Mr. TAWNEY. The schools are under the control of the Interior Department under this language as heretofore, but instead of the Secretary of the Interior initiating policies with reference to the natives of Alaska this confers upon the Commissioner of Education the power to initiate all matters pertaining to education, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SULZER. And it only relates to the natives?
Mr. TAWNEY. It only relates to the natives.

I will withdraw the point of order. Mr. PERKINS.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Government Hospital for the Insane: For current expenses of the Government Hospital for the Insane: For support, clothing, and treatment in the Government Hospital for the Insane of the insane from the Army and Navy, Marine Corps, Revenue-Cutter Service, inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military and naval service of the United States who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent, including purchase, maintenance, and driving of necessary horses and vehicles and of horses and vehicle for official use of the superintendent, $305,800; and not exceeding $1,500 of this sum may be expended in defraying the expense of the removal of patients to their friends; not exceeding $1,000 may be expended in the purchase of such books, periodicals, and papers as may be required for the purposes of the hospital, and not exceeding $1,500 for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the apprehension and return to the hospital of escaped patients.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amend-

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking therefrom all the language beginning with the word "persons," in line 6, page 110, down to and including the word "insane," in line 8 on page 110.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the amendment seeks to prohibit the incarceration of the criminal insane in St. Elizabeth's. I desire to say that I believe the committee that has been investigating this affair for about ten months, and which some days ago made a report, which report I have been utterly unable to see, although the newspapers a week ago published what they said was the report—I sent yesterday to the Public Printer and was informed that I could not get it for about a week-even that committee, which found everything lovely at St. Elizabeth's, judging from the news-papers, recommend in their report that a separate place be provided hereafter for the criminal insane. The evidence taken by that committee shows that at this time the criminal insane are confined in St. Elizabeth's along with the innocent insane. In fact, it is shown that one particular man, who was prosecuted for crime in this city, and whose sanity was questioned upon the trial, is not only kept there in Maple ward, which is the ward reserved among others for Army and Navy officers, incarcerated with those people who are innocent insane, but is actually receiving a salary of $20 a month for his alleged services there. I mention this as one of the small things that cropped out in this mountain of evidence that this committee has taken, and which we will not have the opportunity of dis-I say, Mr. Chairman, that this Congress ought not longer to permit the criminal insane of this country to be sent to that institution and kept there together with the innocent insane, associated with them in all of their daily life.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption for a question?

Yes. Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman has investigated this matter. Does not the statute require the incarceration of the criminal insane in St. Elizabeth's now?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not think that the general law does. If there is any provision for it I think it is on some appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the act of 1882 does.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The original act creating St. Elizabeth's created it as an institution solely for the officers and men of the Army and Navy of this country who become insane. On appropriation bills and acts of that kind different classes have crept in time after time, until now the indigent insane of the District of Columbia, the criminal insane of the country, and the insane of the Army and Navy, those three classes, are incarcerated there.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to read just a paragraph from the act of 1882?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What act is that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The act of 1882, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior, upon the application of the Attorney-General, to incarcerate the criminal insane in St. Elizabeth's.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the act provide that they shall be put in the same wards with the innocent insane?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will read the paragraph.

Upon the application of the Attorney-General, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to transfer to the hospital all persons who, having been charged with offenses against the United States, are in the actual custody of its officers, and all persons who have been or shall be convicted of any offense in any court of the United States, and imprisoned in any State prison or penitentiary of any State or Territory, and who during the term of their imprisonment have or shall become insane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LITTLEFIELD). The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous-consent that the time of the gentleman from Florida be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I had about concluded all that I care to say on the proposition. The authorities whose testimony was taken by this committee, I believe, uniformly agreed that it was not right that the criminal insane should be confined with the innocent insane. I do not believe that a single superintendent of any insane asylum who appeared before that committee and to whom the question was propounded took the position that it was right or conducive to the interests of the innocent insane that the criminal insane should be confined in the same institution.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.
Mr. OLCOTT. The gentleman knows, I presume, that the committee recommended the erection of a separate institution for the criminal insane. May I ask the gentleman from Florida what he would do with the criminal insane until such buildings

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not know what they recommended. If the gentleman says they recommended a separate building, I accept that statement. I have been utterly unable to get hold of the report.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to state that the report was filed in due course; but the report is so voluminous—the testimony occupies 2,000 pages and the digest 200 pages-and I presume it is owing to the great volume of testimony to be printed that the Public Printing Office has been unable to supply them be-I assure the gentleman from Florida that I have, as a member of the committee, been quite as anxious to obtain copies of the report as he could have been.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The testimony was printed as the hearings progressed. I have been furnished with a volume of the testimony myself, and when this report was made there is no earthly reason why that report should not have come in here in the regular way, so that Members of this House might have known exactly what this committee did recommend. it is now it can not possibly get before this Congress for action. Thus ten months of time in this investigation and thousands of dollars that have been expended on it are absolutely wasted, because the Congress will expire before any action can be taken on the recommendations of the committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will accept an amendment requiring the superintendent of this asylum to separate at the present institution the criminal insane from the innocent insane?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Florida is addressing himself to the amendment striking out the provision for incarcerating any criminal insane in this hospital. We will dispose I know nothing about conditions in the St. Elizaof that first. beth Hospital, and the gentleman, together with other Members of this House, has been engaged for ten months in making an investigation. I do not know whether they are keeping the criminal insane from the noncriminal insane or not, and if they are, I do not know anything about the conditions under which they are doing it. I therefore can not consent to anything, but I hope that whatever recommendation the majority of that committee has made with respect to the future government of that institution may be enacted into law.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am discussing the amendment which I offered, but the gentleman from Minnesota has raised the point that there is a statute absolutely requiring their incarceration there, and I am asking him, in view of that, if he is not willing to accept an amendment requiring the authorities in that institution to separate them, at least in wards, if they do not place them in some other institution. My amendment proposes to change the law, and if it is obnoxious to a point of order, the gentleman can make it.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I do not consider that any of the remarks of the gentleman from Florida deserve exactly an answer, but I do wish to make a statement that the result of the testimony adduced at the hearings before that committee showed that the criminal insane, although confined in that particular institution were separate in different buildings.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not true that one Doctor Hagner, who was arraigned in the criminal court in this District as a criminal, was sent to that institution as being insane, and at the time of your hearing he was incarcerated in a ward set aside for the officers of the Army and Navy, and that he was being paid a salary of $20 a month for alleged services?

Mr. OLCOTT. And in that particular case I would answer the gentleman that it was because the indictment against that gentleman was nol-prossed that he was sent there as insane. He was charged with crime which had been dismissed by the district attorney of the District of Columbia, and that is the only instance of which any insane criminal or criminally insane man under any circumstances is confined in any portion of any building that other people are in.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not true that the order nolprossing the indictment was entered after the plea of insanity had been entered?

Mr. OLCOTT. That I can not answer. It did not appear in the testimony

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Is it not also true that he is now on the pay roll receiving $20 a month for alleged services of some kind?

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not think that is true now. There was some testimony in regard to some pay having been given to him at a certain time, but I merely wish to assert, Mr. Chairman, that under the law as it now exists the insane criminal and the criminal insane must be put in St. Elizabeth's, that they are put in absolutely separate buildings, and neither they themselves have intercourse with other patients nor do the attendants who care for the wants of those criminals meet any of the patients who are there on account of their misfortunes and not on account of their crimes.

by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars," on line 14, page 110, the following:

"Provided, That none of the money herein appropriated shall be used in furnishing more than one horse and vehicle for the use of the super-intendent."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. What is the point of order? The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that it is subject to the point of order. The same amendment was offered by the gentleman a year ago to this paragraph. I withdraw the point of order, and we will take a vote on the proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I can not take up five minutes in discussing this proposition. The evidence shows that this superintendent had for his personal official use over there a pair of horses, a carriage, and two or three automobiles, I am not certain which. Now, if the Congress wants to continue that kind of extravagance and the gentlemen want to take the responsibility of furnishing this superintendent with these various vehicles and automobiles, carriages, horses, and every-thing of that kind when the street railroad is convenient for him also, they can take that responsibility. ment, and it is before the House.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would only like to correct the impression that would appear that there are certain vehicles and horses set apart for the use of the superintendent. The gentleman is entirely in error in regard to that. There are certain horses and conveyances provided for the use of the institu-

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly. The superintendent of the instication, unquestionably, when his business necessitates it, utilizes such conveyances as have been provided for such cases.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does not the gentleman know that the superintendent himself, under oath, before that special committee said that he did have those vehicles for his own official use?

The superintendent, I would say in regard to Mr. OLCOTT. that, testified that there were, for convenience and use, in the stable a horse, and possibly two horses, that were used by him or his assistants when they were conducting the duties which they were employed to conduct in reference to that institution.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I simply desire to say this. If the gentleman will arrange so that I can have time to take up that testimony I can very readily show him that the superintendent did testify to these facts.

by the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, before that question is taken I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLcorr to the language in this bill, shall be horses and vehicles for the use of the institution, and horses and vehicles "for the official use of the superintendent," so that the gentleman from New York is mistaken in saying that these horses and vehicles and automobiles are for the use of the superintendent and his assistants

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? understood you to say for official use, and supposed that meant in the conduct of his duties as superintendent of the hospital.

As a matter of fact, and as it appeared in the evidence, the superintendent of this hospital used a pair of horses and a carriage and an automobile for his own use, not only for his official use, but whenever he wanted to go anywhere or to do anything outside of his official duties. This where or to do anything outside of his official duties. carriage and automobile are under his control and are used by him. Now, it does seem to me there is no reason why the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane should be furnished with vehicles, which are not even furnished to the Cabinet officers of this Government, and I hope, therefore, the amendment of the gentleman from Florida will prevail, which only provides that he shall use one vehicle, and not have two or three.

by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. James)-there were, ayes 44, noes 67,

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase additional land in the District of Columbia for the use of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for expenses incident to such purchase, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $25,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the last paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. What line?
The CHAIRMAN. Beginning line 4 and ending line 8.

I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman Mr. HAY. desires to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the point of order. Mr. TAWNEY. I will state, Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is subject to the point of order. This is for the purchase of 80 acres of land adjoining the hospital farm, the purchase of which appears to be very necessary for two reasons. First, it is necessary in connection with the proper care of those who are incarcerated in that institution; and, secondly, because the committee has been informed there is an industrial institution starting up or now in operation in the vicinity, and the land of the Government, together with this land, is being encroached upon, and if it is not bought very soon the Government will, when it becomes absolutely necessary to have the land, pay a great deal higher price than that for which the land can be purchased at the present time. We appropriate $25,000 for the purchase of 80 acres.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman understands the chairman of the committee to state that the land contemplated by the purchase adjoins land already occupied by the institution? The adjoining land now owned and occupied Mr. TAWNEY.

by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. For a hospital for the insane? Mr. TAWNEY, Yes.

Mr. HAY. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the attention of the chairman of this committee to the evidence in the hearings as to the location of this land. On page 430 of the hearings the superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane, in respect to the location of the land, says:

The land is just across the road from our property, at the southeast extremity.

Well, land across the road is not land adjoining land upon which the hospital is built, and therefore, as it is not adjoining this land, it is subject, in my judgment, to the point of order.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, is the point of order still reserved, so I can speak?

Mr. HAY. And, Mr. Chairman, I want to say further I do not know who owns the road.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why, the road is a public road.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a public easement upon the land.
Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and I presume the title to the fee on both sides extends to the center.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the question, Before private ownership got this property, did it not belong to the Government of the United States?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think that the title was ever in the Government of the United States.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think all this easement was located on Government property before either of the other properties took a fee and-

Mr. HAY. If it is admitted it is a public road, then undoubtedly it is separated from the property. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether $25,000 is proper to pay for 80 acres of land, which is about $300 an acre? There is no evidence here in these hearings as to the value of the land at all. I do not know but the gentleman may know what the land is assessed at.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not, but I do know that the fact was presented to the committee that negotiations for the purchase of this land have been going on for some time, and that this was the lowest price at which the property could be obtained at this time.

The land has increased in value recently on account of the near approach of the factory or the steel plant that is now in operation or is soon to be in operation there-I do not remember now which—and the property is now available for building purposes, and the demand is liable to come and increase very rapidly in the near future, as we are informed, and that this is the best price at which we can purchase the land.

Mr. HAY. Of course, the gentleman has more knowledge than appears in the hearings that were taken before him, and the only evidence at all about this land is the evidence of the superintendent of this hospital. There is nothing said here about any negotiations for the sale of this property. There is no evidence here that this is the lowest price at which the property can be bought, and even if it is true that negotiations have been going on between somebody-I do not know whomand the owner of the property to buy it, it does not follow that because they will agree that this is the only price that they will sell it at that the Government should pay an exorbitant price for this land. And, moreover, this hospital already has a quantity of land that they do not utilize at all. They have a farm that is not utilized by them as it should be. evidence in this investigation shows an utter lack on the part of the superintendent and those under him of proper knowledge of farming and of utilizing the lands which they already have, and for the Government now to pay $25,000 for 80 acres of land which they say they want to use for farming purposes when they already have a quantity of land which they do not use at all, it seems to me is an extravagance which can not be and will not be justified by anything contained in these hear-ings or anything which, so far, has been said upon the floor. I insist upon my point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this land does not adjoin the land of the hospital, and that therefore the paragraph is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Assuming that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] correctly states the facts in relation to the location of the land—and his statement is corroborated by what has been read from the hearings—and that he also correctly states the facts in relation to the highway being an easement upon the land and the abutters upon either side own to the center thereof, subject to the easement of the way, the Chair holds that the provision is not obnoxious to the rule, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking therefrom, on page 111, from the beginning of line 4 down to and including line 8.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the Clerk kindly report the amendment again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will kindly give me their attention for a moment I will show them one of the beauties of the management of St. Elizabeth's. I will also show them why the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has been complaining that this is a two-billion-dollar Congress. Here is a letter written by the tax assessor of this District to me:

OFFICE OF THE ASSESSOR OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, February 21, 1907.

Hon. Frank Clark,

Washington, February 21, 1907.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In response to your request of this date, I have the honor to inform you that the property referred to in House Document No. 475 is at present, under the triennial assessment of 1905-1908, assessed at $80 per acre, or a probable true value of $120 per acre. I might also add that in all probability the assessment for 1908-1911, which is now in course of preparation, will place this property at an assessed value of $200 per acre, or a true value of $300 per acre. Referring to your request for a copy of an appeal from an assessment by Mrs. Hoyle, I would state that inquiry fails to show any record of protest filed within the past two years, the last being under date of September 15, 1902, a copy of which is inclosed.

Very respectfully,

E. W. W. Griffin,

E. W. W. GRIFFIN, Assessor District of Columbia.

Here is what she says. She protests against the assessment at $200 an acre, and gives her reason as follows:

My property has a frontage only of 425 feet on the Hamilton road and widens back into a rough and rugged country. There is very little level land on the farm, the larger portion being two steep hillsides with narrow valley intervening, through which runs a stream that at every rain swells so as to prevent use of much of the land on either side for any purpose. About 20 acres of the 81.67 are nothing but second-growth oak, pine, and underbrush, and the two hillsides have been for years so washed down in gulleys that the land is not fillable.

I have had the property on sale for a long time; have sold some parts fronting on the road for $175 and $200 per acre, but have never been offered over $200 per acre for any part of it. In view of these facts, I submit that an assessment of $100 per acre at most would be but fair and just in my case.

CHARITY ANN HOYLE.

Official copy.
E. W. W. Griffin,
February 21, 1907.

And yet they propose, on the ipse dixit of this superintendent, whom, if I had the time to go through this evidence, I could show is absolutely unfitted for his place, to take $300 an acre out of the Treasury to pay for these rain-swept gullies that are not fit for anything. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, 300 acres are now being reclaimed in the flats by work being done in the river by the Government, and by virtue of the riparian rights of the hospital authorities, or the Government as the owner, these 300 acres will accrue to that property; and they do not need these 81 acres. But if gentlemen propose, in the face of the protest of the owner—she has never been offered as much as $200 for it—to give $300, what is the extra $100 for? Who is going to get that? Who is the middleman? Who is the agent? Who is the salesman? I am putting these facts before this Congress in order that they may not be unadvised when, upon the mere ipse dixit of this superintendent, they appropriate $25,000 to buy 80 acres of old gullies and unfit land

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true, from the description of that land given in that letter he last read, that it would make a man crazy to work on it?

[Laughter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida

[Mr. CLARK] has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the document upon which this appropriation is based-so much of it as contains the letter of the superintendent to the Secretary of the Interior-be read from the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the following document, which he submits, be read in his time.

Mr. SIMS. Before it is read I would like to ask the gentleman a question pertaining to this land.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Is there any provision in this bill for the con-demnation of this land? Is the statement pertinent to the purchase of this land?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is.

Mr. SIMS. Is there any provision in the bill for the condemnation of the land?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The language is for the purchase of Mr. SIMS. Not for condemnation proceedings?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The language is for the purchase of the land.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows that there is a bill that has passed through the other body authorizing the construction of a road through the asylum grounds, for the benefit of a lot of manufacturers, on the theory that the asylum has already more land than is needed?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not know.

Mr. SIMS. Why are we buying this land?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I was just trying to show that, if the gentleman will permit the document to be read.

Mr. SIMS. Why do you not give an option to the Government to condemn or purchase? Why are we to be held up by a private contract made in advance of law authorizing it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would try to answer if the gentleman will allow the document to be read. The gentleman asked if the document was on the subject, and I told him it was.

Mr. SIMS. I way want to self a specific of the document.

Mr. SIMS. I may want to ask a question after the document is read.

Government Hospital, for the Insane, Washington, D. C., November 30, 1996.

Sir: A proposition has been recently made to me to sell certain lands to the Government Hospital for the Insane, which I think is of sufficient interest and importance to present to you with the view, if it meets with your approval, of saling the property of sufficient interest and importance to present to you with the view, if it meets with your approval, of saling the property of Nicholas avenue, and is separated from the land now owned by the hospital by Hamilton road. The tract consists of approximately Si acres of farm land, and can be had for $300 per acre, which, under all circumstances, I believe to be a reasonable price. The owner tried to get my consideration of this proposition something over a year ago at $500 per acre, but I would not consider it at that price. This piece of land, I believe, would be very desirable upon which to build new barns for the conduct of a dairy farm. The location, I think, is better than the one upon our own land which I had picked out provided Congress allowed the appropriation for this purpose. It is perhaps a little farther from the main portion of the hospital, but not materially, and the roads, being public roads, are well kept and practically level, so that the necessary trucking back and forth would not be a serious matter. In this connection I may say that I have asked to be included in the sundry civil biil an appropriation for new barns, same having been disallowed at the last session of Congress. At that time I unqualifiedly condemned our present barns, and since then an inspector of the Agriculture Department has upheld my view of their poorly constructed and unsanitary condition. New barns could be erected upon the property under consideration and the land used for pasture and for raising fodder, while the land now occupied by the barns could be utilized for farming purposes.

The Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that if we wait a while we will get this land cheaper. If I recollect correctly, about five years ago there was a proposition to buy this land at $1,000 an acre, and after considerable debate the House refused to enter into that bargain.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York will permit me, it was not the land we are now proposing There was an offer, or a proposition, to purchase some lands years ago at $1,000 an acre, as I am informed, but it was not for this piece of land.

Mr. PAYNE. I asked the gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I understood from him it was the same land; but whether it is or not, it is land in the same locality.

Mr. BABCOCK. I was not sure as to the description of the land, but it is either that land or the land adjoining it.

Mr. TAWNEY. That land, I will say for the information of the gentleman from Wisconsin, in the last proposition, to be purchased some years ago, was what is known as the "Randell property." This property is owned, I think, by the lady dell property." from whom the gentleman from Florida has read this letter.

Mr. PAYNE. If it was not the same land it appears it was adjoining the land for which they asked $1,000 an acre. proposition came in here for the purchase, and after a great deal of difficulty some of us succeeded in defeating the proposi-[Applause.] Now, it seems to me that a year ago they were offering this land at $500 an acre and now they are offering to sell it at $300 an acre. Now, it seems, instead of going up it is going down, and it is coming our way [applause]; so that I think the best proposition will be to hold up and wait a while and perhaps we can get it at a still better reduction in price even yet. [Applause.] I can not conceive how land can be worth $300 an acre to be only used for dairy purposes. I think it would be cheaper to buy the milk than to produce it on land that costs $300 an acre. I am enough of a farmer to know that. I think it would be well enough to strike this prop-

Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose this appropria-Mr. SIMS. tion because it involves more than the mere amount appropriated. Everybody who has any land in this District that they can not sell to a speculator or to their neighbors endeavor to sell it to the Government. I know of one gentleman who had a lot of hills, ruts, and ravines that is not fit for anything except to furnish shade who is trying to unload it on the Government for park purposes. Another party or parties who have a piece of land a little nearer heaven than any other spur in the District, with no shade on it, want to unload it on the Government for the purposes of furnishing free sunshine. So that you can go down into the cool, shady, damp, musty hollows in Rock Creek Park and get cold, and then you can go on the sun-clothed heights of Meridian Hill and get hot, and vice versa. They want a park here and another yonder and everywhere, and everybody that has any land he can not sell to anybody else endeavors to unload it on the Government for a street or an avenue or to have

As the gentleman from Kentucky has asked, I would like to know whether men could recover their senses by working on hills like those in the land to be purchased in this bill? not provide for condemnation proceedings instead of putting it on the Government in this way? No doubt some of these propositions are logrolled through. This particular one may not have been, but it is time to stop encouraging this sort of thing in the city of Washington. Every time we try to reduce the Government's share of taxes in this District of Columbia we are met by the statement that the Government owns more than half of all the real estate in this District, leaving insufficient property on which to levy taxes, thus making it necessary for the Government to pay at least half the burdens of the city and District.

And yet every man that I know anything about, who has a bad job on his hands, is trying to unload it on the Government. Now, we are asked to buy everything south of Pennsylvania avenue lying between the Avenue and the Mall; to buy power houses, theaters, meat markets, hotels, railroad offices, and all other buildings in that strip of land, because the property is offered at a bargain and is going up. Nine times out of ten it is just as the gentleman from New York said about this property; it is going down. The city is building away from it, private individuals do not want it, and immediately the Government is asked to become a purchaser. How long has it been since this House heard nothing but the beauties, glories, and necessities of a hall of records? Somebody had some land to sell. When they got it sold we heard no more about the hall of records. So it goes on all the time. Rock Creek Park must be increased, the lines must be straightened; Anacostia must have a park; Georgetown must have a park. We are asked to appropriate for parks, streets, and avenues without limit.

The superintendent says they need this land, but he does not present any very convincing reason why they need it. In my opinion, this is another attempt to unload undesirable property onto the Government. People who have good property that is advancing rapidly in price do not usually show as much anxiety to get rid of it. I have always fought shy of bargain What we purchase on bargain counters usually in the end costs heavily. I say let our generous-minded landowners here in Washington keep their bargains and pay taxes and get the benefit of the inevitable advance in values they so confidently predict when endeavoring to unload their undesirable stuff on the taxpayers of the whole country.

Let us vote down all such propositions.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Florida, to strike out the figures "25" and to insert "15" in place thereof. I think that will buy it, and the land is worth it.

Mr. SIMS. No; let us vote it out.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am almost tempted to ask my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] to make another speech. Ten thousand dollars for a five-minute speech is certainly worth his effort to the Government. [Laughter.] I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent to permit this paragraph to go out. I recollect making some inquiry about it, and the information given was to the effect that it was desirable to acquire this land at this particular time, because in the vicinity of the asylum a number of manufacturing establishments were being erected, and that, as a result, the price of land was rapidly going up. The committee did not have before it the information furnished by the gentleman from Florida, supplied to him by the assessor of the District, that the land at present is assessed for less than $100 an acre, and is upon a reasonable valuation worth $120.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.
Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think the assessed valuation of land is a fair criterion of its value, and especially that assessment in the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course assessed valuation is not admissible as evidence in a proceeding to acquire the land, but the assessor states the assessed valuation, and then he has given to the gentleman from Florida his opinion that the reasonable value of the land at present is $120 an acre. my judgment there is no immediate necessity for acquiring this land, and upon the information that has been furnished the committee it seems to me that the proper thing to do is to refuse, without an opportunity for further investigation, to appropriate anything for the land. This recommendation is based entirely upon the statements of the superintendent of the

I have no desire to indulge in any unjust criticism of the superintendent, but it is a notorious fact that the conduct of this institution has been under investigation since the last session of Congress. While a report has been made by the committee, it is not in print nor accessible to the Members of the House. With this very surprising motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Barcock], after the facts that have been called to the attention of the committee by my colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin that he believes that $15,000, instead of $25,000, would purchase the land, it seems to me that perhaps if the owners and whoever else may be interested, have another six or seven months to reflect upon the real value, perhaps it may then be possible to acquire it, if it then be deemed necessary to acquire it, for even less than $15,000.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] yesterday called attention to the fact that the utmost care was demanded upon the part of the House in making appropriations at this because of the enormous aggregate to which they are In view of that and of the light now thrown on this item, I believe that the House should unhesitatingly refuse to authorize the acquisition of the property at this time.

I attended a boarding school when I was younger at which 300 pupils lived upon a place of 110 acres, and nearly all the vegetables required were raised upon it. It seems to me that with 800 acres at the disposal of this institution the inmates of the asylum can easily be maintained upon the produce of the farm, if it be as desirable and as fertile a place as those who have been endeavoring to sell the property have pictured it in their imaginations.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to make a statement. I would gladly accede to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Barcock] if I thought there was any need for the land at all. But, Mr. Chairman, the Government is doing work in the river which will reclaim 300 acres of land that will go to the asylum by virtue of its riparian rights. In addition to that the committee which has made the investigation recommend the construction of a separate institution for the criminal insane, and that will take 500 or 600 members out of the institution.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word. The work of which the gentleman from Florida speaks is going on down near the Washington channel, and has no connection with the St. Elizabeth Hospital. Now I want to say one word in justification of the recommendation of the committee. This institution has 2,500 people to maintain. In addition to that, there are a great many of them whose personal services can be utilized to their advantage. It is for their good and for their benefit. There is now only available for agricultural purposes about 400 acres of land belonging to that institution. This land is especially desired for the purpose of erecting, when Congress sees fit to authorize the erection, new barn buildings. It was believed that the land, because of its location, could be procured at a lower price to-day than it can be one year, or five, or ten years from now. In view of these facts, while the committee did not authorize the construction of the barn buildings estimated for being put on the ground, we did feel that it would be the part of wisdom for Congress at this time to authorize the purchase of the land at the price mentioned. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and will accept it.

PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. I want to ask the gentleman if he has ever seen an acre of land within 10 miles of the city of Washington on the Maryland side of the river that he honestly believes is worth $50 an acre for farm purposes?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know anything about the value of the land. I do not know anything about farming land 10 or 5 miles from the District of Columbia; but the subcommittee who prepared the bill thought that this land was necessary in connection with the operation and maintenance of this institution, and I may say that the testimony does show that this institution has less land than any similar or like institution in any State in the Union that has as many inmates in the hospias there are in St. Elizabeth. Now, I move that all debate on the amendments be closed.

HAY. Does the gentleman know how many patients are utilized to work on this farm?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.

Mr. HAY. The evidence shows that only about twenty or thirty out of the 2,550 inmates.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Littlefield). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MACON. Has there been any debate against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there has been debate both for and against the amendment.

I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for three minutes

Mr. TAWNEY. I must object to any further debate, Mr.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish the Chair would state the parliamentary situation about these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the paragraph. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock] moves to strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen." That is a preferential amendment and must first be considered. The question now pending before the committee is the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Babcock].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by inserting $10,000, and offer that amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on my amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I moved to close debate a moment ago on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was exhausted on the pending amendment. Now the gentleman from Illinois is recognized to offer another amendment by striking out "fifteen" and insert-'ten" in lieu thereof.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know whether I have the right to

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that if this land could not be purchased for less than $1,000 an acre a year or two ago, then was reduced to $500 an acre, and now is proposed to be sold at $300 an acre, and the gentleman is sufficiently informed as to be able to state to the House that, instead of $25,000, $15,000 will buy the land, it is fair to assume that $10,000 will buy it, and it will be dear at that price. We have 800 acres of land there already. There is no reason why we should have more. [Cries of "Vote!"] Now, gentlemen should not get excited about getting ready to vote. Let us be heard on this. Others have been heard when they wanted to be. Eight hundred acres of land surround this institution. It is true that there are 2,500 patients there, but not more than twenty or thirty of these patients are ever employed in working the land.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say for the information of the gentleman that there are between four and five hundred employed.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not care what the gentleman states. The record shows that not more than 20 or 30 of these people are employed on this land, and 20 or 30 people can not work successfully 800 acres of land. There is no use to attempt to work land successfully or otherwise for farming purposes when you have to pay $300 an acre for it. There is no man in this House who does not know that farm lands at $300 an acre will not produce revenue on the investment. need for the additional 80 acres more to add to the farm, and the whole item ought to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MACON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the whole proposition, and therefore opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden]. I want to say that my main objection to the proposition is based upon the evidence presented by the letters from the owner of the property and the superintendent of the insane asylum, in which it is clearly disclosed that somebody is trying to put up a job in the sale of this land to the Government. I do not know who it is, but I do know that somebody is trying to do it, and being violently opposed to jobs of all sorts, I think the Congress ought to say by its vote that it will not have an outrageous job of this kind put up on the Government that it represents.

Mr. Chairman, the letter of the owner of the property states that she has never been offered as much as $200 per acre for the land that is proposed to be bought with this appropriation, while the superintendent of the insane asylum states, letter to the Secretary of the Interior, that it can not be bought for less than $300 per acre. Either the superintendent or the owner of the property has willfully misrepresented the facts in the case, and I prefer to believe that the superintendent is the guilty party. The two letters when put together disclose a state of facts that smack of graft, and we, the agents of the Government, can not afford to allow this ugly deal to be consummated when it only requires a majority of our votes to prevent it. I therefore urge the House to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida to strike out the paragraph appropriating $25,000, with which it is proposed to buy this gulley-washed and time-worn tract of land that the Government has no use for at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, to strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "ten."

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifteen" in lieu thereof.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, to strike out the whole paragraph.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, fuel and light, clothing, bedding, forage, medicine, medical and surgical supplies, surgical instruments, electric lights, repairs, furniture, and other absolutely necessary expenses, $10,500 In all, $27,500.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that since I was fortunate enough this morning to inflict a speech of nearly an hour on the House, and I have recently succeeded in saving to the people my increase of salary for ten years, I now propose to call off the dogs of war, and gentlemen can proceed with their business. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Clerk read as follows:

For two sets of officers' quarters, $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the last paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. What line?

Mr. MANN. It is for two sets of officers' quarters, $25,000, at Dover. It looks like a pretty expensive proposition for officers' quarters. What is the necessity for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, the paragraph is not subject to the point of order. It is a Government reservation, and it is in connection with the powder plant or powder reserve buildings that are being constructed there that this appropriation is made.

Mr. MANN. Well, so far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Chairman, my information is that there is no authority of law for the construction of officers' quarters there, as far as this item is concerned, and I think I am not mistaken about that, but I have no desire to insist upon the point of order if there is any reason for appropriating $25,000 for two sets of officers' quarters, but it is certainly above the sum usually appropriated for such purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The estimates submitted by General Crozier, of the Army-or, rather, he first estimated $19,000 for officers quarters at Rock Island, and then he asked to increase the appropriation and transfer it to Dover. The reason for the increase in the amount was the fact that the cost of constructing these quarters is a great deal more at Dover than it is at Rock Island. He says:

Rock Island. He says:

The first reason is that at the Rock Island Arsenal I intended those two quarters for officers of the junior grade, lieutenants; and I thought $9.500 apiece would build suitable quarters for them. At the Dover depot, on the contrary, one of the quarters will be for the commanding officer and one for the middle officer and this altered office building will be for the junior officer, so the quarters should be larger than what I asked at Rock Island Arsenal. The second reason is that at the Rock Island Arsenal I can build more cheaply than at any other place, because I have there a large detachment of enlisted men who can haul away earth and do that sort of thing. I also have an excellent carpenter shop, where I can do a great deal of the carpentry work cheaply myself. It does not have to be done by contract. I have as foreman of the carpenter shop a very skilful man. I would scarcely call him an architect, but a builder who makes the plans, and I do not have to employ any architect for that purpose. He does it very well.

Then, I have other shops, tin shops, and other kinds of shops, where I can do work of a kind needed, so I can build very cheaply indeed. These facilities I have not at Dover, and therefore I ask an increase of appropriation for two sets of quarters to $25,000. The commanding officer estimated $20,000 for one set of quarters for the commanding officer, before we expected the powder depot to go there, and we then expected the one officer might go there who now lives in Dover. I hardly think it necessary for him to have a $20,000 house, just at present at all events, but I do not think I could build two suitable quarters for less than $25,000. I hope to be able to do it for that. I am not asking, Mr. Chairman, for any appropriation for altering the office building into a set of quarters, or the guardhouse into an office building, as I will do that out of my general fund for maintenance of arsenals.

Mr. MANN. Twenty-five thousand dollars will build a pretty

Mr. MANN. Twenty-five thousand dollars will build a pretty good building on ground which the Government owns.
Mr. TAWNEY. That is what the committee thought, but this is the testimony of General Crozier, who, I think, is one of the most practical, most careful and economical officers in the War Department, if not in any Department.

Mr. MANN. But subject, of course, to the desire to have very fine quarters.

Mr. TAWNEY. But from the statement of the General before us we felt that the estimate which he has made was fair, considering the conditions under which the quarters would have to be constructed, and also the necessity to build some quarters at Dover, in view of the amount of property that the Government is assembling there in the way of buildings, powder, and everything of that kind.

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. Are there any quarters there now?
Mr. TAWNEY. No; except this old office building. They have an old office building there now, and some kind of a guardhouse they want to convert into office quarters.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will withdraw the point of order, although I do not believe it ought to go in.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last Mr. Chairman, about a week ago my good friend the word. Mr. Chairman, about a week ago my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] placed in the Record an article from the Washington Post of this city, the heading of which read: "The War Cloud Passes Over: Honduras and Nicaragua will Arbitrate their Differences." The article in question announced that the Governments of the United States and our sister Republic, Mexico, were exerting their good offices with the Central American States in order to induce the latter to arbitrate their differences rather than resort to the arbitrament of arms. Then the distinguished gentleman gave utterance to some beautiful thoughts upon the subject of peace and arbitration that made the blear-eyed dogs of war, metaphorically speaking, cowed and abashed, slink into some dank, dark cavern and hide their hideous heads in very shame. Ank And then methought the white-winged dove of peace, fluttering her outspread pinions and bearing in her velvet claws the red, white, and blue of our own United States and the red, white, and green of Mexico, cooed a gentle note of happiness and con-tentment that must have struck a responsive chord in the breasts of those twin apostles of peace and arbitration upon the floor of this House, my good friend from Ohio [Mr. Bur-TON] and my good friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]

Indeed, while listening to the speech of my good friend from Texas [Mr. Slayden] I came to the conclusion that the twins had grown to be triplets. But, Mr. Chairman, I, too, am an optimist. I do not desire to appear upon this floor in the rôle of an iconoclast. However, I feel that I must speak in the cause of truth, in the cause of history. Much against my will and purely in the cause of truth and history I send to the Clerk's desk two articles which have appeared in the Washington papers since this beautiful word painting of peace has been displayed to our delighted gaze. These clippings from the displayed to our delighted gaze. These clippings from the Washington Post and the Washington Evening Star of February 20 and 21, respectively, make that picture, in the language of Hon. Maverick Brander, the Member of Congress from Texas in Hoyt's satire, "A Texas Steer," fade away like "an iridescent dream." I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time the following articles.

[Washington Post, February 20, 1907.]

HONDURANS DEFEATED—NICARAGUANS REPULSE ATTACK BY GENERAL BO-NILLA'S FORCES—FIGHT OCCURS ON FRONTIER—ZELAYA IS BACKED BY ENEMIES OF SALVADOR, HONDURAS, AND GUATEMALA—CHARGED THAT NICARAGUA'S PRESIDENT SEEKS TO ESTABLISH UNION OF CENTRAL AMERICAN STATES—COMMERCE AT A STANDSTILL.

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, February 19.

The troops of General Bonilla, president of Honduras, at 3 o'clock sterday afternoon, attacked the forces of General Zelaya, president Nicaragua, which were guarding the Nicaraguan frontier. After many hours' fighting the army of Honduras was defeated.

"EMIGRADOS" WITH ZELAYA.

Passengers who reached Panama to-day from Central American ports brought the additional information regarding the outbreak of hostilities between the forces of General Zelaya, president of Nicaragua, and General Bonilla, president of Honduras, yesterday afternoon on the Nicaraguan frontier. They say that President Zelaya is backed by the enemies of Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. These agitators are known locally as "emigrados." On the other hand Honduras is supported by General Escalon, president of Salvador, and Manuel Estrada Cabrera, president of Guatemala.

AMBITION OF ZELAYA.

AMBITION OF ZELAYA.

It is declared that the ambition of Zelaya is to establish a union of the states of Central America. His plan is to replace the present presidents of these states by others favoring his project. He is trying to begin with Honduras, which is considered the weakest of these countries. Policarpo Bonilla, who was at one time president of Honduras, and who led the recent revolution in that country, is now in Costa Rica, presumably for the purpose of persuading that government to remain neutral. The Government of Costa Rica is enforcing the existing statutes to prevent the arming and organizing of Nicaraguan "emigradoes," or refugees, who are living in Costa Rica.

Business in both Honduras and Nicaragua is paralyzed. The recruiting of men is causing heavy losses to the coffee planters. Last week Honduras received a large consignment of war material.

SAN SALVADOR, REPUBLIC OF SALVADOR, February 20. A dispatch received by Señor Davila, the Honduras representative here, reports that the army from Nicaragua invaded Honduras at Portiilo del Espino and after a battle lasting two hours was compelled to retreat, leaving thirty-seven dead and numerous wounded.

The Honduran soldiers captured proclamations establishing a provisional government. The proclamations were signed by Miguel Oqueli Bustillo, Maximo Rosales, and Ignacio Castro.

Señor Davila says these men are Honduran revolutionists who are fighting with the Nicaraguan forces of President Zelaya.

First Assistant Secretary of State Alger made this afternoon the Iollowing announcement:

"A telegram has been received by President Diaz from the President of Honduras, saying that at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the 18th the forces of Nicaragua and Honduras met on the border and a fight ensued. He characterized the encounter as a small affair.

"The place where the battle occurred, the number of killed or wounded, and other details were not given. The President of Honduras declared that the Nicaraguans were defeated and compelled to retreat." Prominent Mexicans believe that the dispatch to President Diaz from President Bonilla, of Honduras, means that the good offices of Mexico and the United States to bring about peace between the two countries will not be accepted by either country and that war is certain.

NEWS IN NICARAGUA.

NEWS IN NICARAGUA

Managua, Nicaragua, February 20, 1907.

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA, February 20, 1907.

Nicaraguan troops in command of Generals Fornes and Vasquez have defeated the Honduran troops and captured several important positions. President Bonilla, of Honduras, is reported to have issued a proclamation distorting political events of recent occurrence and appealing for recognition of the boundary question.

Nicaraguans claim that the Government has from the outset demanded nothing more than satisfaction for the violation of Nicaraguan territory, the attack on property and destruction of buildings by Honduran regulars and the shooting of the Nicaraguan so diers comprising the frontier guard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to continue for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Now, Mr. Chairman, my good friend from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] also took occasion to say that we of the Pacific coast were unnecessarily alarmed about the possibility of war. I want to assure my distinguished friend that we of the West are not at all alarmed, but we all feel this, that the true way to prevent war is in time of peace prepare for war. And when we are prepared for war our opponents will be more likely to want to arbitrate. The item to the pending bill which has just been read carries an appropriation for a storehouse for a reserve supply of war material. I believe that if this country will go right ahead and continue to reserve war material for some years to come, if we will go right ahead and build war ships and submarines and modern fortifications for our coast defenses, that it will be the best remedy against any country declaring war against us. War at all times is an expensive undertaking; costs a great amount of money, and thirty or forty or fifty millions of dollars spent at the present time in properly fortifying the ports of the Pacific coast will probably save this Government a billion of dollars in ten or fifteen years from now. I am glad that the committee put this item into the bill; but I want to assure my friend from Texas that the people of the Pacific coast are lovers of peace. They do not want war any more than he does. Still, if war should come, they want to be ready—ever ready. Indeed, they are in the position of the Englishman who declared some years ago:

We don't want to fight;
But, by jingo, if we do,
We've got the ships, we've got the men,
And we've got the money, too.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if there is a last word left, I move to strike it out. It is true that a few days ago I did print in the Record an article clipped from the Washington Post, which declared that our own distinguished Secretary of State, cooperating with the President of the Republic of Mexico, had persuaded the people of Honduras and of Nicaragua that it were better to settle their difficulties by arbitration rather than by a resort to arms. That article had all the earmarks of official inspiration. It was printed as having emanated from the Department of State. It declared specifically that "there is to be peace and not war in Central America." This article, not from a sensational newspaper, says, in part:

Dispatches have been received at the State Department from President Zelaya, of Nicaragua, and from President Bonilla, of Honduras, which are of such a character that the State Department feels that peace is assured.

And so on.

Mr. Chairman, it appears to be true—and "pity 'tis 'tis true"—that this was an error, and that the Secretary of State and the President of the Republic of Mexico had not jointly been able to persuade the people of these two belligerent countries not to fight over a question which might have been settled by arbitration.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am not the first man who has been deceived by an official publication emanating from Republican sources. If I have been deceived—and it appears that I have been-I hope that the gentleman from California will charge the deception to his own official heads. And, Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that nowhere save on the Republican side of this Chamber could a representative in any legislative body be found who would be so manifestly glad at the failure of plans of arbitration.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave to extend and revise the remarks made by me upon this bill in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

That licenses may be granted for the erection of boathouses along the banks of the tidal reservoir on the Potomac River fronting Potomac Park, under regulations to be prescribed by the Chief of Engineers, and that all such licenses granted under this authority shall be revocable, without compensation, by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph, or make it, as the gentleman desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have the gentleman reserve

the point of order.

I reserve the point of order. Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois—
Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman, Is this for permission to construct boathouses on property of the Government down here the other side of the Washington Monument?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, not exactly to construct boathouses.

Mr. MANN. To erect boathouses?

Mr. TAWNEY. To erect boathouses, or construct them.

Mr. MANN. The language of the paragraph says erect.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose of this is to grant licenses to erect and maintain a boathouse or boathouses.

Mr. MANN. By private individuals?
Mr. TAWNEY. We have expended considerable money, and I think very profitably, in improving what is known as "Potomac Park." There is a body of water there in the park with an outlet running into the river that is quite large in area. There is at the present time an old boathouse there, the right to maintain which will expire in the near future, and it is proposed to demolish it, so as to remove the only eyesore left there. But there is a legitimate demand for boathouses on this stretch of water. Now, the proposition is that the Secretary of War shall have permission to grant a license to maintain a boathouse for the accommodation of people who own small boats. It is not an extensive institution at all, and the licenses are to be revocable at the pleasure of the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman knows that if a boat-house is located there under a license it will stay.

Mr. TAWNEY. It will have to be constructed under regula-tions of the War Department.

Mr. MANN. This is a park down there. Now, will not the result be that all that territory will be devoted to boathouses, so that the people who want to see the water and get to it can not do so?

Mr. TAWNEY. The number of boathouses will be restricted by the Secretary of War. There is no question but what there is a real necessity for something of this kind. This authority to authorize or to grant permission to erect and to maintain small boathouses down there ought to be lodged somewhere. If the gentleman would ever take the trouble to go down there

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman has been there a good many times, perhaps more frequently even than the distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume the gentleman has; but even the one time I was there I was impressed-and I was not in company with any gentleman that wanted to maintain or build a -I was impressed with the necessity of some one having authority to grant or refuse to grant licenses; and in the event of licenses being granted, that there should be regulations prescribing the kind of houses that should be built.

Mr. MANN. Now, it seems to me that if they are given the right to build on this road in the park, they will build on the edge of the water, and that the people could not get a clear

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it would interfere with the view or use of the park. The gentleman will recall that a basin runs up on one side of the park. Now, the park runs down to the road, and it does not interfere at all with the park. But it is a natural harbor for small craft.

Mr. MANN. I think everybody who wants a boathouse will want to build it on Government property.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not necessarily, by any means. Mr. MANN. Why it seems to me it must be so.
Mr. TAWNEY. I think there is a necessity for it, Mr. Chairman, and I trust the gentleman will not make the point of

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

I do. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Minnesota anything to say in regard to the point of order

Mr. TAWNEY. Nothing, except to say that the paragraph is subject to the point of order.

The only thing the gentleman says is about the Mr. MANN. judgment of the gentleman who makes the point of order. There may be a difference of opinion about that, but none about the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds is authorized to grant licenses, revocable by him, without compensation, to erect temporary structures upon reservation used as children's playgrounds, under such regulations as he may impose.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that. May I ask the gentleman from Minnesota what playgrounds are here referred to—public parks controlled by the Government in any way?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it proposed to let private individuals erect buildings upon those parks?

Mr. TAWNEY. The proposition was to authorize the construction of temporary structures merely for the protection of children from sun or heat in the summer, in order to make these parks more agreeable places for playgrounds.

Mr. MANN. Why should not the Government construct any buildings that are needed upon the Government property?

TAWNEY. That was the proposition, that the Government should construct them, but the committee thought it was no part of the business of the Government to construct these temporary quarters.

Mr. MANN. I have great regard for the opinion of the committee, but I never saw a temporary structure erected yet that did not remain there until it fell down or until it was removed for the purpose of erecting some other structure in the place of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. These are hardly to be called structures. Mr. OLMSTED. Merry-go-rounds.

Mr. MANN. They are not structures yet-

Mr. TAWNEY. They are to be temporary shelters.

Mr. MANN. Are these the playgrounds that are supposed to be provided for in the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they are not. There is a law that prohibits and prevents the construction of any kind of a structure in any of the parks.

I think it is a wise law.

Mr. TAWNEY. And this is for the purpose of meeting a sentiment here to utilize a part of the parks—such part as the man in charge of the public buildings and grounds of the District of Columbia may deem adequate for such use—without interfering at all with the uses of the park.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of the District bill it was ascertained that some of these reservations were used for playgrounds. It was believed that it would be an advisable thing for structures of a temporary character to be erected, which would afford shelter either from the intense heat of the sun or from sudden storms, and it was further believed that some toilet facilities would be desirable. But the hearings on this bill disclose a purpose to erect other structures, such as shower baths.

Mr. MANN. And peanut booths.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am inclined to believe that authority should not be given for that purpose. I understand that at present a part of the Monument grounds are utilized for play-ground purposes, and it would be convenient if temporary shelters, in the nature of awnings, might be erected.
Mr. TAWNEY. That is all that is contemplated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the hearings showed an intention to go further than that. Colonel Brownell says there would be shower baths erected, and the purpose eventually would be to have these reservations occupied to some extent by permanent structures. I believe it a desirable thing to have these reservations available for the use of the children of the city, but I am opposed to the erection of buildings in the nature of gymnasiums, shower baths, lecture rooms, and the like, which are all in contemplation and intended to be put there if a start is once made. I hope the gentleman will frame the provision in such a way that it will limit the structures to buildings for sheltering purposes and for toilet purposes. Beyond that do not think it should go.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, it was the purpose of the committee to frame it in such a way as to eliminate any possibility of erecting any permanent structure on that part of the public parks that may be set aside under existing law by the superintendent of public buildings and grounds for playgrounds. The gentleman is aware of the fact that under existing law the superintendent of public buildings and grounds has the power and authority to set aside certain parts of the parks for playground purposes for the children?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and I think that is desirable; but let me call the gentleman's attention to this distinction: That provision was intended to permit the children to play upon these reservations.

Yes. Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it is contemplated to erect all kinds of permanent structures. If the gentleman will look on page 480 of the hearings, he will find the following:

The CHAIRMAN (to Colonel Bromwell). They could not put up a permanent structure?

Colonel Bromwell. No, sir; they would be temporary in their character; they would be something like a shed for a shower bath.

When a shed for a shower bath is built, then it will be necessary to have dressing rooms; after that, rooms to be occupied by the children while the weather is inclement. I suggest that a provision be put in here that will restrict the superintendent and permit to be erected a few necessary conveniences for children that properly should be erected, and nothing else.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything in the provision allowing for these temporary structures that would not license or permit the sale of things for the children in these structures? What is to prevent, when a temporary structure is put up, a man in charge of that from setting up a little establishment for the sale of various things to the children and other people?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is entirely indifferent whether this goes in or out. I want to say in justification of the committee that the demands made on the committee contemplated putting this into the hands of certain well-meaning people for the purpose of erecting large structures on the parks. The committee thought that as the parks were to be used by the children that if there was any protection necessary from the sun or inclement weather there would be no harm in allowing such temporary structures to be erected under the supervision of the superintendent of buildings.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations needs no one to make any defense for it. If there is any committee that has the confidence of the House it is the committee presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Warson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

OWNERSHIP OF COASTWISE STEAMSHIP LINES BY RAILROADS.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up House resolution No. 831. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be directed to send to the House of Representatives such information and copies of such documents and papers as may be possessed by the Department showing whether the New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, or any other railroad company has purchased or owns, in whole or in part, any of the coastwise steamship or steamboat lines protected from foreign competition by the coastwise laws of the United States, and to what extent said ownership exists and to what extent the coastwise trade is in the possession of or under the control of so-called holding companies.

With the following amendments, recommended by the committee:

After the word "Labor," in line 1, insert "so far as may be compatible with the public interest."

In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "the New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, or."

In line 7 strike out the word "other."

In line 8 strike out the word "coastwise."

In lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "protected from foreign competition by the coastwise laws of "and insert "engaged in the coastwise trade in."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, before that resolution is passed, I want to call attention to the fact that when this information is received, under our rules it will be ordered printed as a matter of course, and the cost of that printing will be charged to the Department of Commerce and Labor. It just occurs to me that when the information is received, if it is voluminous, it is within the power of the Speaker to refer it to the committee without directing its printing, as a great many other documents are, and it might be well to consider the question of whether the printing was necessary, in view of the fact that the cost of printing is not charged to Congress but to the Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the Department of Commerce and Labor will have the information ready before the adjournment of Congress, but I do not think the information when it is ready will be very voluminous.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a matter within the discretion of the Speaker in any event. I am informed that the Senate has this session of Congress called for information from certain Departments here in Washington, the printing of which will cost several thousand dollars, all of which cost is charged against the Department, and of course the Department, not having any control over the matter of whether it is printed or not, should not be charged with its cost. Nevertheless, it creates a deficiency in their appropriation for printing.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question is on agreeing to the amendments to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEIRS OF JOHN SMITH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2926) for the relief of the heirs of John Smith, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to. The preamble was amended.

DEPOSITING OF UNEARNED FEES, ETC., WITH TREASURER OF UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11040) to authorize the receivers of public moneys for land districts to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States certain sums embraced in their accounts of unearned fees and unofficial moneys, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. LACEY, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. BURNETT.

REPRINT OF IMMIGRATION LAW

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the immigration law, which became a law on the 20th instant, be printed for the use of the House, one-half to go to the folding room and one-half to the docu-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to have printed for the use of the House 5,000 copies of the immigration law, one-half of the 5,000 copies to go to the folding room and one-half to the document room. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPRINT OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate Document 310, being a message from the President of the United States relating to certain phases of the public-land situation in the United States, and of House report 7643, amending laws relating to public coal lands of the

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon

A bill (H. R. 5) to provide for the refunding of certain money,

A bill (H. R. 16581) for the relief of George W. Schroyer. Mr. PENROSE. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

CŒUR D'ALENE PARK, IN IDAHO.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8316) for the establishment of a park on the northern portion of the Cœur. d'Alene Indian Reservation, in Idaho, to report it favorably with an amendment. The bill is accompanied by a favorable report from the Secretary of the Interior, and I desire the attention of my colleague to the report and the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by my colleague.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "people." to insert:

Provided, That the Cour d'Alene tribe of Indians shall be paid the appraised value of said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEBTEDNESS OF TAOS COUNTY, N. MEX.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12858) permitting the county of Taos, in the Territory of New Mexico, to refund its indebtedness at a lower rate of interest, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES MILITIA

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Dick on the 21st instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed, at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the War Department, 2,500 copies of the report of The Military Secretary of the Army relative to the militia of the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906.

REPORT ON FORESTRY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Committee on Forest Reservations made a report last April, Report No. 2537, which contains much interesting information on the subject of forest reserves. There was a reprint of 5,000 copies of the report ordered early in the session. That edition has been exhausted, and the de-mand still continues. I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of 5,000 additional copies of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. Mr. NEWLANDS. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8498) to amend sections 16, 17, and 20 of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 16, 1906, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. CULLOM. The regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims

A bill (S. 8554) for the relief of the Kentucky drafted men; and

A bill (S. 8555) for the relief of the owners of certain steamboats.

Mr. MALLORY introduced a bill (S. 8556) to authorize the Pensacola and Northeastern Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over the Escambia River between the counties of Santa Rosa and Escambia, in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, Mr. HANSBROUGH (by request) introduced a bill (S. 8557) defining the position of employees of the public school system of the District of Columbia, authorized by act No. 254, enacted at the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and authorizing payment therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WETMORE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8558) granting an increase of pension to John L.

Nason; and A bill (S. 8559) granting an increase of pension of Ephraim Thurber

Mr. MILLARD introduced a bill (S. 8560) for the relief of James E. Arnold and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KNOX introduced a bill (S. 8561) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 8562) relief of certain white persons who intermarried with Cherokee citizens; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (S. 8563) for the relief of the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 8564) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Allen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 8565) to provide for the establishment of an immigration station at Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, and the erection of a public building in said city on a site to be selected for said station; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. KNOX introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 96) providing for the delivery by the Secretary of War to the Valley Forge Park Commission for ornamentation of grounds of Valley Forge Park, Valley Forge, Pa., twenty-five 6-pounder brass cannon, with their carriages and equipments; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO THE POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment authorizing the Postmaster-General to require all railroads carrying the mails under contract to comply strictly with the terms of said contract as to time of arrival and departure of said mails, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and

BATTLE SHIP PLANS.

On motion of Mr. Hale, it was

On motion of Mr. HALE, it Was Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to return to the Navy Department, in compliance with the request of the Secretary of the Navy, the plans and specifications of the 20,000-ton battle ship sent to the Senate in conformity with the provisions contained in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, together with the communication of the Secretary of the Navy of date December 12, 1906, transmitting such plans and specifications.

HENRY STROUSE.

Mr. DICK. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. Foraker], who is unavoidably absent, I ask for the adoption of the following order.

The order was agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That there may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate all papers in connection with the bill (8. 5035, Fifty-seventh Congress) granting an increase of pension to Henry Strouse, there having been no adverse report thereon.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

On motion of Mr. Pettus, it was Ordered, That there be printed, as a single document, the following, in the following order:

"First, Senate Report No. 805, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, made February 12, 1904.

"Second. Senate bill No. 810, Fifty-eighth Congress.

"Third. Senate Report 1422, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, May 7, 1902.

"Fourth. Letters of Navy Department of May 29, 1902, and December 19, 1903, cited, but not quoted, in said Report No. 805, Fifty-eighth Congress."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 24390. An act to correct the military record of Charles H. Kellen was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LAND-OFFICE FEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11040) to authorize the receivers of public moneys for land districts to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States certain sums embraced in their accounts of unearned fees and unofficial moneys and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagrecing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Hansbrough, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. McLAURIN.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 24537) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. Scott, Mr. Hemenway, and Mr. Blackburn as conferees on the part of the Senate.

MINERVA ROBINSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 25601) to repeal the act approved January 22, 1903, granting a pension to Minerva Robinson, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act granting a pension to Minerva Robinson, as widow of James Robinson, late of Companies F and B, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Engineers, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA L. M'CORKLE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2011) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda L. McCorkle, which was to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Lucinda L. McCorkle."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LEWIS A. TOWNE.

ment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7840) granting an increase of pension to Lewis A. Towne, which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty." The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amend-

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, ask for a conference with the House on the amendment, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Taliaferro as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 24815, the agricultural appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. PROCTOR. The only remaining committee amendment is the Appalachian survey amendment on page 70, except a change in the totals.

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment changing the total on page

41, line 24, was under consideration when we adjourned. Mr. PROCTOR. There are several changes of totals to be made. First, on page 3, line 15, I move to strike out of the committee amendment the word "two" and insert "seven;" so as to read: "ninety-six thousand seven hundred and sixty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 4, line 12, amend the committee amendment by inserting "twenty" instead of "nineteen," and "two" in the place of "seven;" so as to read: "twenty thousand two hundred."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that we may now go on with the Appalachian survey amendment and let the consideration of all the changes of totals come together.

Mr. HEYBURN. I gave notice that I would ask the Senate to revert to the amendment incorporating the million-dollar appropriation, and I will do so before the committee amendments are

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks that the amendment on page 70 be considered. The amendment

The Secretary. On page 70, after line 17, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported to insert the following:

Agriculture and Forestry reported to insert the following:

Survey of and report on Appalachian and White Mountain watersheds: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to examine, survey, and ascertain the natural conditions of the watersheds at and near the sources of the various rivers having their sources in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and the White Mountains, and to report to Congress the area and natural conditions of said watersheds, the price at which the same can be purchased by the Government, and the advisability of the Government's purchasing and setting apart the same as a natural forest reserve for the purpose of conserving and regulating the water supply and flow of said streams in the interest of agriculture, water power, and navigation, $25,000, to be immediately available.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 74, at the end of the last paragraph of the bill, the total should be made $9,557,690, the Appalachian survey being included.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. It is proposed to change the total at the end of the last paragraph of the bill so as to read: "$9,557,690."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I object to the adoption of that amendment inasmuch as it will be subject to the determination of the Chair upon certain objections under the rule to amendments that have already been proposed and that are now under consideration. So the total amount should not be determined until those points of order are disposed of by the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment just reported unless the amendment is passed over by agreement.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. PROCTOR. At the bottom of page 41, line 24, after the word "Service," I move to change the total so as to read $1,900,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the amendment stated, and will then hear the Senator from Idaho. Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The Secretary. On page 41, line 24, strike out "eight hundred and ninety-nine" and insert "nine hundred" before thousand.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that that be passed over until we have determined

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the amendment as it now appears in the bill stands agreed to, and it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to before the amendment he has now proposed is in order.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the question is upon a reconsideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not upon agreeing to the amendment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection to its being reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is now open to

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it be passed over until we dispose of the million-dollar item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Idaho has asked that it be passed over

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; until we have considered the amendment on line 12, page 41, which will enter into the action of the Senate in determining the total.

Mr. PROCTOR. That amendment has been agreed to, and I had not noticed that a motion to reconsider had been entered.

Mr. HEYBURN. At the time it was voted upon, amidst confusion and as soon as I could be heard by the Chair, I gave notice, and I think the RECORD will show it, that I would move that the matter be resubmitted as though the result had not been announced by the Chair.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have no objection to a reconsideration of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho move a reconsideration?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on line 12, page 41, was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment on line 12, page 41, being before the Senate, I desire to object to it, because it is obnoxious to two provisions of Rule XVI, first, that it will increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, and, second, that it has not been estimated for by the head of any one of the Departments of the Government. I presume those objec-tions will be passed upon separately. I will submit the first objection, that the amendment would increase an appropriation already contained in the bill to the extent of $1,000,000, the appropriation contained in the bill as it came from the House being $757,000 and as it came from the Senate committee $756,800. I ask for a ruling of the Chair upon the first objection, and then I will submit the second.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to be heard for a moment on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment undoubtedly increases an appropriation, but it is exempted by the exception in the rule, as is commonly the case with appropriations increasing the amount, "unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate." Mr. HEYBURN. I do not understand that the chairman has proposed this amendment at the direction of any committee, but he has simply proposed the amendment on the floor as chairman of the committee having charge of the bill. It has not been stated that it was offered by direction of a standing committee, acting as a committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. I thought I stated that I offered it as a committee amendment. It was agreed to after consultation with the committee, and I think I so stated. Certainly I offered it as a committee amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator is correct in stating that he offered it as a committee amendment, but in matters where the controversy is direct as to whether an amendment is within the rule I think we may properly inquire as to whether the action was taken by the committee sitting as a committee. Ordinarily we do not raise that question, but the opposition to this item is intended to be pressed as far as it may be done under any rule of the Senate construed as strictly as a rule may be construed. If it has not been acted upon by the committee, I do not think that it comes within the exception stated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. If I may be heard again on the point of or-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will be heard. Mr. LODGE. I think it is perfectly clear that the Chair can not go behind the statement of the chairman of the committee. The Chair has to be guided by the rule. The chairman of the committee announced it as a committee amendment, and that takes it out of the point of order, that it is an increase of the appropriation. Appropriations are increased constantly by amendments offered by the chairman as committee amendments, which takes them out of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair believes that the question raised by the Senator from Idaho has never been raised within his experience. The Chair will not go behind the statement of the chairman of the committee in charge of the pend-ing appropriation bill. The pending amendment was offered by the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, from the floor as a committee amendment, and as a committee amendment it is in order.

The Chair holds that the amendment is within the rule, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I call for the reading of the report of the committee which authorizes this increase.

of the committee which authorizes this increase.

Mr. PROCTOR. The committee reported the full appropriation, practically, by devoting the receipts from the Forest Service to the carrying on of the Department. When that was stricken out this was agreed to by every member of the committee, I think, as a substitute. Of course we had no opportunity to have formal meetings or to make a formal report, but it was the universal voice of the committee. I am sure I have talked with every member of the committee who has sure I have talked with every member of the committee who has been present here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. I requested that the report of the committee covering this point be read—the committee's report in writing under the rules of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand it to be necessary that a committee shall be enabled to report only by a written report. The Chair is not advised of any written report upon the amendment that can be read. Is the Senator from Idaho advised that there is one?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I asked that it be read for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was one. I will not press this point further. I intend to press all these points to the extent that I may properly do so, but I do not intend to exceed the line of propriety. When I am through presenting them I will feel that I have at least made the best effort I could to prevent the incorporation of this item in the bill.

I now object to the item of $1,000,000 because the amendment is not in pursuance of any estimate of the head of any Department of the Government under Rule XVI. Mr. PROCTOR. It has been estimated for by the Secretary of Agriculture and very earnestly urged in letters which have been read here. Mr. HEYBURN. Then I ask for the estimate. Of course Rule XVI refers to the Book of Estimates; it does not refer to informal or formal letters; and I will call for the estimate under which this $1,000,000 in excess of the amount named in the bill is estimated for.

Mr. PROCTOR. Estimates are made and they are received at the opening of the session in the formal Book of Estimates. Of course they are not reprinted, but many estimates are made from the heads of Departments during the session in the progress of the consideration of an appropriation bill. This is an entirely usual custom, a correct one, and the only practical

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the estimate is only an alternative to the report of the committee to take it out of the general rule in regard to increasing an appropriation or adding a new item. The report of the committee takes it out of the rule, whether there is an estimate or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that if the amendment is sanctioned by one of the provisions of Rule XVI, although it might be obnoxious to all its other provisions, it would nevertheless be in order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment,

Mr. PATTERSON. Is the amendment that is under consideration in lines 15 and 16, page 42?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment under consideration is in line 12, on page 41. The amendment proposes to insert "$1,000,000" after the word "expenses." The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Does the Senator from Colorado rise to the amendment?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; I ask leave to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment to the amendment. At what point does the Senator desire the amendment to appear? It is in the nature of a proviso.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to have it appear immediately after the word "rent," on line 15.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 41, line 15, after the word "rent," insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall cause all lands heretofore set apart as forest reserves to be classified as near as may be into forest lands, agricultural lands, and mineral lands, and that all agricultural and mineral lands that are not also in fact forest lands shall be excluded from forest reserves, and shall be open to settlement and purchase under existing public laws; and so much of this appropriation as may be necessary shall be available for carrying out this provision.

Mr. PROCTOR. I make a point of order against the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will dispose first of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I can not allow this amendment to go without stating briefly to the Senate the objections to it. It provides for increasing the fund to be disposed of in connection with the Forestry Service to the extent of $1,000,000 under an enumeration of items for which the expenditure of $1,000,000 would be so concededly wrong as that it ought not to appeal to the Senate upon an understanding of the purpose for which the sum is to be expended.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are being carried away on a wave of sentiment and admiration for an individual policy that will bring the severest criticism upon us, and we are being carried away by that portion of our body which comes least in contact and is least familiar with this question. So far as I may, under the rules of this body, it is my purpose that if the Senate does this thing Senators and those to whom they are responsible may understand that they did it with a knowledge of the conditions and circumstances surrounding it. It is very easy to acquiesce in things, to indulge in panegyrics and in lauding terms about an officer because he is a splendid fellow, because you like him socially or personally, and on that wave of sentiment to lose sight of the fact that we are public officers ourselves and that we are responsible for the appropriation of the public funds.

I wonder if all Senators have read the enumerated purposes for which this extra sum of $1,000,000 may be expended. I am not going to indulge in a speech of any length upon this question, but I am going to endeavor to state so succinctly and in such unmistakable terms the purpose and the effect of this appropriation of $1,000,000 that there will never be any excuse on the part of anyone for not having acted without a full knowledge of the scope of it. It is sentimental legislation. All the items for which this money is to be used are enumerated on pages 39, 40, and 41 of the bill, and it will be profitable to Sentors that they should understand the effect of their vote upon this question. I am going to ask for a vote.

Mr. President, I will enumerate the items for which this money may be expended. They are contained within about a

To transport and care for fish-

How much of that $1,756,000 is necessary to meet this item-To transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein.

That is establishing a game preserve. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] yesterday, if I remember rightly, said he did not find in this bill any provision for the establishment of game preserves, and yet we are appropriating $1,756,000 for purposes, among which we find this item. Fish are transported under an existing law to individuals or to corporations, and we need no appropriation for that purpose. It is now provided for in another law, an existing law. The next item is

To employ fiscal and other agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry, in the administration of national forests-

We have provided for that already in another item, so that there is no occasion for providing for it in this very large itemthe largest in the bill. So we may dismiss that. Next comesand in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere.

That we have stricken out under the rule, acquiesced in by the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge. Following that we find:

And hereafter he may dispose of photographic prints (including bromide enlargements), lantern slides, transparencies, blueprints, and forest maps at cost and 10 per cent additional—

So we do not need to appropriate for that item, because it is covered by the sale of the articles produced-and condemned property

That is, he may dispose of-and condemned property or materials under his charge in the same manner as provided by law for other bureaus.

That does not require the expenditure of a dollar, and we have not yet found an item which does.

To collate, digest, report, illustrate, and print the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service.

How much money would that take-$1,756,000-to make the pictures and print them? because that is all there is in the item.

To purchase law books to an amount not exceeding $500. There is the first item of real expense covered by this appropriation. We appropriated that much money the last time. I do not know why they want a law library, but we gave them $500 in the last appropriation bill. To purchase law books to an amount not exceeding $500, necessary supplies, apparatus, office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washing-

That went out under the rule, on the motion of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill.

And to pay freight

This is the second item. The first item was $500, and here is the second item, for which this money may be expended:

And to pay freight, express, telegraph, and telephone charges, and for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels—

Probably that is the item for which we need a million and traveling and other necessary expenses, $1,756,800.

There is not on the face of this statement of the items for which the money may be expended a legitimate expenditure of a possible $20,000, and I challenge the attention of the Senate to this because we appropriate for that purpose, and it should not be used for any other. Yet we go on recklessly inserting an item of a million dollars as though it were a dime, with the purposes enumerated that must appeal to any Senator as being utterly inconsistent with the amount of the appropriation. If it is dreamed that that appropriation being made, becoming a law, can be used for any other purpose than the purposes named in this bill and pass the scrutiny of the next session of the Congress of the United States their dream will be a dream indeed, because we are upon notice that this grant of a million dollars is a plaything to be placed in the hands of this splendid gentleman, who challenges the admiration of the members of this august body, because he is a good fellow.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. I would not detract for a moment from the personal character or the attributes of the great Forester of the United States. I know him well, and we are friends; but I am here to deal not for or with friends, but with public questions, and I do not intend to be diverted from my purpose in dealing with public questions along the lines of conscientious judgment. Now I yield to the Senator from

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I notice on page 41 of the bill to which the Senator has been addressing himself an amendment proposed by the committee, which, taken together with the provisions of the bill, reads:

Technical books and technical journals for the officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington.

There are rumors afloat, Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say to the Senator that that was

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that; but it goes to the general question. There are rumors afloat that there are some people, who have gone West for their health, we will say, who have been appointed superintendents of these reserves, men who possess really no special qualifications so far as can be determined, and that they are using their position in rather a dictatorial, if not tyrannical, fashion in reference to these matters. For instance, they leave their own possessions outside of the reserve and undertake by a species of regulation to dominate affairs in the forest where they are. I want to ask the Senator if he has any information upon that subject which he can

It is not often that I would call attention to such rumors as these, Mr. President, but they have come to me in such form that I think I am entitled to say as much as I have and to request information upon the subject, if any Senator can give it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have information belong-Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have information belonging to the class of information suggested by the Senator from Texas, but I thought it would minimize the strength of the statement which I desired to make should I indulge at all in personal reference or in reflection upon individual character. I have therefore refrained, and shall continue to refrain, from the mention of the names of individuals. This Senate has it within its power, under its rules, to ascertain any facts along the lines suggested by the Senator from Texas that may be useful and proper for consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator misapprehends my inquiry, if he supposes I care to have the name of any person men-I wanted the general fact stated, or facts, if there are any such.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, perhaps my answer was not as closely confined to the inquiry submitted by the Senator from Texas as it might have been. I did comprehend the scope his question, but added a little in my answer to that scope. I did comprehend the scope of presume many Senators on this floor have information of the character suggested by the Senator from Texas. I have reasonable grounds for saying that many Senators have that class of information; but to enter into it, in discussing this great question now under consideration, in my judgment would divert somewhat the minds of Senators from that consideration, and I do not desire to do it, because it would be in the nature of recrimination. The question is too grave, too important to the section of the country which I in part represent on this floor, to take any chances whatever in dividing the minds of the Senate in weighing that question. It perhaps has not suggested itself to Senators from States in which these conditions do not exist with that gravity with which it appears to us who are interested directly. It may perhaps be impossible that Senators living in the prairie States, or far in the East, should understand this question from the standpoint of a new people in a new land, claiming the right of their heritage under their contract for statehood. You can not expect us to stand here silent while the machinery is being constructed at the expense of the Government of the United States for our destruction. Some Senators representing States in which forest reserves have been created disclaim that disastrous effect which we claim. We are here to represent the several States that Admit that. sent us; and if there is any Senator here who is in favor of the present existing system and the extension of the Forestry Service to his State, he can receive my vote and my support. only ask that the same credit and the same right be extended to those who represent the interests that I am in part, at least, representing upon this floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from South Carolina will pardon me for a moment.

When the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] in the Fifty-eighth Congress asked for an enlargement of the provisions of the homestead act to conform to the peculiar conditions existing in that State, and they being explained, I did not enter into a close inquiry as to whether or not the legislation was wise, but I relied upon the patriotism and the judgment of the Senator from Nebraska. Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina in a moment. When Senators from the States on the Mississippi River asked that the Government should enter upon a great enterprise for the preservation or protection of that country, I have not inquired whether or not the conditions warranted their judgment. They are here to represent those States. I only ask that those who represent States not interested in this question shall give some credit to those who represent the States that are interested in it. I am going to ask a vote on this amendment, and I am going to ask the Senate to vote it down, because there is no warrant or necessity or justice behind it to recommend it to your support. Now I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask leave, out of order, to present an amendment to the post-office appropriation bill, and ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Strictly speaking, it is not in order to present the amendment at this time. The Chair will recognize the Senator from South Carolina when the Senator from Idaho shall have concluded.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he would not be satisfied to let the bill proceed if the committee will accept an amendment as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any addition be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress.

So as to limit the creation of these reserves hereafter and additions thereto to Congressional act. Speaking for myself, I would be perfectly satisfied with that, and I think other Sena-

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon is almost in the exact language of a bill which I introduced, and which has been pending before the Committee on Public Lands since the first or second day of this session of Congress. While I am not criticising the Committee on Public Lands, which is a hard-working committee, for not having reported that bill, I regret that at an early period in this session of Congress that question might not have been before the Senate for deliberate consideration.

Mr. FULTON. Do I understand, then, that the Senator would be satisfied with the amendment I have suggested?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would be satisfied with the amendment for the purposes for which the amendment is offered, to stay the hand where it is, but, of course, with much more than one-third of the area of our State in forest reserve, we are not going to give up this fight so long as we have representatives in the Senate of the United States until that reserve is open down to where it should be-preserving to interrupt him?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment-preserving the forests, and not absorbing the area of the State. Of course, we are not going to give up the fight, and the Senate may rely upon it that at every session it will be required to listen to this plea of a great sovereign State of the nation. I have nothing to do with accepting amendments, but I will be glad to have the Senator's amendment adopted.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me, then, I will offer the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. CARTER. I sympathize with the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, and ask him if this amendment were added to that of the Senator from Oregon, if it would not meet the case he has in mind, to wit:

Nor shall the exterior boundaries of any forest reservation be here-ter maintained more than 1 mile beyond the timber line of the after maintained more forest embraced therein.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should be delighted to have the amendment accepted.

Mr. CARTER. I submit, then, Mr. President, to the Senator from Idaho that we are not contending here for a starvation policy for the forest reserves. Our contention is to have the forest reserve confined to its legitimate sphere. I do not believe that it was ever contemplated by the law that the forest reserves should be extended over vast areas of either grazing or strictly agricultural, nontimber land; and I submit to the Senator from Idaho that the question of the amount of money needed for the execution of the purposes of this forest-reserve Service within its legitimate bounds is not the question with which we are at But if these two amendments conjointly are incorporated in the bill, they will accomplish everything for which we have been contending; and I submit that it would be well to accept them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course I have not the slightest objection.
Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Let the two amendments be stated, Mr. Presi-Mr. PATTERSON. To which other amendment does the Senator refer? Mr. CARTER. Let them both be reported.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to have both amendments

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. HEYBURN. Read them together.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read to-

The Secretary. On page 42, after line 14, it is proposed to in-

Provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any addition be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress; nor shall the exterior boundaries of any forest reservation be hereafter maintained more than 1 mile beyond the timber line of the forest embraced therein.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.
Mr. PATTERSON. The first part of that amendment I am heartily in favor of, for we do not want any more forest reserves in Colorado, unless Congress especially declares for them; but I want to submit to the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Oregon that the provision as to 1 mile from the timber line would hardly do the Forest Service justice. The timber line, as a rule, is away up——

Mr. CARTER. I mean the lower line.
Mr. PATTERSON. I know. The lower rim of the timber line extends all the way from an altitude of nine to eleven or twelve thousand feet above the sea level, dependent upon the particular region of country. I can well understand that quite a great area of timber land that might not be useful for agricultural purposes might be outside of the limits that would be fixed by an area within 1 mile of the timber line. Why is it not better to adopt the amendment that I have offered, providing that the Secretary of Agriculture shall proceed to classify the lands?

Mr. FULTON. That will not interfere with the two amendments just proposed.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, yes; it will. I would not care about classifying lands that were within a mile of the timber line, because I am satisfied that there are great quantities of land not covered with timber which, on account of the elevation, would not be fit for agricultural purposes. One mile, measured as surveys are made, would leave a great quantity of land that would be without the forest reservation, and I believe

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, to meet that, permit me to suggest that the exception be made "above 6,000 feet in altitude." Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask the Senator why is not the plan I suggested better that the fixing of an arbitrary line?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no pride of opinion about it whatever Mr. HEYBURN. If I may interrupt the Senator a mo-

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly, Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator's amendment may reasonably be considered and adopted in addition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. They are not at all incon-They merely provide for a subsequent arrangement of the lands, while the amendments of the Senators from Oregon and Montana deal with the present situation.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no; my amendment deals with the present situation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but not with present action. The other amendments deal with present action. The Senator from Colorado has an amendment that deals with the future arrangement of these lands.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President, the second amendment, that of the Senator from Montana, provides that hereafter there shall be no forest reserves. That refers to existing as well as to new forest reserves

Mr. CARTER. It was so intended.

Mr. PATTERSON. Within 1 mile of the timber line.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of timber; not the timber line.
Mr. PATTERSON. "The timber line," as I read it.
Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; but the word "line" is not appropriate there, and I think the Senator will strike that out. It is the line of timber, not the timber line.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Montana meant just exactly what he said, because, as a rule, it is a very readily discerned line, and indicates the highest point of the mountains at which timber will grow, and you can trace it below the

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will permit me, I think that is not the purpose at all. The Senator from Montana and my-self conferred in regard to the amendment. Colorado has conditions that do not exist in any other State to the same extent—that is, a timber line above which no timber grows. The amendment of the Senator from Montana did not refer to that timber line at all, but where there is an open prairie, which may be a thousand feet above sea level within the line to which the tim-It is that to which we are attempting to apply this.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Montana has too clear a knowledge of the timber line out in Montana and the meaning of words not to know exactly what he meant. I am not certain that I correctly interpreted the second amendment, which was the one offered by the Senator from Montana, but let me submit this: I am inclined to believe that the Senate will adopt some fair, legitimate regulation with reference to these forest reserves, and why not provide, as my amendment provides, that the Secretary of Agriculture shall proceed to classify

Mr. HEYBURN. I am in favor of that. Mr. PATTERSON. The lands in existing forest reserves into agricultural lands, forest lands, and mineral lands?

Mr. HEYBURN. And grazing lands.
Mr. PATTERSON. And exclude from forest reserves all such lands unless they should in fact be timber lands. Then let even agricultural lands and mineral lands that are in fact timber lands-and what are timber lands have been defined time and time again by the Department-be included.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that then there is no arbitrary line. The Department would deal generously with its idea of forest reserves; but if it were required to classify, dealing generously with the forest-reserve areas, it would take from without the operation of these forest reserves millions of first-class agricultural lands that are only waiting the reaching of them by the western and rising tide of immigration and the opening up of agriculture. I do hope that that proposition will be accepted, instead of the one drawing the arbitrary line, which is aimed to be drawn somewhere in the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—
Mr. PATTERSON. I want to get together with my colleagues, and I will get together with them upon any proposition that will take from without the limits of these forest reserves agricultural land and lands that have no right to be there; but I want to do it in such a way as will not impinge upon the legitimate forest and legitimate forest land, and you are bound to do that if you fix an arbitrary line.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-Mr. PATTERSON. But if you turn the matter over to the Agricultural Department, it will give to us what we want—the agricultural lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have yielded to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson], and I do not want to yield to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] if it will take the Senator from Colorado off the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Colorado a question.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield then, certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, Senators from the West are discussing this very important matter, which, of course, we all recognize is a vital one to them, about areas within forest reserves that are agricultural, that are bare of timber. It appears to me that there can be no excuse for withholding those lands from settlement unless they are capable of being forested. If the natural conditions in that region have prevented trees from growing on those lands in the past and the present system of pasturage is continued, is there any possibility of those open spaces ever having any trees on them?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, we do not want all of the State covered with trees; we want some land open for farming and grazing.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know; but I am speaking of forest reserat all, where there is a whole lot of land capable of irrigation and farming and pasturage, but which are called "forest reserves," when they are no more forests than is this floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will answer that. There is very little land in the State of Idaho, for instance, which would not grow trees or anything else.

With water. Let my friend recognize that Mr. TILLMAN.

they must have water.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are not short of water, as are some of the States. We are not short of water in Idaho. The idea that it is an arid desert is a voluntary statement which has not any foundation. Of course we can raise trees, but we can also raise corn and potatoes and apples and wheat and oats and everything else in my State. But we do not want all the land covered with trees. We have enough trees in Idaho.

If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, Mr. TILLMAN. he misunderstood my idea. I am trying to help him to get what he seems to want.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that. Mr. TILLMAN. I may not know what he is after. But it appears to me that he is trying to get an opportunity to plow some of this land that is now in forest reserves, and he wants to farm it and grow something besides trees.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I want to grow men and women and children on it.

Mr. TILLMAN. You must have something to feed them with. They can not feed on grass.

Mr. HEYBURN. They will feed themselves if given the opportunity

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to say a word in reply to the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield

to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the fact is there is very little or no grazing land in the forests of the mountains. forests of Montana and Colorado, and I suppose of Idaho, are pine and spruce. From the very nature of the trees, when they shed their needles they form a solid, compact mass until they are rotted upon the surface of the ground.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me here?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Conditions differ. The Senator, of course, is thoroughly familiar with the conditions in Colorado and other States, but in Idaho I can look out of my office window in the city of Wallace and see thousands upon thousands of acres of forest land, now within a forest reserve, upon which the white clover grows knee deep and timothy is a native grass, and the timothy grass grows upon the forest reserves there as high as your shoulders, and it has grown there, so far as we know, for all time.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose as a matter of course in different localities conditions are different, but so far as timber reserves in our State are concerned, in which 12,000,000 acres have been set apart, or one-fifth of the entire State, the cattle or stock men would not want the timber land for grazing purposes, for the reason I have mentioned, and the very fact that they seek to use what are called "forest reserves" shows conclusively that but a small percentage of the land is in fact forest land.

Wherever there are farming lands we do not want them transformed into forest lands. Where they are not forest lands now by nature, so far as their conditions exhibit, we do not want them transformed into forest lands. We want them opened up and maintained as agricultural lands, and we do not want them dedicated for all future time to cattle and sheep and horses, but to men and women and their families.

Mr. President, if the present forests are preserved, you have more forest lands than you will find on the continent of Europe. Talk about the forests of Germany and the forests of France and the forests of Switzerland, if the forests of nature in the Western or mountain States are maintained as they are now, you have more forests within the limits of the United States than you will find on the continent of Europe, outside, possibly, of Russia. Then why do we want to hold in expectation the enforesting of large areas of agricultural land when the people of the country and the world are hungry for land?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. As I understand the existing law, agricultural lands within the limits of a forest reserve are open to vations that are now established in which there are no forests settlement. For purposes of settlement the existing law takes them out from the reservation. What does the Senator from Colorado propose—to go beyond existing law and wherever there is agricultural land within a forest reserve to abolish the

Mr. PATTERSON. No. We propose—
Mr. SPOONER. If that be so, that means the destruction of the forest reserves utterly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Not at all. We propose to exclude as far as possible agricultural lands from forest reserves, so that they shall not be incorporated within forest reserves. The sugthey shall not be incorporated within forest reserves. gestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin has been thrashed over many a time during this debate, and those of us from the timber States are in perfect accord upon the subject. Although under the law agricultural lands within forest reserves may be entered as homesteads, the people might as well be excluded from the privilege, for the settler seeking a home will not enter within the area of a forest reserve which has previously practically been leased to cattle and stock men, because in doing so he enters into a hostile atmosphere, and life may be made entirely too uncomfortable for him to undertake to build up a home under such conditions.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, if the Senator from Colorado—
Mr. PATTERSON. Just one moment, and then I will be through.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is not a question of argument. It is a question of experience. We know by experience that home seekers will not go within forest reserves, and, as explained by the Senator from Idaho, the process of taking up a homestead within a forest reserve is so burdensome and costly and troublesome that a man must be a quasi millionaire to successfully take one up. They have in all these forest reserves the forest rangers, whose chief duty seems to be to gather data for the purpose of defeating every effort to take up a homestead within a reserve, to show to the officials that the land had better remain forest land than to be used as agricultural land. seem, Mr. President, as though it was in the nature of a conspiracy to stop the settlement of the mountain States. The machinery is so ingenious and so persistently applied that it is practically driving settlement from within the limits of forest

I should like the most effective method adopted to give to the public, to the home seeker, those who are hungry for land to make homes upon, the right and privilege of taking up homes under the land laws of the country.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if the Senate will accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, I will, while I do not acquiesce, make no further objection to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. There are other amendments here, but desire to deal with them one at a time. I am in favor of all three. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from Oregon, and the Senator from Montana, but I commence first with the amendment of the Senator from Oregon because it stays the creation of forest reserves, and that is the first step to be taken. If the Senate accepts that amendment, then I will withdraw, not my opposition, but I will withdraw from pressing my opposition to this appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. SPOONER. A few words, Mr. President. Listening to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] and weighing his language, which clearly indicates his purpose—there is nothing of concealment in the Senator's words—it is a subtle purpose to destroy the forest reservations, in my opinion. I am not in the slightest surprised that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Hey-BURN] with enthusiasm and alacrity indicates his willingness to accept such an amendment. Let us look at it for a moment and only a moment. There are scattered throughout these forest reserves, as I understand, lands which may be utilized for agricultural purposes; valleys; doubtless land which is covered with timber, which if the timber were removed would be susceptible of cultivation. The law to-day provides that wherever land more valuable for agriculture than for the forests upon them are found within any of the reservations they shall be open to settlement. The Senator from Idaho shakes his head.

Mr. HEYBURN. They are not.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator may be and doubtless is better able to read and understand the statute than I am, but as I read it, with the exception of some tracts of land in California and perhaps in one or two other places about which I do not remember, that is the statutory rule.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not the rules and regulations.

Mr. SPOONER. It is the law, and no regulation which violates the law can stand, because the authority to make regula-tions does not involve the power to make regulations to destroy the law, but it is given for the purpose of enabling the carrying into operation of the law. These regulations can be changed. I am talking about the law. I can very well understand that one man will not take his family into such a region and setfle under circumstances which preclude his having neighbors, but there are tracts of land there which would accommodate a village of people.

Now, this proposition is wherever there is agricultural land in these reservations to take them out of the reservation, not as the statute takes them out, but to take out the reserva-

Mr. CARTER. What amendment is the Senator referring to? Mr. SPOONER. I am talking about the proposition of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment pending, I understand, is that of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SPOONER. As amended by the Senator—
Mr. CARTER. No; the amendments are pending separately.
Mr. SPOONER. They are coming in in installments—
Mr. CARTER. The desire is to dispose of them separately.

Mr. SPOONER. And in file, and if it is not objectionable-I will not take more than a moment—I will finish what I wish

The only way to take them out of the reservation is to take out the reservation. That is the object.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, Mr. President, if the Senator desires to engage in a controversy on that subject-

Mr. SPOONER. I am not discussing that. I am discussing-

Mr. CARTER. There is very much to be said about it, Mr. SPOONER. I am discussing the proposition of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CARTER. But, if the Senator will permit an interruption, his declaration assumes that the people in the midst of whose country these reservations have been created are antagonistic to the reservation policy. Permit me to remind the Senator that this reservation policy was originated and crystallized into law at the behest of the very persons whose motive he is now bringing into question. The Senator from South Dakota was the author of the provision in 1891, and Senators from the West—and I happened to be one of them—cooperating with one of the best Secretaries of the Interior this country has ever known, Mr. Bliss, of New York, put into shape the reservation law of 1897.

We know what the interests of that country are, and we are devoted to those interests. We stand second to none nor do we yield place to the Senator from Wisconsin in comprehension of our interests or in devotion thereto. We want these forest reservations continued, but we are unalterably opposed to a policy of unlimited extension which will ultimately break down the Where vast areas of agricultural land and grazing policy. land, utterly treeless, are embraced within reservations in con-travention of the law and the purpose of Congress, that course of action resulting in a speculative scheme of leasing, will ultimately bring the whole principle and policy into disrepute and cause it to break down.

The Senator suggests that we have a subtle purpose in trimming these reservations down to the legitimate sphere in which the law contemplated they should be placed, and that subtle purpose is to abandon the policy altogether. The assumption is wholly unwarranted, either judging by the present temper of the people or the genesis of the legislation on which the proposition is based.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senate ought to be indebted to me for evoking the very lofty and elevating considerations submitted by the Senator from Montana. He set up a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down. I have impugned no Sena-I have not dealt with the matter of motive-

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—
Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me—
Mr. CARTER. I understood the Senator to say the ultimate purpose was to destroy the reservations.

Mr. SPOONER. I spoke of the proposition made and ably supported here, so far as eloquence and argument can support it, that wherever agricultural land is found in any of these reservations it must be taken out of the reservation

Mr. CARTER. It should be taken out.

Mr. SPOONER. Which is not possible without abandoning pro tanto the reservation. The proposition of which the Senator from Montana speaks, that where there has been a belt, if you please, of agricultural land included out on the edge of a reservation, it ought to be thrown open to agriculture, is a different proposition.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. I will be through in a moment, unless the Senator wishes to interrupt me right here.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to say something about the suggestion you made about my motive and purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not charge any motive to the Senator. Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator came pretty close to it.

Although the Senator was quite open in ex-Mr. SPOONER. pressing his opposition-

Mr. PATTERSON. You do me an injustice Mr. SPOONER. I do not want to do that. You do me an injustice

Mr. PATTERSON. When you say my proposition is a subtle plan to destroy the forest reservation. That is pretty near to charging a motive

Mr. SPOONER. I did not intend to impugn any improper motive to the Senator.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not take offense at it, but I want to make a statement in that connection. Then I will give way to

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin utterly mistakes my attitude and the attitude of the people of my State upon the question of forest reserves. I want to say to him that I am heartily in favor of forest reserves, and if there were a proposition to abolish absolutely those which have been made, as far as I am able I would be in the front rank to oppose their abolition, for I want to tell you that we in the mountains realize far more keenly than you gentlemen of the plains the benefit to us of forest reserves in the way of restraining the melting snows in the spring and early summer.

We are at the source of the water supply of nearly all of our great streams, in whatever direction they flow and to whatever ocean, and as a rule our waters flow through our State with tremendous speed and velocity and power. Now and then, when the snows melt under a suddenly heated atmosphere, we have great calamities in the mountains by reason of the unusual and unrestrained volume of water. Therefore we want the forest reserves held intact. We desire to cherish them, to help to maintain them, to support them, to regulate them, and to do whatever is necessary to preserve them from fire and to extinguish fires when they occur.

Let me suggest another thought with which those who do not live in the mountains, perhaps, are not familiar, and that is that we do not have homesteads made by clearing forests. In my thirty-odd years' experience in Colorado—and I have trav-eled from one end of the State to the other, in all forms of conveyances and upon all sorts of animals-I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin I have not known of a single farm or homestead made by clearing the land of timber. The general rule is that our timber lands are not good agricultural lands, and therefore we do not desire to denude the lands of timber for the purpose of opening them up to settlement, for we have had no settlements upon such lands and no desire to make settlements on timber lands. As a rule spruce and pine timber lands do not make good agricultural land, especially in the mountain section of the country.

Then, what motive can we have? Certainly those of us who live there do not wish to see the timber of the country go into the hands of great speculators. We want so much timber as may be needed for domestic uses or even for outside commerce cut and disposed of under wise rules and regulations, and we want the Government to get the benefit of the value of every stick of timber that is cut from the public domain. That is the attitude of the Senators and Representatives from the mountain States upon the subject of forest reserves.

And why should we have a subtle or any other plan to de-stroy forest reserves when forest reserves were first championed by western Senators, and when those of us who are making this struggle upon the floor of the Senate to-day are the real friends of forest reserves and may be required to interpose our influence to preserve them, if this method of their administration is continued? It is a serious matter, Mr. President, to take from a great State two-thirds or a fourth or a fifth of its agricultural area and turn it over to live stock and to silence when men and women and children are hungry for land; and the desire for land ownership is the dominating desire of the real patriotic American citizen. We do not want this system to break down. So indignant are the people of the western portion of the State I represent about the administra-tion of forest reserves that they are to-day in a state of rebellion, and meeting after meeting has been called where resolutions have been passed resolving to interpose all obstacles to the continuation of such an administration and refusing to pay the license fees demanded of them before they can put a head of stock of any kind within a forest reserve.

The truth of it is that within forest reserves in my State there are millions upon millions of acres which are not forest lands at all, but they are agricultural and grazing lands, which are taken from the portion that is open to the people of the country for settlement, and we shut them up to meet the hobby of the gentleman who is at the head of this Bureau. Like the Senator from Idaho, whoever represents Colorado and whoever continues to represent the mountain States and the States affected by this new-fangled system of taking care of the public lands within them will fight, and they must fight all such institutions as this. If they do not they will be rejected by their constituencies, for to hold an office of this kind from the West a man must represent the sentiment of his people.

Mr. SPOONER, Mr. President, I do not yield my assent to the proposition made by the Senators from the Western States that they are the only members of this body who have to do with this question, or the imputation, if I may call it such, or criticism, which is suggested as to those of us who do not live in the far West, for having the temerity to entertain or to express views upon this subject. We are all Senators of the United States. The Senator from Idaho is a Senator from Idaho, but he is not a Senator of Idaho. He is a Senator of the United States from Idaho. I am a Senator of the United States from Idaho. I am a Senator of the United States from a State. My first duty, and the first duty of every Senator, as I understand it, is to represent the general public interest, and subordinate to the general public interest the local interest of his State. The Senator from a State in which there happens to be fifteen, twenty, twenty-five, or fifty million acres of Government land can not ask that he and his colleague shall be permitted to say, all others by courtesy following them, what disposition shall be made of that property belonging to the Government within his State.

This is property of the United States, 127,000,000 acres, in forest reserves; and it is not only the right, but it is the duty of every Senator of the United States to give the matter thought, and to determine, if it be possible to do it, upon that line of policy with reference to its disposition which will best conserve the general public interest of the United States and the interest as well as of the State in which that land happens to be located.

I do not live in a mountainous State, but I live in a State the northern portion of which was covered within my memory with magnificent forests. It is gone and within a very few years vast quantities have been wasted, affecting detrimentally the water supply and affecting in economic ways injuriously the people of that State. Taking account of my observation in a lumber region in which I live, reasoning from the past to the future, knowing or having reason to believe that, if unrestricted, what happened in Wisconsin forests will happen in Idaho, and will happen in other States having virgin forests of timber, I believe with all my heart that in the interest of those States on general principles, as well as in the interest of all the people, it is important that the forest reservation policy be not essentially crippled.

If land in large bodies has been included within forest reservations that ought to be without them, that is one thing. I would not ask nor would I vote to exclude because of a forest reservation settlers from occupying the land in any State of the West; and if lands ought to be taken out of the reservation, if the lines of the reservation should be changed in order to throw open to homestead, to settlement, to occupation, and cultivation lands in Idaho or anywhere else I would not for one moment But, Mr. President, to take valleys within a reservaoppose it. tion, not along its border, but in its heart or near it, fit for agriculture, out of the reservation would be to destroy the reserva-To my mind it is impossible to go further than the law now goes in the direction of throwing open such land within the reservation to settlement without destroying the reservation.

I am in favor of the Appalachian reservation when the facts in regard to it can be ascertained. I believe it will be a wonderful boon to the South and as well of vast advantage in many ways to some of the Northern States, and a matter of great wealth in the long run to the country at large. I am in favor of the policy. If lands are devoted under improper regulations to sheep raising or grazing, let those regulations be changed. No one can object to that change. If it be improper from a governmental standpoint to charge stock owners and owners for grazing privileges on the Government lands let that practice be abolished. That and all of these matters might very well be urged by way of amendment to the forest reservation act instead of being projected or attempted to be projected into this bill, the object of which is to maintain and support the general policy. There is not an item of either of these amendments proposed to be offered to this bill which is in order. They all propose to change the existing law and they are gen-

I hope when my friend from Idaho reads some of his observations uttered this morning he will feel, as I feel, that he allowed himself to indulge in suggestions, as to some of those who support this general proposition and have advocated a larger appropriation, far away from any foundation in justice. I would not be willing that the Senator from Idaho should consciously and deliberately impute to me or to my action upon a public measure here personal friendship for an official or social fondness for an official. Senators who deal with the public interest, under oath, can not be supposed to do that. I have met but few times the Chief Forester. What I have said of him is of his ability and knowledge of the subject as it impresses me. Except for my belief in the policy and my belief in the present administration, subject, perhaps, to some remodeling in matters complained of which can be easily disposed of, I would not support this nor any other bill or appropriation on personal ground, nor do I know any Senator here who would. That is all I want to say, Mr. President.

Mr. CLARK of Montana addressed the Senate. After having spoken for a few minutes,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act, approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily to allow the Senator from Montana to complete his remarks.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I thank the Senator.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from Montana may conclude his re-marks. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, I will ask the indulgence of the members of the Senate for a short time only to make some observations upon this question, which is one of such far-reaching results and such great importance to the western country, and, indeed, to the entire country.

In reply to what the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] has said with regard to the rights of the Government in the disposition of the public domain, we all acknowledge that, but we claim that the hundreds of thousands of men and women who have gone to the western country, braved the perils, and endured the hardships of frontier life are also entitled to some consideration. It is those people who have given to the forests of the western country any value they possess. and you will find, Mr. President, that there are no more loyal or patriotic people than those who have developed and occupied that great country of the West, and none more proud of their citizenship or mindful of its great responsibilities.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyburn] yesterday, in his very able argument upon this question, in my opinion, touched the keynote for the best solution of the question which we are now discussing when he suggested that the public lands of the United States should be ceded to the respective States in which they are located. I had the honor to introduce a bill during the present session of Congress covering that proposition, but of course it is now too late to have it fully considered. However, I am impressed with the fact that the discussions which have obtained upon this floor demonstrate conclusively the importance of such a measure.

It has been shown that what may be entirely satisfactory, we shall say, to the people of California is not applicable or satisfactory to the State of Idaho or the State of Montana, and even in these two States, lying side by side, the conditions are very different. As the Senator from Idaho said, that State has its high and imperishable glaciers, which are sources of everlasting streams of water, whereas in Montana the situation is different and the country is on a relatively lower plane, and we will have to conserve the water there in order to get the best use of it. Each State and Territory knows better than the Government the conditions existing within its borders, and is more capable than the Government to make a proper and satisfactory disposition of the public lands.

Mr. President, I wish to say that the sentiment of the people of Montana-and I want to have it understood that whatever I may submit on this question refers more particularly to the people and the conditions existing in that State—is, with the exception, perhaps, of some large landed interests that have been affected by the order of the President with regard to fencing, a unit in opposition to the proposition of leasing the public domain for grazing purposes. Every organized live-stock association in that State condemns it.

It is true the amendment covering this question went out yesterday on a point of order, and very justly so, because there is no one, I believe, who could conscientiously support it. But, Mr. President, you will find that same proposition is not dead. It will be found bobbing up next year and probably the year following, as its promoters seem determined to fasten that unjust measure upon the country. Should it come up again, it should not be tacked onto an appropriation bill during the last days of the session, but should be presented in a well-considered bill with all of the main provisions set out clearly, to be passed upon by Congress, and no measure involving the employment of an army of men and the expenditure of millions of dollars should be allowed to pass that would be operated under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by a Secretary of one of the Departments absolutely unrestricted. people of the West are tired of this long-range government of its most important interests. Its evil results were clearly observed by the special committee on Indian affairs which visited the Indian Territory in November to inquire into the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, and I regret very much that the report of that committee has not yet been published.

Mr. President, we are not opposed to forest reserves in the western country, but we are opposed to the rapid extension of the system which is now in vogue. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor], which proposes to increase the appropriation for the purposes of forest-reserve development. Senators refer to various expenditures in justification of the large appropriation which has been asked for, and among them it was stated that telephone systems would have to be established in order to properly carry out the purposes of the Chief Forester.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does tyield to the Senator from Vermont? Does the Senator from Montana

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to correct him. The amendment proposing improvement in the forest reserves was disagreed to. The pending amendment is for the ordinary running expenses and care, not for the general improvement of the forest reserves.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I understand.

Mr. PROCTOR. It does not cover telephones. Mr. CLARK of Montana. I thank the Senator for that explanation. At the same time I understand, Mr. President, it will be largely in the discretion of the Chief Forester and his corps of assistants to do with this money whatever they may see fit, and it has been contended here that the establishment of telephones is one of the things necessary to be done. President, I should like to know how it is proposed to establish and maintain a system of telephones in a forest reserve. all know that it costs considerable money-$200 or $250 per mile-to erect a proper telephone line, and we likewise know that a telephone system erected wherever there is a large amount of timber is constantly out of repair, because of falling It would require an enormous sum of money; first, to erect telephone systems that would be of any utility over such large areas of land, amounting now, I believe, to 127,000,000 acres, and their maintenance would be so great a charge as to make the expenditure enormous.

It is also proposed to construct roads through the mountains in order to carry out the plan for the administration of forest reserves. Mr. President, it would be absolutely impracticable to build a system of wagon roads throughout that vast region of country. It would cost millions of dollars to build them in the first place, and hundreds of thousands of dollars besides, annually, to maintain them.

The Government undertook a scheme of road building in the Rocky Mountains as far back as 1859, under the supervision of Lieutenant Mullen, of the United States Army, who is now a resident of this city. A plan was proposed, and the bill passed Congress, for the building of a wagon road for military purposes from the headwaters of the Missouri River, at Fort Benton, now in Montana, to Walla Walla, now in Washington. About $250,000, I believe, was expended in the building of the road. The most difficult part of construction was through the Coeur d'Alene Mountains, in the now western part of Montana and Idaho, extending a distance of perhaps something like 125 miles. After the road was completed, it was found that every storm that came blew trees across it, and they came to Congress asking for appropriations of $20,000 or $25,000 per year to maintain the road. I believe Congress granted one appropriation, and afterwards the road was abandoned. A few years later I crossed the Mullen Pass, and the road was scarcely available for parties on horseback.

The question of protection against fire in the forests has been widely discussed and reference has been made to a proper system of control. I would like to know from some of the gentlemen who claim to be familiar with conditions in the Rocky Mountains, although some of them may have only passed through in Pullman cars, how it is proposed to patrol forest reserves, say, in the State of Montana, where there have been about 17,000,000 acres withdrawn? Allowing 25,000 acres for each patrolman-and I believe that would be much more than he could properly attend to-it would take about 1,000 patrolmen in order to look after or exercise any control of the fires that might occur in that State, and then only would they be able to accomplish anything during the incipiency of the fire. that occur in forest regions arise, as a rule, from camp fires. Nobody purposely sets fire to the forest. Long before a white man set his foot in that country, as is known by the scarred mountains that were burned over, forest fires occurred. still occur and will continue to occur as long as the forests last. Something may be done in the way of preventing them, but, as I said, it would take an army of men to follow around all through those great forests, watch hunters and prospectors and camp fires, and to see that the fires were extinguished. When a fire once gets started, trees having foliage of a resinous nature are so inflammable that the flames leap from tree to tree and go on burning, and it would be impossible for anybody or any number of foresters, if there were thousands of them there, to ever stop one of those fires. They go on burning and sweeping over vast areas of country until the rains of heaven come at last and put them out. It was said yesterday that there are no longer any forest fires in the western country; that the skies of heaven were no longer obscured by smoke arising from them. Mr. President, I have lived in the West for a great many years and I am positive that last year and the year before there were forest fires raging in many places in that country, notwithstanding the heroic efforts of the forest rangers and of the employees of the great timber and lumber interests operating there. was impossible to prevent them.

Now, with regard to the question of forest reserves. All of us who have lived in that country since the early days realized that as the settlement of the country was extended in the building of towns and opening up of the great mining districts there would necessarily be large amounts of timber cut down. We likewise realized that on what we term "watersheds," where the snows fall deep in the winter, it was necessary to preserve the forest trees to prevent the snow from melting and going out in torrential floods when the warm weather and the rain should come. I say, we realized that these water sources should be protected, and the first efforts and suggestions that were made toward the introduction and passage of a bill to provide for it came from the people of the mining regions. We were all glad to have that bill passed in 1891. It has subserved a great purpose, and, under proper direction and restrictions, it will continue to subserve a great purpose.

The Forestry Department should be charged with the duty of clearing up or burning or otherwise destroying the tops of trees where they have been cut down and where the trunks have been taken away. They should also have supervision of the cutting of trees of certain sizes, and to limit the cutting to such sizes as would be useful and let those remain which are under certain dimensions and which would eventually grow up to larger trees. Many of these provisions are perfectly proper, and the Forestry Department should be charged to do the things therein provided in the interest of the Government and in the interest of all the people. They will find no one to interpose objections to them; but they will find the best and most zealous kind of cooperation of every farmer, miner, and of every citizen of that country.

But, Mr. President, they are carrying this matter too far. I would not say a word derogatory to the Chief of the Forestry Division. He is a man of learning and experience, and has been brought up as a forester. He understands the business thoroughly. He is entirely enthusiastic about the work; but I think he should be confined to certain restrictions, and not be allowed to have too much scope and means with which, in the operation of the forestry system and of this proposed grazing proposition, to build up a system of landlordism and tenantry in the Rocky Mountains, as this would be obnoxious to all of those people.

Mr. President, the question of homesteads within the forest reserves has been spoken of, and it has been contended by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Sponen] that the law—and it is a law and not a regulation—should amply protect those who enter into a forest reservation to make homesteads. My colleague [Mr. Carter], always alert and alive to the interests of the western country, and particularly to those of his own State, secured the passage of a bill at the last session allowing homesteads within forest reserves to be patented. But, Mr. President, as has been truthfully stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson], there is not, in my judgment, and certainly not to my knowledge, a single homesteader or home seeker who will go inside of a forest reserve and make a location. If he were to do so, he would be surrounded by land that is under the supervision and jurisdiction of the forest ranger, and if any of his cattle or horses should happen to stray out of his inclosure onto the adjacent public land, he at once would get into trouble with the forest ranger. He will not take that chance. Besides this, the isolation of his farm, contested use of the roads, and other objectionable features will operate against such settlements.

I am satisfied that we ought to do something in the interests of the home seeker. This is the class of people we want to encourage. These great withdrawals of the public lands of the West are shutting out the home seekers, the men who would go there to make homes and become useful citizens. The enforcement of this policy is driving thousands of settlers to Canada, where greater advantages are presented to them than they can obtain in our country under existing conditions. Now, it is proposed to repeal the timber and stone act, when the dominion of the forester will be complete, and the poor farmer will have no chance to find a home.

There was exhibited yesterday by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe] a map showing the withdrawals of forest reserves by the President, and if it did not escape the attention of the Senators, they have seen that a large part of the western portion of the State in which I live was marked in green. I desire to say, Mr. President, that there are large areas of land withdrawn there which is not timber land at all. It would be impossible to make a reservation of several hundred thousand or a million or more acres of land in one district without including a large amount of land that is agricultural, and in many instances the timber lands, so called, are very sparsely timbered, with here and there a tree that might well serve as an ornament to the farm of the homesteader or as a shade tree in summer time if he would go in there and take a farm. I said, the withdrawals of these great areas of land include large sections in the small valleys and plateaus amongst the mountains of purely agricultural land. With the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] that these lands should be classified, I entirely agree, save that I would except the mineral lands from such classification. the privilege of going anywhere on these reserves to prospect for minerals, but if he should find them, he will have to submit to a great amount of red tape in order to get a title thereto.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate with a long discussion of these propositions, but I want simply to present in behalf of the people of the State in which I live and which I in part represent a protest against the enact-ment of legislation that would authorize the leasing out of the public lands which have been free to the settlers of the country from the time of the first settlement at Jamestown and since the landing of the pilgrims in Massachusetts. All through the New England, Middle, and Southern States they have enjoyed the privilege of feeding their animals upon the public lands and of cutting down such timber as they needed in the development of their farms and the building up of their towns, and when the tide of emigration flowed out beyond the Allegheny Mountains into western Pennsylvania, into Ohio and over into Indiana and Illinois, and across the Mississippi River into Iowa and Missouri, and out over the plains to the Rocky Mountains, whither the tide was led after the discovery of gold, the pioneer and the settler have never been denied this privilege. In my opinion, it a proper inducement and encouragement to the settler to allow him the privilege, and why at this late day should we come in and deny it to those living in the far West, where more than anywhere else it is appreciated and enjoyed and is essential for the opening up and building up of the country

Mr. President, in the State of Montana the day of the cattle baron is fast passing away. Owing to the inclemency of the winters, there are very few cattlemen or sheepmen who will allow their stock to take chances for subsistence upon the range. It has resulted in large losses to the owners of herds, and now necessarily people largely engaged in that business are obliged to cultivate farms and produce the necessary feed for their stock, and we have now reached the period where we shall get the small farmer, who is a more valuable factor to the country than the man of large means who owns immense flocks or bands of cattle. It has come to this: That the people and not the cattle barons are settling up the country and establishing homes on small farms, and it is essential to them that they have the privilege of the land adjacent to their holdings upon which to graze their stock

If the system of leasing or the permit system, either one of which is obnoxious to our people, is to prevail in that country, you would not get a homesteader to go on a piece of agricultural land inside of a forest reservation or a large leased tract to take up and improve a home. The reason of it is, as I said before, that he is surrounded by a large area of land with-drawn as a reserve or leased to some one perhaps with large flocks or herds of sheep or cattle. He would be obliged to make an inclosure of the part that would be allotted to him, and whenever any of his animals went outside they would mingle with those of the larger owner, whose premises surrounded him, and perhaps be lost entirely, or at least until rounding-up time, when, as a rule, cattle belonging to different people are separated at the destination of shipment to market, where they are identified by their respective brands and sold without the knowledge of the owner and the proceeds probably sent to him. The whole system is vicious in its character and will be absolutely unsatisfactory.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] in a very eloquent speech deplored the fact that the forest lands of Michigan-and I suppose those of his own State likewise, although I do not think he mentioned them-have been largely

We all deplore the denudation of the forest lands. In Montana we do not like to see the forest disappearing, although there they have simply cut a little ways into the edges of them. am not one of those alarmists who believe what has been said about the total annihilation of the forests of the country and the total exhaustion of the coal deposits in the country within a short period of time. We deplore the destruction of the forests, but we consider that we get more than value received in what we take from them. Is it to be held that a forest is something sacred, never to be disturbed? I know that it is a beautiful thing to look out upon a great forest. There is something inspiring about it. As the poet said, "There is pleasure in the pathless wood." It awakens our highest sense of ideality when we look upon a great and noble forest. It is said that the groves were God's first temples, but this, Mr. President, was away in the misty ages of the past, when the Druids met in the forests to render their homage to their gods.

That was a period in the history of the human family when the people were nomads and did not cultivate the soil to obtain a livelihood. When civilization sprang up and spread out over the world men began to cut down the forests, to utilize them in providing shelter for themselves, in building homes and cities, in building ships, and for the general uses of an industrial people. So it is in Wisconsin and Michigan and elsewhere. The forests are gone, but they have instead magnificent cities all over those The timber was taken and utilized as fuel, in the construction of railways and construction of vessels that ply on every lake and stream, in the building up of those great cities, and in subserving the requirements and needs of a pro-gressive and civilized people. They have the land left, and, as has been said here, land is sometimes more desirable and valuable than timber. They have the land left, and by a proper system of reforesting, if they do not wish to establish agriculture, they can allow the trees to grow, as they are doing in many instances, and in twenty-five or thirty years the forests will be restored.

All the loss that is occurring throughout the United States—what is called the "destruction of timber," which, I say, is rendered necessary for the wants of civilization and its various necessary industries—is more than compensated by the growth The greatest destruction comes from the extensive of timber. fires that have been referred to, and if, as has been con-tended by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge], the For-estry Bureau has been so successful as to quench all the fires in the western country, then, I say, we can not be too liberal or magnanimous in our appropriation. We could afford to give $100,000,000 a year, if they could accomplish so much, if it were necessary to do so, but that contention is purely imaginary.

Mr. President, forests have been cut out only as demanded for beneficial use in the interests of industrial progress. We are building for the future as well as for the present. ing the great structure of empire on this Western Hemisphere we are obliged to avail ourselves of all the resources at our command. The requirements of this great utilitarian age demand it. Those who succeed us can well take care of themselves. As a nation we have advanced further than any other nation in the world, and we are going to keep the lead.

Mr. President, in the light of the development that has taken place in the last quarter of a century in the way of control and application of electricity, I believe that although the forests may disappear and the coal deposits may become exhausted during the coming century, the genius of man will provide methods for developing economically both heat, light, and power through the medium of electricity that will supply all the needs and requirements of the coming generations.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, unless the opponents of the pending amendment are ready for an immediate vote, I ask that the bill go over until Monday. I understand that they are not ready.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Chair will listen to me for a moment, I wish to say that, in the interest of harmonizing whatever differences may have been developed between the Senators from the forest-reserve regions, I have decided to withdraw the amendment I have offered, and will give my very hearty support to the amendments proposed by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Montana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado is withdrawn.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that within a very few moments all the matters in contention can be disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveringe], who is not now in his seat, has an amendment to offer, and desires to make certain remarks upon it. That is my understanding

Mr. HEYBURN. That is an amendment to another part of the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. It will be impossible to complete the bill to-day. I would not feel at liberty, in the absence of certain Senators with whom I should like to consult, to come to any understanding about further amendments. If a vote could be taken on this amendment as it now stands, I should be very glad to have it taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be laid aside.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do.
Mr. TILLMAN. There has been so much done in the way of elimination and addition to this bill that those of us who like to know what we are doing would like to have a reprint, so as to see the bill as it now stands-I mean, in the condition in which it now is-with the amendments that have gone out on points of order and otherwise, and those that have been put in, printed, so as to see what we have got before us.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that is a good suggestion. The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be printed, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HEYBURN. Together with the amendments that have been offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Together with the amendments that have been offered.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PATTERSON. Just for an announcement.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to announce that on Wednesday next, immediately after the routine morning business, I will address the Senate on the bill that I introduced, and that is now on the table, providing for the condemnation, purchase, and operation of the railways of the country by the Government.

PROPOSED CURRENCY LEGISLATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act, approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, when this bill was up the other day, I presented an amendment in the nature of a substitute for section 3, which amends section 5153 of the Revised Statutes. This section relates to the deposit of Government money in national banks. It is a section that authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to designate depositories of Government funds, provides for the deposit of Government funds, and provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall require security in the shape of Government bonds and otherwise. The amendment which the committee have reported to the bill effects only one change. Under existing laws receipts of internal revenue can be deposited directly in national banks that are Government depositories, while receipts from customs can only be deposited in the Treasury. The object of the amendment, which is included in the committee bill, is to put customs receipts on a par with receipts from internal revenue, so that both can be deposited directly in national banks.

Under the law as it exists the Secretary of the Treasury is directed, in case he designates any association and appoints it as a depository of national funds, to require security by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise. Prior to the present Secretary of the Treasury no Secretary of the Treasury ever received anything else as security for these deposits than Government bonds. The present Secretary of the Treasury has gone outside of the language of the law, in my opinion, and has gone outside of the precedents of all of his predecessors in office and has taken other securities. I stated in my remarks the The Senator other day that he had even taken railroad bonds. from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] disputed me. I have right here a letter from one of the leading bankers of St. Paul, I have right wherein he states, among other things:

For instance, I recently got some of the deposits from the Treasurer and I put up $150,000 Northern Pacific prior lien 4's (nothing could be safer or better), and $50,000 Union Pacific first mortgage 4's, with which he was very much pleased.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was not aware at the time that the Secretary of the Treasury was receiving railroad bonds. I find that I was mistaken and that he has been receiving them.

Mr. NELSON. He has been receiving what we call first-class railroad bonds. He has received all these new style securities, railroad bonds and State bonds and others, evidently under the words "and otherwise" following the statement in the law that he shall receive security by the deposit of United States To my mind this is a great stretch of the law, and I think, to say the least, technically unwarranted.

I have offered a substitute for the committee amendment to section 5153. My substitute in the first place practically legalizes what the Secretary of the Treasury has done. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall accept security by the deposit in the Treasury of the United States of United States bonds, and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the bonds of any State or municipality of the Union or such bends as are accepted by the savings banks of the States of Massachusetts and New York. Those bonds are of the class which I understand the Secretary of the Treasury has been re-

The next most important provision of my amendment requires the national banks which receive these immense deposits to pay a small amount of interest to the Government—not less than 2 per cent upon the amount of Government moneys de-posited—on daily balance. In a good many of the States, especially in the Western States, there are provisions by which the State money is deposited in national banks upon proper security, and the State gets interest on it.

Take my own State. At certain seasons of the year, immediately after the collection of taxes, there is a cumulation of money in the treasury, sometimes as much as from three to five million dollars, which is taken out of circulation. That money, under the laws of the State of Minnesota, is distributed, under the management of a board, in the different banks of the State, which give proper security, and are required to pay a certain amount of interest. I believe the minimum amount of interest now is 2 per cent. Some years ago when I was governor, I remember, we got 3 per cent on the State deposits.

Now, I hold and believe that the great national banks which receive these millions and millions of deposits ought to pay some interest on them. We have the spectacle year after year of what I would call "financial flurries" in New York. The stock speculations, and for the time being money becomes scarce, scarce for their purposes of speculation, and they immediately raise a hue and cry about the scarcity of currency, about reforming the currency laws. They rush to Washington and get millions of our money from the Treasury sent up to the big banks in New York, which loan it out to the stock speculators on stock collateral and derive a great revenue. It is always when these financial flurries take place that interest goes up, and on those occasions the banks reap the biggest harvest, if they can get these extra millions of money to loan out. There are times when they get not only 6 or 7 per cent per annum, but all the way from 1 to 2 and sometimes even as high as 3 per cent a month.

I have heard it claimed and contended that by making the national banks pay interest we would change the character of the contract. I can not agree to that proposition. Government moneys are deposited in national banks, as a matter of fact they are not special deposits. It will not do to say they are deposits with fiscal agents of the Government, because if they were deposited with them as fiscal agents of the Government, it would be the duty of the banks to retain the money intact in their vaults. But when the banks get this money they mix it with their own funds and loan it to the public, and when the Treasurer of the United States draws upon that money he does not get the same money that he deposited. He gets other money in lieu of it. If you take the narrow construction of the law which those who are opposed to the payment of interest take-that the banks under existing laws are special depositories, special fiscal agents of the Government, and that it would change the contract to make them pay interest—it is a question to my mind, if that is a correct view of it, what right the banks have to loan the Government money to the public. If these deposits of the Government in the banks are special deposits, deposits sui generis, deposits of their own kind, what right have the banks to loan the public money, the money of the people of the United States, to the people and recoup interest on it?

To my mind that view of the case presents exactly the same situation that they had in the State of Wisconsin some years Before they had any law there relative to the deposit of State funds it was the custom of the State treasurers, of their own accord, without any law, to deposit the State money in various banks, and they received a great deal of interest. The treasurers in those days pocketed part of the interest, used it themselves, and a part of it they distributed as campaign funds. Afterwards the people of Wisconsin awoke to the idea that the interest belonged not to the treasurer, but to the State of Wisconsin, and suits were brought in that State and carried to the Supreme Court, if I remember aright, and it was held that all that interest which had thus been received by the treasurers belonged to the State and the State was entitled to recover.

Those State treasurers were exactly in the condition that our national banks are, according to the theory presented by some members of the Finance Committee. Their theory is that these are special deposits, deposits of a special character. The deposits with the treasurer of the State of Wisconsin were special deposits, left with him for safe-keeping, with no express authority in the law to loan the money out to banks anywhere or to deposit it in the banks; and if the State of Wisconsin was entitled to receive interest, why, under the logic of those cases, would not the Federal Government be entitled to receive inter-

I am putting this argument on the theory advanced by some that it will not do to require the banks to pay interest because it would change the character of the contract; but to my mind that contention is entirely fallacious. But I have simply aimed so far to carry it out to its legitimate conclusion. If that theory is correct, then these deposits are in the nature of special deposits-deposits of their own peculiar kind-which the banks have no right to loan out to be speculated upon. If they are not of that kind, then they are simply general deposits, which enter into the great volume of the money of the banks, and they are in exactly the same category as are other deposits.

We all know that banks throughout the country have two kinds of deposits. The banks have deposits that are subject to withdrawal at any time, on which in many instances they pay a small rate of interest on the daily balances, and then they have what are called "time deposits." But after all they are nothing more than deposits, and whether you consider them in one light or another it does not change their character.

In my amendment I attempt to provide by law for taking as security the class of securities that the Secretary of the Treasury has been in the habit of taking during this Administration. Then, in order to give the Government additional security, I provide in the latter portion of the amendment that in addition to this security the Government shall have a first and preferred lien on the general assets of the bank, thus giving a double security.

If you will look at the daily statements issued by the Treasury Department you will find, as I have found this winter, that there is a fluctuating balance of from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000—I think at the present moment it is $151,000,000which is deposited in the national banks. It is the people's money. I have no objection to the money being deposited in those banks, but the banks ought to pay a limited amount of interest. The better class of banks do not object to paying interest.

The argument has been advanced as one reason why Congress should not compel the banks to pay interest that the banks have to buy Government bonds which draw interest at only 2 per cent, and they have to buy other bonds which net them only 3 or 4 per cent, so that it nets the banks no profit, but as a matter of fact most of these large banks have a large portion of their assets permanently invested in stocks and bonds of various kinds. They keep them as a permanent investment; and while they are in that condition, while they bring in a small or merely nominal rate of interest, from 2 to 4 per cent as the maximum, yet they are idle for any other purpose. If the banks can take those bonds, which are in their coffers in the shape of a permanent investment, and deposit them as security and get a large volume of money from the Treasury of the United States, which they can loan out at never less than 6 per cent, and many times more—if they can get the opportunity to engage in that speculation and make that profit, why, in the name of equity and justice, should they not return a part of that interest to the Government of the United States?

If the banks were simply required to keep this money in their vaults and were not permitted to loan it out, or if they would loan the Government money to the people without interest, I would not say anything. But where they take this volume of Government money by the millions and loan it out, and loan it out on stock collaterals at an immense profit, why, in the name of justice and fairness, should we not compel them to pay a portion of the gains to the Government of the United States?

The amendment provides for only a limited amount-2 per cent. It may be that in a few instances there are here and there smaller banks which have not these bonds and they may have to buy them, but in most instances, if you will notice, the deposits are dumped into the big banks in New York City. A few big banks there get the large volume of these deposits. I do not know the exact figures, but I take it that over half the aggregate deposits are deposited in a few banks in New York City.

There is no objection among good, solid banks to the payment of interest. The amendment of mine was introduced in the first instance in the shape of a bill somewhat more limited. than it is now, because I only added to Government bonds State and municipal bonds. But after getting a letter from a banker, one of the leading bankers in St. Paul, I concluded to enlarge the securities in conformity with the suggestions contained in his letter. Here is what this gentleman writes me:

I just received a copy of your Senate bill 7951-That is the bill requiring 2 per cent interest-

I just received copy of your Senate bill No. 7951, which I very much approve. I have no doubt it is a step in the right direction, and such a bill as that ought to pass unencumbered with any of the other theories that are affoat with regard to the issuing of currency.

But he adds very properly, I think, that the banks ought to be permitted to deposit other securities than Government bonds; that they ought to be permitted to deposit, as the present Secretary, of his own accord and at his own volition, has allowed them to do, such bonds as are accepted by the savings banks of New York and Massachusetts, and hence I have included it in the amendment.

I am not willing to take up the time of the Senate beyond the statement I have made. If any new ideas are developed in the discussion, I shall ask leave to reply to them, but I am unwilling to occupy the time of the Senate further. I feel that it is simply an act of justice to the people of the United States to require the national banks to pay a limited amount of interest on Government deposits.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as Senators are well aware there has been, especially during the past year, a widespread agitation in banking and financial and business circles, asking for, perhaps demanding of Congress, general changes in our currency system and our financial system. Some of these proposi-tions have been very radical in their character, and the Committee on Finance, after a careful investigation, decided that they would report a bill which made a few necessary changes in existing law-changes, however, only of a character that, after Investigation, met the unanimous approval of the Committee

The committee are well aware that this is not a partisan question; that the members of both parties and all sections are equally interested in all questions of this character, and the committee decided to incorporate into the bill three propositions about which in the committee, and so far as I know in the country generally, there is very little difference of opinion.

There are many other things and many other questions in which various members of the committee believed, changes which they believed ought to be made, but which they knew could not be made, especially at this time or in any short sescould not be made, especially at this time or in any short session of Congress, because they would awaken controversies which would be prolonged greatly beyond any time at our command. The committee therefore reported this third section of the bill with a simple provision which permits the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit customs receipts in national depositories in the same manner that he is permitted by law to describe the transmitted to the same that the same that the same transmitted to the same t posit internal-revenue receipts.

As a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Treasury is practically doing that now. He deposits, as a matter of practice, the internal-revenue receipts in national depositories and pays out, to the extent which is necessary, the customs receipts for the current expenditures. But this operation is not direct. For instance, the money received from customs in New York, which, as I said in the Senate the other day, must necessarily be lawful money—that is, money which can be used by the banks for their reserves—is paid into the subtreasury in New York and locked up in the subtreasury; and the fact that an equal or a larger amount is paid out the same day in San Francisco or Louisville or Boston or elsewhere throughout the country does not have the same effect as if the money paid in New York-because a large part of the customs receipts is paid in New York—was directly put back into the channels of trade by being deposited in national depositories. Therefore the committee believed that this simple provision ought to be enacted.

The amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] proposes to add three propositions to the committee's amendment-four in effect, but three important and substantial amendments to the suggestions of the committee. The first is to make it obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit in national depositories all the money in the Treasury to deposit in national depositories all the money in the Treasury, outside of the working balance, which the Secretary himself, I suppose, is to determine, there being no sum fixed in the amendment itself. This is a question over which there has been a great deal of controversy in the past. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry], who is not now in his seat, has always insisted, as have very many other Senators, that not a dollar of Government funds should be deposited in national banks. have thought there should be a limited amount deposited in national banks, but that the customs receipts themselves should

The Senator from Minnesota goes to the other extreme and provides, by his amendment, that all the Government revenues shall be deposited in national banks, except a certain working balance, and I suppose if the members of the Senate were asked what such a working balance should be there are no two of them who would agree. I have heard Senators upon this floor say that $10,000,000 is a sufficient working balance, or fifteen or twenty million dollars. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] has always insisted that we did not need practically any working balance; that the hundred and fifty million dollars in gold reserve and all the other money not needed for immediate purposes should be paid out, or the nation should be relieved of taxation until there was no surplus. The question of a working balance is certainly one about which there can be reasonably a great deal of controversy.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, the amendment leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount of the working balance.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly.
Mr. NELSON. We could not very well do otherwise.
Mr. ALDRICH. But there have been a good many propositions, I will say to my friend the Senator from Minnesota, that have undertaken to fix a limited amount—twenty-five or thirty or thirty-five million dollars. This proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury the right to fix the working balance, but he must fix a balance which, in his opinion, is a working balance, not anything beyond that, and the amendment would require him to deposit in the national banks everything beyond that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if the effect of section 3 is to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit any of the public funds, to whatever extent he will, in such depositories of public money as he shall select, leaving the whole matter entirely discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the present law. We propose no change in that respect.

Mr. PATTERSON. Except he is not permitted to scatter the public moneys through the country?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no change of existing law in that respect. I will say in this connection, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota, that, as a matter of fact, at the present moment money is deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in every State in the Union, I think. The number of banks and the names of the banks are stated in reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I have not now before me, but they do include national banks in every State in the Union and in all parts of the several States.

Mr. PATTERSON. Can the Secretary of the Treasury deposit at will the revenues of the Government as they are received under existing law in specific terms?

Mr. ALDRICH. He can under section 5153 of the Revised Statutes, which this bill proposes to amend.

Mr. PATTERSON. Wherein does this section differ from the measure which the Senator from Rhode Island championed several years ago, which had for its object the direction of the deposit of securities?

Mr. ALDRICH. At that time we proposed to specify the securities which might be received by the Secretary of the Treasury for these deposits. It had a further provision that we should pay a certain amount of interest upon the deposits so made. That is the difference.

so made. That is the did Mr. PATTERSON rose.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me further. I think I shall cover all the points he has in mind if he will allow me to proceed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to say that my recollection is The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PATTERSON. For just one moment, I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island my recollection is that the great controversy at the time that other bill was up was over the distribution of the amount, and amendments were offered for the purpose of requiring a certain percentage.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; the Senator is mistaken. The controversy here was over the question of paying interest upon de-There was controversy also about the character of the securities to be accepted. We discussed that question at great length at that time. The committee then undertook to fix definitely the classes of securities which the Secretary of the Treasury might receive. We provided then that he should accept Government bonds, State bonds, municipal bonds of a certain character, municipal bonds of counties and cities of a certain size and that had never repudiated their obligations, and we tried to carefully guard that.

We also reported in favor of allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive certain classes of railroad bonds, but there was very strenuous objection in the Senate to the acceptance of any railroad bonds. But I will come to that later.

The second proposition of the Senator from Minnesota is to change the nature of the securities which the Secretary of the Treasury may accept. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota? It is that the Secretary shall receive bonds of the United States-or, in the discretion of the Secretary, the bonds of any State or municipality of the Union, or such bonds as are accepted by the savings banks of the States of Massachusetts or New York commercially at par.

If the Senate or the Congress decides to go into this question, which always has been a matter of a great deal of controversy, there can certainly be no objection to the acceptance of bonds of the United States or bonds of a State; but when you go into any municipality in the Union, that is very doubtful and questionable ground, because there are a great many municipalities whose bonds would never be sold at anywhere near par, and they would not be received by any bank in the United States as a security for loans. I think we all understand that. But the next proposition-

Mr. President-Mr. TILLMAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will allow me to go a I want to finish what I have to say upon this

The next proposition is "or such bonds as are accepted by the savings banks of the States of Massachusetts or New York commercially at par." I must confess I do not know just what that I suppose the Senator means a class of securities which means. I suppose the Senator means a class of securities which the laws of Massachusetts and New York permit savings banks to invest their funds in. I suppose that is what he means, but he certainly does not express it in this language. Under this language any class of securities that would be accepted by the savings banks of Massachusetts and New York might be accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury to secure these deposits. In other words, he would put the Secretary of the Treasury in the hands of the savings banks of New York and Massachusetts.

He would accept anything that they would accept.

I have before me the law of the State of New York with reference to the investment of the savings banks in that State. It contains eight or ten different sections, all describing certain classes of securities in which the savings banks of that State may invest their funds. It includes bonds secured by mortgage upon real estate. It includes United States bonds. State bonds of a certain character. It includes certain classes of municipal bonds. It includes a great many classes of railroad bonds. Most of those roads whose bonds are accepted were in the first instance roads that were in the State of New York, or which ran through the State of New York. Since then there have been added certain other conditions and provisions.

Now, I assume that if we are going to fix the class of securities the Secretary of the Treasury may accept Congress ought itself to do it, and not put it in the hands of the savings banks of one or two States to determine what securities the Secretary of the Treasury may accept.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?
Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.
Mr. NELSON. What class of securities does the Secretary of the Treasury now receive?

Mr. ALDRICH. I must confess that I am not advised.
Mr. NELSON. I should like to have information on that point, as to what kind of securities he has been receiving.

Mr. ALDRICH. I know he has been receiving a miscellaneous character of securities, but so far as I know he has never reported to Congress what classes of securities he has been

The Senator goes further and says that these must be bonds that are accepted commercially at par. Then he provides fur-"and no public money shall be deposited as aforesaid in excess of the par value of the bonds given as security therefor."

At the time the bill to which the Senator from Colorado has alluded was before the Senate four years ago most of the securities which it was suggested might be received were above par, but to-day most of those securities are below par, except United States bonds. I was reminded of this by ascertaining the fact only a day or two ago that the State of Massachusetts 3½ per cent bonds, which are as good security as can possibly be had anywhere, are selling for 91. A large class of the securities mentioned in the schedule suggested by the Senator from Minnesota, with the exception of United States bonds, are now below par, and it would be necessary that the banks should buy these securities at the market price, of course.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Would it not be better for Congress to pre-scribe what securities shall be received, instead of allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to exercise his sweet will as to what securities he will receive? Would it not be wiser and more prudent for Congress to designate the classes of securities?

Mr. ALDRICH. Possibly that is true, but I think the Senator from Minnesota will understand as well as I do that that is a question about which there would necessarily be a wide difference of opinion and a question which would raise the greatest amount of controversy in this Chamber.

I remember distinctly that four years ago a large part of the time taken in the discussion of this question was as to the character of the securities which we could safely permit the Secretary of the Treasury to receive. There was the strongest possible opposition to the acceptance of railroad bonds for this purpose, and there was the strongest possible opposition to the acceptance of certain classes of municipal bonds, and properly so, bonds of small municipalities throughout the country, which had no current commercial value and which would not be disposed of in case of a fall.

The next proposition suggested by the amendment of the Sen-ator from Minnesota is one which refers to the payment of interest upon the deposits. As I said, a proposition to pay not less than 1½ per cent interest per annum was included in the bill reported by the committee four years ago. That proposition met then the determined opposition of Senators, lawyers on both sides of the Chamber, some of them members of the committee and others not members of the committee, who insisted upon it that the reception of interest on the part of the United States changed the nature of the transaction entirely, claiming at that time that there were decisions that the money in the national banks was essentially and in fact money in the Treasury, and that, therefore, the relation between the banks and the Government ought not to be changed for the purpose of accepting a few dollars in interest.

But my objection to this proposition of the Senator from Minnesota at the present time is much wider and more far-reaching than that. I am not quite sure but that the proposition in itself would give rise to an endless discussion; but the Senator from Minnesota shows by the terms of his amendment that he desires that this money shall be spread about. The provision of his amendment is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not confine these deposits to a limited number of banks in the larger cities, his purpose being that there shall be what he would call, I suppose, an "equitable" distribution of the money deposited throughout the United States.

I submit to the Senate, and I think with some knowledge of what I am saying, that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota will make it absolutely impossible to have that distribution.

Let us see what would happen. Take a small bank anywhere in the United States; I do not care where it is. Those banks do not carry Government bonds as an investment. They can not afford to carry Government bonds as an investment. of these banks have Government bonds as security for their circulating notes, but no bank in the United States outside of the large cities, and not very many in the large cities, habitually carries any considerable amount of Government bonds as a part of its current assets.

Now, what would happen? Suppose a bank wants to receive a deposit from the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of the Senator's amendment. If it buys Government bonds it has got to pay a premium upon them. It buys Government bonds it has got to pay a premium upon them. It buys a 2 per cent bond, we will say, for instance; it has to pay the premium upon a 2 per cent bond, and we will suppose that money is 6 per cent. I imagine there is not a bank in the State of New York, or in any of the States of the Senators who are now listening to me, where the rate of interest is more than that. But suppose it is 6 per cent. The bank has more than that. But suppose it is 6 per cent. The bank has to make a 2 per cent investment as a security for the deposit of the United States. It loses 4 per cent upon that purchase of the bonds, to say nothing about the danger or the possibility of losing upon the premium, because it is not at all certain; the premium upon Government bonds is fluctuating from day to day. A prudent business man, a prudent banker, would have to take into consideration whether he could sell his bonds for the same price that he had to pay for them.

So you have an expense growing out of this purchase of bonds of 4 per cent to the banks. Add to that 2 per cent which you have to pay the Government, and you have your 6 per cent already taken care of, and there is no profit if a bank receives only 6 per cent. There is no profit whatever on the deposit, and you have the trouble and the responsibility and the risk of buying these securities and holding the Government deposit, without any profit whatever, and without any advantage to the bank or to the community in which the bank is located.

In other words, this provision would make it absolutely necessary that the Secretary of the Treasury should deposit the Government money only in the large banks in the commercial centers, the banks which habitually carry the classes of securities which are included in the description of the Senator's amendment, and where there would be no necessity of making these investments.

I can hardly understand the logic of the Senator's amendment unless he desires that all the Government money shall be de-posited in a few large banks in the city of New York or in the city of Chicago or the other great financial centers.

I have in my hand an estimate made by the Government actuaries of the loss which would accrue from the deposit of Government funds upon an assumed payment of a rate of interest of 2 per cent. It is made, in the first place, upon a basis that there is to be no reserve held against these de-

The Senator from Minnesota makes no provision about that at all; and a bank which held these deposits in a reserve city would have to hold 15 per cent reserve against that deposit in addition to the cost, which I have alluded to, of the premium upon the bonds and the tax paid to the United States. in a central reserve city, it has to hold a reserve of 25 per cent in addition to the other charges which I have alluded to. The calculations of the Government actuaries, which I will put in the Record, in each case show that in every single instance there would be a loss to a bank which would accept the de-posits under the conditions named in the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. But that only relates, if the Senator will allow me, to the matter of Government bonds and not to these other bonds

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand; but do you suppose that a bank in your State or in any State is going to buy other bonds and take the chances of fluctuation? The Government bonds are sold substantially along a certain line; they vary but very little in price. The risk of loss growing out of the purchase is infinitesimal compared with any other security.

Take the bonds of the State of Massachusetts, to which I have alluded. A few years ago they were selling far above par. Take the bonds of the city of New York; take the large amounts of bonds which have been issued by States and municipalities throughout the Union. In these days they are fluctuating widely, and no prudent banker could afford to buy bonds other than the bonds of the United States. They would be worse off in that connection than they would be if they kept closely to the bonds of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, I think I have shown, what I certainly know from my own experience, that the absolute effect under these conditions of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota will be, first, to require the Secretary of the Treasury to keep all the Government funds in national banks, and, second, to require him to keep those funds in the large banks of the United States, who habitually hold securities of this character, and no other class of banks in this country can afford to hold them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to say only a word on this matter. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the explanation that has been given by the Senator from Rhole Island [Mr. Aldrich]. As the Senator suggests, I understand that this measure is to some extent to meet the great demand for a more elastic currency. That brings me back to about eleven years ago, in 1896, when we fought that memorable campaign upon the proposition, and the proposition alone, which emanated perhaps as much from the logical brain of the Senator from Rhode Island as from any other source, that our money should not have an elastic character, but that it should have a permanent value as near as possible; that the yardstick which was to measure a yard of cloth to-day ought to be of exactly the same length as the yardstick which was to measure a yard of cloth a year from to-day; and because the gold standand was the nearest to a positive and definite standard we could secure, we should adopt the gold standard for that reason; that we did not want any currency that could suddenly fluctuate in values by any sudden contraction or any sudden expansion. I believed in that policy, and I believe in it as much to-day as I believed in it in 1896—that is, that the basis of the circulating medium should be as unchangeable as it is possible to secure, and that it should not be subject to the power of even the Government or of any individual or any set of individuals to suddenly expand it and as suddenly to contract the same currency

Now, Mr. President, there has been a continuous expansion in the matter of our circulating medium for the last eleven rears. I believe that it will average about 3 per cent a year, although I may be in error on that. We must also take into consideration the vast amount of gold that is being coined every year and the mighty balance of trade of $500,000,000 a year in our favor that is rapidly expanding our circulating medium. It is expanding greatly, and all business lines are adapting themselves to that particular expansion.

During this great expansion mighty industries have sprung up over all the country. Under the impetus of plenty of money in the country to be had our stocks have been watered and values have been placed upon our industrials far beyond their inherent value in any ordinary conditions of the country. Those great industrials are sold and bought and sold again systematically. It is necessary to buy them at low price by great syndicates and then raise the value, if possible, and then unload them. It has been found impossible even with these powerful syndicates to uphold these watered values for any length of time, and in order that they might uphold them until they could again be loaded off onto the dear public it has been necessary to come to the Government for relief. Again and again has the Secretary of the Treasury furnished the necessary funds for upholding the values of these securities until they could again be unloaded and, shrinking in value, be bought back again.

The people began to get acquainted with that condition of commercial affairs, and we commenced to hear murmurs over the whole country against the Secretary of the Treasury for furnishing the funds that were necessary to carry on these enormous speculations. The Secretary of the Treasury himself became fearful of the public clamor against it, and the great banks of New York were unable to secure the funds that were necessary to carry on the great speculative business and uphold it from one year's end to the other.

Then came the great cry over the country for an elastic currency. The New York idea was a currency that could be expanded at the will of a few banks in New York and contracted again at the sweet will of a few of those great banks. A bill of that kind was introduced in Congress. The moment it was considered it became apparent that we were allowing the finances of the country to be subject practically to the control of a few of these banks. Unable to secure that end, they now secure this other method of what we call an elastic currency, and the first method is that instead of $400,000,000 or thereabouts of the customs receipts going direct into the Treasury, it is to go into the banks and be called for. It may be put into the banks under this bill and be called for, of course, as the Secretary of the Treasury may need it.

But, as I understand, they could be paid under this bill the same as the internal revenue, directly, and may be received by banks in the first instance. That leaves perhaps about $400, 000,000 a year in the hands of these banks, less such portion as will be drawn out by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, money naturally seeks its own level. That is one of the great philosophical arguments that was advanced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] in all the past years in our great financial campaigns, that it would go where it was demanded. That is absolutely true. We do not need so much this elasticity of the currency as we do need to let the currency alone and let it seek its own level and go where it will. The system of handing it over to a few great banks is forcing it against its natural tendency to seek its own level. If you place it, as we do in every one of the States, so far as I know, in such shape that each section of the country can demand a portion of the funds which otherwise would remain in the State treasuries, then those sections of the country demanding the money would receive it.

Now, let us see how that applies here in the United States. We will say that in the city of St. Paul money is at such high rates that the banks there this winter can afford to pay 2 per cent. If they can afford to pay 2 per cent upon the daily balance for from four to six months of the year the money would naturally go there, where there was the greatest demand for it, in preference to going into the banks of New York, where the Senator says they can not afford to pay 2 per cent, and thereby we would equalize the distribution of this currency by sending it where there was the greatest demand, and there would be the greatest demand for it where the people could afford to pay the greatest interest upon the deposit.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator is as well aware as I am of the fact that the higher the rate of interest the greater the loss under the provisions of the section proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson].

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not concede that. Money in my State ranges all the way from 6 to 12 per cent and even higher. There are banks in the northwestern portion of the State that are paying on their C. D.'s, their certificates of deposit, as high a rate as 6 per cent per annum. There are those that are Government depositories that are paying about what I stated, or have been in the past, and are loaning it at 12 per cent. It is simply because there is a demand for the money there. They can well afford, Mr. President, to pay the 2 per cent that would be necessary.

But the Senator from Rhode Island speaks simply of the matter of Government bonds. If that were the only thing to be considered, his argument might be true, as Government bonds would have to be bought perhaps at a premium, we will say, of from 3 to 4 per cent, and of course the other 2 per cent would make up all they could loan out at 6 per cent. But the provision that is advocated by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] allows them to take other good bonds or securities, such as would be acceptable anywhere else in the United States. That being the case, I certainly fail to understand why the bankers receiving the benefit should not pay the 2 per cent, or whatever may be necessary. If the money is worth nothing to them, there is nothing to compel them to take the money. do not need it badly enough to pay the extra 2 per cent, let it go as it is. If they do not need the money, then we certainly should not give it to them. But I presume, Mr. President, that the money they have received from the Treasury of the United States has been of inestimable value to them, not only in loaning it again, but in upholding an immense amount of in-dustrial securities that are held by banks until they can get rid of them, and that I believe more than anything else is the basis of the desire of these great banks of New York and other eastern cities to secure Government deposits without the payment of one cent of interest.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island—I do not presume we can get through with this bill before 3 o'clock—if he will not kindly explain section 4 of the bill, which amends section 9 of the act of July 12, 1882?

Mr. ALDRICH. The last section of the bill? Mr. CULBERSON. The last section of the bill

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the existing law permits national banks to retire their circulation upon the deposit of lawful money with the Treasury of the United States. That process of retirement, however, is confined and restricted under the present law to $3,000,000 in any calendar month. That restriction grew out of conditions which existed in 1882, at the time the so-called "national-bank act," or, you might say, the last edition of the national-bank act, was passed, which provided for the continuance of the charters of national banks. At that time there was a suggestion made by the Secretary of the Treasury which would oblige national banks to take bonds at a lower rate of interest than that which was paid on those which they then held. Under that anticipated stress the banks proceeded to retire a large amount of their circulation and placed their bonds in the Treasury for redemption. At that time it was thought desirable that some limitation should be put upon the retirement of national-bank notes.

The demand which has been alluded to by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] for an elastic currency is a demand which is almost universal throughout the United States. I think every student of economics believes there should be as great an amount of elasticity as possible in our currency system. Under existing law $3,000,000 of national-bank notes are permitted to be retired each month. That retirement is compulsory, so far as the Government is concerned—that is, if a bank deposits lawful money, then its notes are retired as a matter of The provision which is reported by the Committee on Finance makes that retirement subject to the approval and consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury and increases from $3,000,000 a month to $9,000,000 a month the amount that may be retired. We have outstanding in this country, in round figures, three thousand million dollars of money. The pending bill provides for a possible retirement or reduction of that amount to the extent of $9,000,000 in any What percentage of elasticity the retirement of one month. this amount gives to the currency the Senator from Texas, with his mathematical mind, can see as readily as I can.

At the time this provision was inserted in the law in 1882 the amount of paper circulation in this country was, in round numbers, $700,000,000. To-day it is $2,000,000,000; so that the percentage of possible retirement in any one month, under the provisions of the bill now reported, is substantially what it was in 1882, or a little less, perhaps; so that there can be, I think, no question about the absolute safety of the provision. It gives a very small element of elasticity to our currency.

It does another thing. Certain banks, on account of the profit of circulation, have declined to take out circulation at times when it was profitable, because under the law as it now stands they were not able to retire it when it ceased to be profitable; in other words, this bill, if enacted, will encourage banks to take out a large amount of circulation to answer the public demand, because they would be aware that to a limited extent they may be able to take advantage of the process of retirement when circulation ceases to be profitable.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island another question in connection with this last provision of the bill. He has referred to the provision of the national banking act of 1882 in regard to the withdrawal of circulating notes in the ninth section of that act. The provision here refers to section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, and then the provision continues with reference to the withdrawal of these notes. I call the attention of the Senator, or at least, I remind him—for he is thoroughly familiar with this matter—to the fact that by section 12 of the act of March 14, 1900, there is a provision connected with this general subject referring to the act of June 12, 1882, and then in section 13 we have the following:

Sec. 13. That every national banking association having on deposit, as provided by law, bonds of the United States bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, issued under the provisions of this act, to secure its circulating notes, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of said 2 per cent bonds; and such taxes shall be in lieu of existing taxes on its notes in circulation imposed by section 5214 of the Revised Statutes.

I will ask the Senator if the last section of this hill has one

I will ask the Senator if the last section of this bill has any bearing upon that tax?

Mr. ALDRICH. None whatever. It does not touch that question at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] raised the question of the character of securities which the banks deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury when they obtain this Government money. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island a little while ago to indicate that the Secretary now accepts other bonds than United States bonds. I should like to ask him what is his interpretation of the lan-guage on line 12 of page 6, where the words "and otherwise" occur? The words "and otherwise" are in the law now; and I suppose, by stretching a little, we might arrive at the conclusion that the Secretary is authorized to accept other bonds than United States bonds, although a purist interpretation or a stickler might say that that was merely in addition.

Mr. ALDRICH. That has been the subject of great controversy in Congress and out of it for many years. This language was first used in 1854, and it has been the law from that time until this. The Secretary of the Treasury, acting on the advice of the Attorney-General, has construed that language to au-thorize him to accept, in addition to Government bonds, other securities of certain classes, he making the designation himself, and fixing the classes of bonds which will be received in addition. As I understand the Secretary's position, he has always received other securities in addition to United States bonds.

The committee, knowing that this was a controverted question, and has always been a controverted question, and had been construed officially in one way, decided that it was better to leave the language as it was, rather than to try to fix upon the classes of securities which might be received.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has occurred to me that this condition might arise upon a deposit of this kind in a bank, where a security in the shape of United States bonds being offered, but not enough to cover the whole loss that might accrue, the Secretary of the Treasury might use some discretion as to the probable or possible loss, and demand United States bonds for that, and then take other bonds, in addition, as a kind of anchor to leeward for safety, or in excess of caution, or something of that sort. If we are going into the business of turning over to the banks practically all the income of the Government, as I understand the Senator from Rhode Island, without charging interest, it looks to me like a very large question we are entering on here just at the close of this session.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.
Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will permit me, on the 30th of September last, which is the date of the last report I have, the amount of Government bonds held to secure deposits was $102,000,000, as against $10,804,000 of State, city, and other classes of bonds, showing that the Secretary of the Treasury, even under present conditions, is holding a very large proportion of the amount held, in Government bonds, the amount being $102,000,000 as against $10,000,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet, if we enter upon the policy of putting all the customs receipts into the banks as deposits, the Senator will realize at once that there will be a very large demand for bonds to be used as security.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from South Carolina, I think, could not have listened to what I said, or else I did not state it sufficiently clear to meet his comprehension. It is not expected that any considerable increase will be made in the amount of Government deposits in national banks growing out of this legislation. By a process which I alluded to, the surplus funds of the United States are now deposited in national banks, but not deposited directly. The purpose of this bill is to return promptly to the channels of trade money which now goes back to the banks indirectly. There is no suggestion or expectation that the amount of Government deposits in the national banks will be very largely increased by this legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. But would it not be possible, Mr. President, for the Secretary of the Treasury, if he saw fit, to deposit all of the customs revenues in the banks as fast as they were collected?

Mr. ALDRICH. Subject to check at any time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, but still—
Mr. ALDRICH. But the balance in the national banks at any one time could not be greatly in excess of what it is now.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President-

VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senafor from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me a moment for a suggestion?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly. Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the great appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department, covering about $200,000,000, has been reported, and I trust the Senate will take it up on Monday morning.

I wish now to say that in the condition of the public business, with only one week before the Senate, it seems to me it will be impossible to pass all the appropriation bills without having night sessions, and I hope Senators will set their houses in order, so that we may have on Monday night and Tuesday night, and any other nights needed, night sessions-not sham sessions, but real sessions, with a majority of the Senate present for the transaction of the public business.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to make an announcement also?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly. Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, it is necessary that I shall be absent from the city on Monday, but I desire to give notice that I will, at the earliest possible moment, bring the bill which has just been under consideration up before the Senate for its

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR ALGER.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions presented by the Senator from Michigan will be read.

The resolutions were read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved. That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. RUSSELL A. ALGER, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved. That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, for the second time during my brief service in the Senate the State of Michigan has been called upon to mourn the loss of one of its most distinguished representatives in this body; first, Senator McMillan, and now Senator Alger. Both rendered conspicuous service to the State and the nation, and died full of honors.

Senator Russell A. Alger, at the time of his death had reached the allotted span of human life, and completed the work which Providence had assigned him, and died, as he had frequently expressed his desire to do, at his post of duty in the front of battle. Life's work was completed and he was content.

RUSSELL A. ALGER was born in Medina County, in the State of Ohio, February 27, 1836, where he spent the days of his early youth. I can not better describe the struggles of his boyhood than by quoting from an authentic account of his early life, a simple story, which should be an inspiration to the youth of this day and in all days to come:

His parents, after settling in the woods of Medina County, were extremely poor and partially invalids, and young RUSSELL found it necessary to labor hard in order to earn support enough to sustain his parents, his younger brother and sister,

But the charge of supporting his invalid parents was not to When he was but 12 years of age his father and mother died, and young Alger was left with a younger brother and sister to care for. That, indeed, was a trying situation, and many a boy of weak moral fiber would have abandoned the responsibility. Not so with young Alger. He grappled with circumstances as he found them. He secured for the children a home where each could be cared for and then pro-ceeded to make something of himself. At first he worked for his board, clothing, and three months' schooling in the year. In 1850, at the age of 14, he cut loose from so restricted a contract and really began life as a "hired man." His first engagement was for six months, during which time he received $3 for the first month, $4 for the second month, and $5 a month for the remainder of the term. Out of these scanty earnings as a farm laborer he contributed to the needs of his brother and sister, who had been placed in families where, their limited services were accepted for their board. * * *

"Thus young Alger had worked steadily forward from boyhood, had accepted what wages he could obtain, from their meagerness had aided in the support of his brother and sister, had not faltered in any of the long years from the time he was 12 years old until he was 20, but had gone steadily forward, doing what he considered was simply dutiful and manly. "Until he was 20 years of age young Alger had simply struggled for the existence of himself and his two wards."

Such is the simple story of his early life. Such conditions would ordinarily have daunted the bravest heart; but the Scotch and English blood that coursed in his veins stirred his heart and nerved his arm for the conflict before him. With undaunted courage he took up the duties and responsibilities of life, and under the most trying circumstances discharged them all with manly spirit and an unconquerable will.

Finally, in 1859 he went to Michigan and engaged in the active duties of a business life. He had, however, scarcely entered this new field of his labors when the civil war broke out, and, turning-his back upon the business career he had mapped out for himself and his hopes and ambitions for the future, he of fered his services to the country, and in August, 1861, enlisted as a private in the Second Michigan Cavalry, sharing the hard-ships and the privations of a private soldier. His soldierly qualities were soon recognized and promotions followed rapidly. He became captain of Company C, then major of the regiment, then lieutenant-colonel of the Sixth Michigan Cavalry, and in 1863 was promoted to the colonelcy of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry. In 1864 he was given the rank of brigadier-general for gallant conduct in battle, and finally, in June, 1865, having served until the close of the war, he was brevetted major-general of volunteers for gallant and meritorious services during the war. He served until the close of the conflict, participating in sixty-six battles and skirmishes, and rose from the ranks to a brevet major-general of volunteers.

Returning to Michigan at the close of the war, with peace assured and the Union restored, he resumed his business enterprises, and in the forests of Michigan hewed his way to fortune and fame. The lumber industry, in which he was engaged, proved a most lucrative venture, and his industry was ultimately rewarded with an abundant fortune.

Before this time he had paid no attention to political affairs; but in politics he had always been, from his early manhood, an ardent Republican, and in 1884 was nominated by his party for governor, which office he held for two years, at the expiration of which time he declined to be a candidate for reelection. The firm manner with which he dealt with the labor troubles in the State induced him to forego a renomination in the interest of party harmony and strength. He retained his hold, however, upon the confidence and affection of the people of our State, and in 1888 the Michigan delegation to the national Republican convention at Chicago was instructed to present his name for the high office of President, and in the convention he received at one time 142 votes, but the nomination was conferred upon another.

In his political life, as in his business, no disappointment or adversity caused him to waver from his sense of duty, and entering into the campaign with all the enthusiasm of his nature, he devoted his time and substance to the triumph of his party. He was prominently identified with the Grand Army of the Republic, and in 1889 was chosen its commander in chief, with which organization he remained until the time of his death.

In 1897 General Alger was appointed Secretary of War by President McKinley, and he continued in that office until 1899, covering the entire period of the war with Spain. I often heard him speak of the gratification he felt over the fact that the conflict brought a reunited people together under one flag and for one country.

In his history of the Spanish war he says:

Americans have not forgotten—they are not likely to forget—the splendid spectacle of the country's response to the Government's ultimatum upon Spain which inevitably resulted in war. It was spontaneous and practically universal; it was sincere and enthusiastic. One realized that thirty-three years of peace had made no change in the American character. More than 100,000 veterans of the civil war, wearers of the blue and wearers of the gray, pleaded for an opportunity to serve the reestablished Union. The sons of those who fought under Grant and Lee showed the soldierly and patriotic spirit of their sires had lost nothing in intensity by the lapse of years.

I know he often said to me that that consummation was worth

In 1902 he was appointed Senator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator McMillan, taking his seat December 1, and subsequently elected by the legislature of the State for the full term of six years.

There was but one sentiment in the State, and that was of vindication by the people who knew him best, among whom he had lived, and who had unshaken confidence in him.

His death is sincerely mourned by all the people of our State, whom he served so long and so well, and his memory will be revered by the generations to come.

Upon the receipt of the intelligence of Senator Alger's death the governor of the State conveyed official notice of the sad event to the legislature, then in session, in the following fitting

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, Lansing, January 24, 1907.

To the President of the Senate:

Hon. Russell A. Alger, Senator of the United States from Michigan, died at Washington, D. C., at 8.45 a. m., January 24, 1907, thereby creating a vacancy in the representation of this State in the Senate of the United States.

Full of years and honors, Senator Alger has gone to his reward. It falls to the lot of few men to serve their State and nation in such exalted stations. Not alone because of the honors and responsibilities that came to him in civil life do we revere his memory. As a Michigan soldier he rendered distinguished services in the war of the rebellion. Michigan never failed during the lifetime of Senator Alger to testify to her love and devotion for him when the opportunity presented itself, and it is fitting in the highest degree that arrangements be made by the legislature of the State he loved and honored for services at which proper expression may be given of the loss our State has sustained.

FRED M. WARNER, Governor,

The legislature supplemented this tribute of the executive by declaring

The services of General Alger in war and in peace have been signal ized by conspicuous devotion to duty, unflinching courage, wisdom, and patriotism, and have been freely rendered to the State and the nation.

He went to his death wounded, but with great courage, malice toward none and charity for all, he laid down the burden of life, leaving this declaration of mingled patriotism and pathos:

Should war ever again come upon this country and find it so totally unprepared as it was in 1898, I hope that those who have been so profuse in their criticisms and eager to discover faults may have the patriotism and pride of country to rise above personalities and, instead of striving to tear down, may endeavor to strengthen the hands of those upon whom the burden may fall and whose only hope of reward is that satisfaction which comes from the consciousness of having labored honestly and unremittingly to serve a Government whose flag has never yet known defeat.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, when one beloved once lay dead in a stricken home, a friend wrote these words to those who mourned:

Watch and tend him as ye would, sickness and sorrow and pain and death at last would be his portion. Be not cast down that he is freed from them and that his spirit is at rest.

Such thoughts as these, Mr. President, commend themselves to our reflection at the close of the long, eventful, and achieving life of our late colleague, Russell Alexander Alger. It had passed beyond the vigor of his active manhood and was already assailed by a mortal malady which he faced and knew. The last days of General Alger must have been gloomy and depressing days to him, for they were marked by the signs of his early dissolution. He had been told, and he instinctively knew from his own feeling, that the hand of death was on him. The adventitious charms of life were gone. Ambition's bugle call and fame's alluring smile could possess no attractiveness for him who had heard "the one clear call which came from beyond the harbor bar.'

The increasing feebleness of body made each day the more and more a burden, and yet in these days of heaviness and sore trial the very highest, noblest, and bravest qualities of the true man showed themselves in him. He came day by day to his post of duty in the Senate. He listened to the proceedings and was careful to be present and to deliver his vote when the sense of the Senate was taken.

Nice gentility marked his plain but trim dress. He had a pleasant word of greeting and cheer for friends he met with. He was composed and calm. Looking time and looking death in the face, watching, as it were, the last sands as they poured out of the downturned glass of life, like a trained soldier under fire, he showed no wincing. He proved in his conduct and in his bearing that the sense of duty remained constant and predominant in him. If "duty" be the sublimest word in the language, surely duty realized and duty done, even in the face of death, is man's highest and most noble achievement. This is true greatness of soul, and this did he display.

If the history of any Senator here were written, it would probably be found that, like Senator Alger's, it runs back into the conditions, into the history, and into the very organism of the society of which he is a part. Of course there are excep-tions to this rule. There are the perturbations, the revolutions, upheavals of society, and great periods of transition when all rules are broken. But he, as well as the other two of our colleagues who have left our side in this Congress, illustrated the principle which these words indicate.

Bate, a clerk on a steamboat at 13, a soldier at 17, a lawyer and editor and soldier again, and then governor and Senator Bate, born under the influences of that region in which Old Hickory Jackson was a leading figure and influence, came as naturally to his career and his opinions as man does to the at-mosphere that gives to him the breath of her existence. Gorman, born in Maryland on the borderland of the civil

entering into the great business of a commercial and manufacturing State, was representative of his time, of his geography, of the matters and things around him, just as truly as was Bate

General Alger represented a different segment of our history and country. When the new States sprang into being beyond the Alleghenies they were under the guardianship of the great Government which the original States had founded. not either creators of the principles for which they nor were they; except in a minor sense, the achievers of the land or the independence which they enjoyed. It was perfectly natural that they should look upon the Government which created the Commonwealths and which raised them as children into the manhood of sovereign States in a different light from those who were the descendants of the earliest pioneers and of the earliest fabricators of our institutions.

Take either of the three men-Bate, Gorman, and Alger-and transpose their positions and their surroundings, and each of them would have been a man of mark and leading; and with situations changed the very nature of the men would also have differed with the diversity of things which they represented. But there is much likeness, even if there be difference, in their contacts, associations, and geographical relations. They all three men of high American ideals. They were all three devoted patriots and willing burden bearers of the people. All three of them rose from the undistinguishable obscurity of a boyhood which had no silver or golden spoon in its mouth and which was marked by no special opportunities. But each bespoke the sturdy and worthy stock from which he sprang by showing the stuff that was in him. Each illustrated the truth expressed by Edmund Burke when he said, "It is a prerogative of man to be in a great degree a creature of his own making. Each had in him the materials of success, and each molded that material into success by long, persistent, and hard striving on his own projected models.

General Alger's career illustrates the tremendous opportunities and the beckoning hands of ambition and enterprise of the old Northwest which had been turned into young and magnificent Commonwealths. A farmer's boy of 10, going to school of nights at one period of the year and teaching school at another; a student of the law, admitted to the bar, forming his character upon ideals of a future career which seemed to open before him; then passing from Ohio into the new Commonwealth of Michigan and there hearing the bugle blast that summoned

There is comprehended in the mere statement of his military career material out of which a graphic volume could be written. A private, a captain, a major, a lieutenant-colonel, a colonel, a general, crowned with brevet of major-generalship at its close, and participating in sixty-six battles and skirmishes. This would seem extravagant to those unfamiliar with the unremitting tenor of the war; but the cannonade was as regular almost in the period of 1864 as the rising and the setting of the sun, and battles passed out of view in a day which in other times would have been written upon the brilliant scrolls of history.

The most marked feature in the history of General Alger, and one which betokened his indomitable energy, his settled and fixed purpose, and the abilities which were behind them, is the fact that he strove in many things and succeeded in them all. Plunging into the wilderness as yet scarcely traversed by the white man's step, he rose to great eminence as a business man. Then he interwove the fortune which he had created by his own merit and genius into the manifold business relations which sprang up in the development of a more complex order of Turning his attention to the political field, he becomes elector at large to represent his party before the people, and then is elevated to the posts of governor and of Senator. These things tell their own stories, and I need not go into the detail of relation which has been so eloquently and well done by his col-

In several ways I became better acquainted with General Alger than usually falls to the lot of Senators here who are not upon the same committees and are not in that unison of consultation which kindred political opinions often brings, met him socially in an agreeable and friendly way in London ten years ago. The face of a countryman is always welcome in We sojourned at the same hotel, and in daily contacts and associations I seemed to become familiar with his character, to see its lights and shades, to realize how friendly and how kindly it was, and to share and exchange hospitalities which rendered absence from home and country an additional matter of joy intermingling with new scenes.

The next time I was thrown frequently and for a much more prolonged period with General Alger was during the time of the Spanish war. He had then come to Washington as Secretary of War, and a burden was thrown upon his shoulders such as has been thrown upon no man in this generation unless it be the President in whose Cabinet he served. General Alger was not at that time in great vigor of health, but he devoted himself to the task before him with an assiduity, with a patience, with a continuity of application which could not have

For the time being it seemed as if party lines had disappeared, and what particularly commended him to my admiration was not only his frequent expression of gratification that we were all one in the feelings of friendship and in sharing the burdens and the opportunities of government, but also one in deed. No man connected with the Administration was more gratified to issue commissions to the sons and kindred of the men with whom he had fought, nor do I think there was any man in Washington who enjoyed more generous and complete satisfaction in the renewal of olden ties and in seeing the work of grace proceed that cements the affections as well as the interests of the people. I heard him make remarks on many occasions which I would not feel at liberty to repeat in public, even though they were most honorable to him and such as furnished worthy examples for any man to imitate.

Mr. President, it was a matter of great disappointment to me that when you appointed the committee to attend General Alger's remains to his home in Michigan I could only in part perform what was my becoming duty; as one of its members I did attend his funeral here, and was impressed by its simplicity and by the utter absence of all effort at ostentation. Befittingly, a battalion of cavalry, in which arm of the service he had been a distinguished officer, escorted his remains to the depot, from which they were transported to his home. Fittingly those who were his comrades in arms again put on their uniforms, that they might testify their especial sympathy.

But beyond the mere forms and ceremonies which are necessary to such an occasion, there was nothing more than the offerings of personal friendship and the sharing in grief which marked the departure of one so well known, and, by those who knew him best, so well beloved.

I would have accompanied his remains to the city of Detroit, and I felt a sense of keen disappointment that I could not do so. but I had in my hands tasks which I could not lay down without feeling that I was deserting my post of duty, and in preferring duty to even so sacred a call I felt I but imitated the worthy example which he himself had set before me.

All of us have heard, Mr. President, and from many sources, of the beautiful home life of General Alger and of the happy lives that were lived by those nearest and dearest to him under his roof. To that fortress of the heart, the home, we turn always in our troubles, and to that we turn instinctively as we seek to know those who have gone forth into life's battle to bear life's burdens. The husband, the father, the friend had the capital of his life in his home. Thither bore he his trophies. capital of his life in his home. Thither he returned when the weariness of the strife came on. There his friends ever found welcome, and there he was himself in the finest phase of his nature.

He will be missed by comrades who shared his dangers and his hardships in days of conflict. He will be missed by some who were his enemies in war, but who became his friends in peace, and who rejoice to know that he was their friend. He will be missed by men of public life who sought his counsel and his influence. He will be missed by men of business whose affairs were intermingled with his own and who got light and counsel from his sagacity and experience. But all this seems scarcely of account when we recall how he will be missed by those who were next to him in the sweet and loving affections of the fireside. Comfort it is not ours to give to them; consolation we can not bestow; though we would that both gifts were within the compass of our sympathy. We can only be glad that his suffering is ended, and believe that his good works on earth will follow him and that he is at peace and rest.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, for more than a year prior to the 24th day of last month, there moved among us, participating in our labors, shirking none of the arduous duties attached to membership in this body, one who carried with him knowingly his death warrant,

Over a year ago our friend, in whose memory we are devoting these few feeble words, became informed of the serious condition of his health, and learned that any moment the dread summons might come which would take him away from his family, friends, colleagues, and all that is loved and prized in this life.

With the quiet courage which marked his whole life work, he uttered no complaint, he showed no anxiety, he asked for no sympathy. He had the hope of being permitted to finish the term of service for which he had been elected-and with this hope actuating him, he put his house in order, continued his daily tasks, and performed his duties quietly, gently, and yet with courage which, as we look back upon the year's work, we must pronounce sublime. The world has admired the courage of the Spartan youth who bore unmoved the gnawing of the wolf at his vitals; but what courage was that compared with the faithful performance of duties from day to day by our colleague, his fate facing him every moment.

This closing year of the life of our friend in which he carried silently and uncomplainingly his grievous burden is but typical of another period of his career when, without harsh words or recrimination, he bore bravely and quietly the brunt of blame which by right should have been placed upon us, the Congress, and upon the people of the country.

It is needless to repeat history so fresh in our minds, but we all know that, following the great struggle of the civil war, we, as a nation, allowed ourselves to drift for over thirty years in blissful insecurity. The Congress, representing perhaps accurately the general sentiment of the country, maintained our Army on a footing inadequate to our commercial standing and importance in the world of nations. Suddenly forced into war, there was an outcry against our unpreparedness, which naturally centered against the then Secretary of War, regardless of the fact that the deplorable condition of affairs was the accumulated result of the laxity of our own acts.

Under bitter aspersions, and knowing his own blamelessness, Secretary Alger never retaliated; under circumstances of the most trying nature he never departed from the dignified poise of character which had so marked his life. While he lived, no words of defense of his own acts, or condemnation of the charges of his critics, passed his lips. Even though it should not come during his lifetime, he knew that when the impartial history of the war with Spain should be written, it would be recorded that its errors were those of the remissness of our system and not the shortcomings of any officer of the Government. And on the day of his death came the official declaration of the War Department vindicating him. Of Secretary Alger's administration of the War Office Mr. Secretary of War Taft

General Alger was patriotic, earnest, and most devoted to the interest of the Army, and especially considerate of the welfare of the enlisted men. He was a gentle, kindly man, with great confidence in his friends and associates, and was much beloved by his subordinates. He was the subject of unjust criticism because of the country's lack of preparedness for war when war came, although for this he was in no wise responsible. wise responsible.

It is not necessary for me at this time to recount to you in detail the life story of RUSSELL ALEXANDER ALGER. But I can not refrain from calling attention briefly to the salient features as shown in the modest biographical sketch which appears in the current Congressional Directory, and to point out the self-evident fact which his life exemplifies, the untold possibilities our country offers the man who undertakes his life battle equipped with energy, application, honesty, and ambition.

A penniless orphan at 13, facing want and privation; a plowboy at 20, doing the long dreary toil of the farm and field; a country school-teacher, with the petty wearing trials of that calling; a lawyer, taking a leading place in his profession; a lumberman, understanding the intricacles of the business and attaining wealth through this knowledge; a soldier, taking part in sixty-six battles and skirmishes; a governor of a great State administering the office creditably and honestly; a Cabinet offi-cer, grappling with problems that had never before confronted an officer of the Government, and, at his death, a Senator of the United States, loved by his constituents and his colleagues.

Such is the story of our friend and colleague, and it furnishes a lesson of untold value to the American youth who would reach high place in the business or political life of this country. His was not accidental success, but all that he gained was by patient, untiring, intelligent effort, and with every act underlaid with the broad foundation of inherent honesty.

His success exemplifies the truth of that well-known verse:

The heights by great men reached and kept Were not attained by sudden flight, But they while their companions slept Were toiling upward in the night.

To those of us who had the pleasure and privilege of close association with him was revealed the lovable side of his nature, of which the world at large necessarily could not know. His was a character in which predominated generous, kindly sentiments toward his fellow-men, and these traits brought to him throughout his entire career the loyal support and ardent friendship of everyone with whom he came in contact.

It was this which endeared him to the people of his own State, who knew him well and who always held out to him the richest gifts and highest honors at their command. It was the citizens of Michigan-his friends and neighborshim their governor, who voted for him loyally and steadily for the Presidential nomination in national conventions, and who, when the hands of the country seemed to be raised against him, gave him just and fitting vindication by electing him to the Senate of the United States. We who have worked with him on the floor of the Senate and in committee and have had the privilege of meeting him in his charming home circle can well understand the fealty of his State and the love which its citizens bore him.

It became my sad duty to go to the former home of Senator Alger when his body was consigned to its last earthly resting place, and I saw while there widespread evidences of sincere and heartfelt grief. The people of his home loved him as we, who for the past six years have associated with him here, loved him, and they, as we, mourn his death, knowing and appreciating his noble traits and good deeds.

Such a character does not live in vain. Rich, he did not misuse his wealth, but kept it employed in the busy marts of commerce that his fellow-men should share in its productiveness, and of his surplus he gave abundantly to the poor and needy. Powerful in politics, he was never domineering, but always was mindful of the feelings and wishes of others and sympathetic with the people themselves. Able to live in idleness, yet he did the daily task which came to his hand as faithfully and cheerfully as the humblest workman.

He has departed, but he has left in faithful effort, good deeds, and high accomplishments "a monument more lasting than brass and more sublime than the regal erection of pyramids, which neither the wasting shower, the unavailing north wind, nor an innumerable succession of years and a flight of seasons shall be able to demolish."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I can only speak in tribute to the memory of Senator Alger the word which my heart shall send to my lips.

I knew him long and well, and as I have listened to the eulogies which have been pronounced upon him I have had borne into my mind in an intense way the fact that it is only when we stand by the open grave of a man and cast our eyes along the pathway which he trod from the beginning to the end that accurate judgment of his qualities, of his accomplishments, is possible to us.

Senator Alger afforded for all time by his career indubitable evidence of the possession in full measure of many great and noble qualities. It was a long and toilsome journey, Mr. President, from the village in Ohio, where as a youth, unaided by adventitious circumstances, he began his struggle to the eminence upon which he died.

No man without noble purpose, well-justified ambition, strong fiber, and splendid qualities in abundance could have carved out and left behind him such a career. His pathway was from the beginning upward, and all along it, at every stage of it, he discharged well every duty which manhood could demand; and all along he scattered with generous hand deeds of kindness and helpfulness to those who were in need, sowing the seed which blossomed in fragrance along his pathway and made it beautiful.

A man of great commercial genius, born to command, of unquenchable spirit, of indomitable will, he wrought wonderful success in the realm of business; and, Mr. President, it needs not to be said that in that realm no one ever dared to impeach his honor. No man without commercial honor would have wrought and accomplished in that field what he wrought and accomplished.

The governor of a great State, carrying the splendid administrative ability which had given him triumph in the walks of business life to the capital in the service of his people, he there vindicated their confidence and the wisdom of their choice of him to be their executive.

And then turning aside from business and turning aside from home-and no man ever lived who held in his heart a tenderer love for home and wife and children-he betook himself to the field of battle, and, as has been stated here, in over sixty battles and skirmishes he bared his breast to the bullets of the enemy and offered his life that the Union might abide, and that what was its flag then should forever remain its flag, rising, Mr. President, from the humble but noble position of a private soldier to be captain, major, lieutenant-colonel, colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general, the latter brevet rank, gallantry on the field of battle. When his friends and When his friends and fellow-citizens lowered his inanimate body into the grave which had been digged in their midst, there was upon it more than one scar which he had received in defense of this Government.

As Secretary of War—I allude to that, Mr. President, with some pain—I saw him often while he was in the Cabinet. I do not intend to go into the subject save in a few brief words. His service there was difficult of performance in some of its aspects. Demands were made upon him which in the circumstances no man could completely meet, the fault not being his, but elsewhere, lying here, perhaps, and in the other House.

I remember calling upon him one morning in the War Department during the war with Spain, and as he walked from a little gathering of people he staggered with physical weakness. His face was as white as it was as he lay in his coffin, but his eyes were bright. I begged him to go to his home, and he made this characteristic response, "This is my place." I speak of it to show that wonderful spirit and characteristic devotion to duty, which was the law of his life to stand at the post to which duty had assigned him; and there can never be anywhere or in any time a more beautiful illustration of that loyal spirit and sense of duty than that which he exhibited in the later period of his life while a Senator of the United States.

We noted from day to day his growing weakness. He knew as he moved around the Chamber and sought the committee rooms for service there that the Angel of Death walked by his side with outstretched hand, ready any moment to grip his heart. But that courage, that devotion to duty, that scorn which he always had for rest in the hours of work buoyed him up and held him to this place almost to the last moment of his eventful life.

He was a public-spirited citizen always. He was a generous, kindly man whose sympathies were always easily aroused, helpful to those who deserved help and helpful, alas, to many who did not.

Mr. President, he was criticised for having made poor appointments to the Army during the war with Spain. I think he would have done any kindness for me which he felt at liberty to do. I may say here that he never, during his term as Secretary of War, once gave an appointment to the Army from my State, for each time—and there were not many—I took to him an order for the appointment from the President—and no President could have been more careful than was the Executive of that day in making wise selections—but it was impossible, as the world must know, in organizing suddenly a great army to choose with accuracy the men for command in small places and in high places. The wonder is, Mr. President, that so few men were commissioned from civil life during that war who proved themselves incompetent or otherwise unworthy.

Senator Alger was generous to his friends and forgiving to Senator Alger was generous to his friends and forgiving to his enemies, save where a wrong done him was such that no self-respecting man could forgive.

Mr. President, this ceremonial seems like parting again with an old and dear friend. I think it can not be found that in any station or in any relation of life Russell A. Alger was other than devoted and faithful. No sweeter act or juster act ever was done by a great State than was done by the State of Michigan when she sent him into this Chamber and to that desk with her certificate of confidence in his honor and in his ability. It was a proud distinction for him; but I believe it left unhealed a wound which never could be healed.

Mr. President, his career is ended; his day's work is done. Michigan has made many notable contributions to the public service of the United States in civil and military life; she has great treasure in the fame of her public men; but among all her treasures she will cherish as a precious imperishable jewel the name and fame of Russell A. Alger.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, the death of Senator Alger has removed from the Senate one of the most attractive and useful men connected with our public affairs. It has been one of the happy experiences of my service here that Senator Alger's desk was next to mine and that I have had a daily opportunity to enjoy the advantage of intimate conversation and acquaintance with him. Long ago I learned to admire his record, both as a soldier and a statesman. But during the years in which I have been sitting here by his side I have been permitted to study his character more closely and to confirm all the good opinions of other years.

The life which we live in this world is so strange, so hard to understand, so wrapped in mysteries which baffle all our questions, that I have allowed the habit to grow upon me of finding out from others, and especially from those who by reason of their opportunities and their experience have sounded all its depths and shoals, what they think of it and what it means to them. It is a familiar saying that no message comes back to us from the shadows which fall upon the end of every human life. But it is almost as true that we are cut off from any communication with our fellow-travelers that one can not understand what the others are saying, as the great procession moves along toward the silence of the grave. Even those who are working at the same task, walking side by side upon the same road, appear like strangers, speaking different languages and answering each other's questions in a foreign tongue.

The most pathetic utterance of the Master recorded in the gospel, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me?" is in a lesser sense true of all who meet each other as we journey together, till at last we shall know as we are known. It is this isolation, this separation from our fellows, this privacy upon which it is so hard to intrude, this miraculous thing, which Lord Tennyson in his old age speaks of as the "abysmal depth of personality" which has invented the sweet vocabulary of childhood and discovered for our comfort such words as "lover," "comrade," "friend," and kept them at the center of all great literatures and close to the heart of our religious faith.

One day I asked General Alger what he had found in life which most fully explained its meaning and threw the most light upon the problem of its worth. Almost without waiting he said that he had found in his home, in his wife, and in his children its most complete interpretation. And so no biography of him can exhibit any of the secrets of his strength or explain the inspiration of his achievements which does not have in the foreground a picture of the one whom he chose in the years of his young manhood to be the partner of his joys and sorrows.

I asked him one day, after he had told me somewhat of his early struggles and spoken in modest words of the success in business and public life which had come to him, what part of it gave him the most satisfaction, what among all the things he had tried to do he thought of with the most pride. He said that if he had to leave everything else out he would prefer to keep the recollection of the years which he had spent in the old Union Army, defending the flag of his country. I could not get him to speak of the battles he had helped to fight, of the long marches, of the victories in which he had a share. He left all that to others, for he knew how truly the mighty work which the Union Army wrought and the final victory which it won belonged to millions of men and women and how insignificant after all were the trophies of rank and high command.

Whoever writes the biography of Russell A. Alger will not be fortunate in estimating the importance of his public service if he does not subordinate the fame which he acquired in the chief office of a great State, in the Cabinet of the President at an important epoch, in the Senate of the United States, to those four years of arduous responsibility in the civil war. For more than once I have heard him say that the greatest office which he had ever held, the distinction among his fellow-men which he prized the most, was commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, that peaceful, unarmed host which, in humble quarters scattered throughout the land, preserves the traditions of our heroic age.

And so it seemed fitting to me, as I stood the other day with multiplied thousands of his neighbors and friends about his grave, that the ministers of the church should stand apart and let an old Union soldier open the worn and faded ritual of the post of which he was a member and read, in the light of the setting sun, made weird and beautiful by a landscape of snow, the parting benediction of his comrades upon his memory.

Senator Alger was a representative American business man, and, like nearly all such men, he had to fight the battle of life upon his own resources. It was a favorite doctrine of his that a young man who begins with nothing to rely upon except his own energy has an altogether better chance than the children of affluence and fortune. And it is certain that his own career is not peculiar in the illustration which it gives of the truth of this proverbial philosophy. At any rate, it does not take very much imagination to discern behind the splendid outcome of his life, as lumberman, miner, merchant, manufacturer, railroad builder, and captain of industry, the poor boy, starting out in the world with nothing in his favor except health and strength and the ambition to win the prize.

We live in times when the public ask troublesome questions about great riches, when the cross-examination of swollen wealth is going on, not only in the courts, but about the firesides of the people; when the fierce light of curiosity, turning rapidly to anger, beats upon present-day accumulations of money, and when men are looking for some way to restore the old standards of integrity, which are, after all, still held in respect even in the market place. The criticism is not directed against the law of property which we have inherited from our fathers; it is aimed at those schemes of speculation through which the public interest is sacrificed to carry out the plans of avarice and greed. It is undoubtedly stimulated by the want of wisdom often seen among those who have captured the highest stakes. Instead of hiding their plunder like the old-time pirates, they often inflame the resentment of the unincorporated multitudes by vulgar ostentation and sometimes fill the newspapers of Europe and America with the scandals of their profligate living.

There was a time when everybody who had any property felt a certain common interest with all property rights, however large. But it would be idle to conceal the fact that the day seems to be approaching when the public mind is learning to discriminate between the honorable accumulation of property and the business methods which have already brought shame upon some departments of industry and commerce.

I do not know how great General Alger's financial fortune actually was, but probably not as great as commonly supposed. But whatever it was, there was no stain of dishonor upon it. It represented the capacity, the patient industry, and the genius for affairs which has never been without honor in the world of business. And it would be hard to find a better test of the real character of the man than to observe how little his wealth affected his manners; how slight its impression upon his daily walk and conversation; in short, how much greater the man was than his possessions. And when I looked upon the streets of the city where he lived on the day of his funeral and saw them crowded mile after mile with men and women and children standing with solemn faces and uncovered heads, it did not require the testimony of neighbors to let me know that he had used his fortune for the welfare of the people where his lot was cast. A rich man with his heart full of love to humanity is God's best gift to modern society.

I would have the young men of America, without measuring the possibilities of their success in money, treat the accumulations which come to them as the result of honorable effort, not as a master to put them into slavery, but as a servant to be sent out upon errands of philanthropy to help and bless the world in which we live.

Such a man was Senator Alger. And while in this Chamber his voice was seldom heard in debate, no one of us can doubt that when his people sent him here they contributed to the real deliberations of the Senate a strong and valuable guidance, too often wanting in our management of practical affairs.

If I were called upon to point out the most conspicuous public service of General Alger in civil life, I would recall labors as Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Mc-I had an opportunity to know something of the burdens that were suddenly placed upon him, of the difficulties which he had to surmount, and of the noise which beset his office after the brief conflict with Spain was over. I do not know that anybody else has been impressed by it, but I have often wondered how it came about that nearly everybody con-nected with the chief events arising out of our intervention in behalf of the colonies of Spain sooner or later was called to pass through humiliation, and one at least through despair and suffering even unto death.

One day, sitting by Senator Alger's desk, I ventured to comment on this depressing aspect of our great victory, forgetting for a moment that he himself had tasted the bitter draft, commended to his lips by the morbid and misguided opinion of some of his countrymen, and I can not forget the quiet smile of the old soldier of General Grant's army as he explained the interesting phenomenon. His notion was that every generation has in its heart a vague longing for exploits and far-sounding That we get tired of feeding our enthurenown of its own. siasm on the fame of other times. For that reason, as the war with Spain came on, so many people desired to get into it that the size of it was exaggerated in the popular imagination, and nearly everybody had a dull sensation of having been robbed of a chance to play a part on the stage of an epoch-making drama. The country was filled with talkative heroes, better suited to command the Pacific than Dewey, better suited to take Santiago than Shafter, better suited to blockade seaports than Sampson, better suited to stop up the mouths of harbors than Hobson, and better suited to equip and put armies in the field than the Secretary of War. As a net result of this surplus military energy this unissued stock in a patriotic enterprise grotesquely overcapitalized in the public mind, an audience was waiting for the campaign of abuse and slander, directed not only against the War Department, but against nearly all our movements on land and sea, There have been few more discreditable episodes in the annals of American public opinion.

It brings to mind, as we recall it, a chapter in the quaint fiction of Rabelais, in which the adventurer whose perils he records reaches the country of Tapestry and finds there, being attracted to the spot, as he plainly says, by a loud and various noise like that of paper mills, "a diminutive, monstrous, misshapen old fellow called 'Hearsay.' His mouth was slit up to his ears and in it were seven tongues, each of them cleft into seven parts. However, he chattered, tattled, and prated, with all the seven at once, of different matters and in divers languages. He had as many ears all over his head and the rest of his body as Argus formerly had eyes, and was blind as a beetle and had the palsy in his legs. About him stood an innumerable company of men and women, gaping, listening, and hearing very intensely. So that those men of happy memories grew learned in a trice and would most fluently talk with you of a world of prodigious things, the hundredth part of which would take up a man's whole life to be fully known—every individual word of it by hearsay." Having discovered "forty cartloads of modern historians lurking behind a piece of tapestry, where they were at it dingdong, privately scribbling the Lord knows what, and making rare work of it," he ventures to ask the question, "What sort of study they applied themselves to?" and was told that 'from their youth they learned to be evidences, affidavit men, and vouchers, and were instructed in the art of swearing, in which they soon became such proficients that when they left that country and went back into their own they set up for themselves and very honestly lived by their trade of evidencing, positively giving their testimony of all things whatsoever to those who feed them most roundly to do a job of journey work for them; and all this by hearsay."

Wherever printing is free and speech is free, the infirmities of human nature seldom allow institutions like that to be closed even for repairs.

But the friends of General Alger, recalling, as I feel bound to do to-day, the injustice which was visited upon him, no longer see the need of defending him, for their thoughts turn without bitterness from those dismal months, now almost incredible to the American people, to the figure of the old soldier, sitting in his library in the pride of conscious rectitude, setting down in writing, for his children and for his countrymen, the whole history of the Spanish war, its greatness and its littleness, its meaning and influence upon the national life, trusting his own fame to the simple record of his official labors and to the impartial judgment of posterity.

The State of Michigan, in which he had lived so long, to whose material development he had contributed so much, was quick to challenge the imputation involved in his retirement under such circumstances from public life. His election to the Senate was recognized everywhere as the answer of those who knew him best to the clamor with which his reputation had been assailed. He had borne with honor the chief dignity of the Commonwealth. By common consent its people had lovingly presented his name to the nation for the highest office of the Republic, and they lost no time, although he was broken by the cares and burdens of life, and though the infirmity of years was already upon him, to console his old age by their commission to sit in this historic Chamber and end his days in the service of the community who had trusted and believed in him for more than half a century.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, I feel I can not let this occasion pass without offering a few remarks, Senator Alger was born in Ohio, and only a few miles from my own home. He spent of his youth in my home county and prepared for admission to the bar in my home city. In later years he was a frequent visitor there, where he had social and business interests, and he always enjoyed the admiration and respect of the people of his native State. knew him best loved him most. Those of us who

The career of Russell A. Alger is typical of what is best worthy of imitation in American life. Born in poverty in a log cabin which did not even possess a ridgepole, yet he enjoyed the rich heritage of descending from a long line of sturdy, respected, God-fearing ancestors of the best Puritan stock. They had been pioneers of early New England, his great-grandfather a brave soldier in the Revolutionary war, and his own father, early in the last century, joined the band of stalwart pioneers who moved from Connecticut to the Western Reserve, where he broke a clearing in the wilderness, put up his cabin, and engaged in the stern struggle for existence which nature requires of her favored sons.

Young Alger was bereft of his parents at the early age of 12, and was left with a young brother and sister who looked to him for guidance and support. He spent the remainder of his boy-hood years on the farm of an uncle, working at first for board and clothes and three months' schooling in each year. He attended country school and academy for such meager educational advantages as the neighborhood afforded, and for two years himself taught school. His first cash employment was for $3 a month and board, but for part of that year he was paid $5 a month, from which he clothed himself and helped his brother and sister. His earnings gradually increased to $20 a month, the highest wage paid at that time to farm laborers. He was industrious, faithful, and ambitious, and, like thousands of other American boys, felt that the larger opportunities lay in the town rather than in the country. He moved to Akron, then a small country village, and entered upon the study of law. His preceptors were able and successful lawyers of more than State-wide reputation. One was Christopher P. Wolcott, then attorney-general of Ohio and from 1862 to 1863 Assistant Secretary of War under Edwin M. Stanton, with whom he had read law. The other preceptor, who still survives, was William H. Upson, for four years an honored member of the National House of Representatives and for a dozen years judge of the supreme and circuit courts of Ohio.

Alger was admitted to the bar at Columbus in 1859, and en-tered a law office in Cleveland. The qualities which brought him success in other lines of industry would certainly have given him great success at the bar, but he remained in the practice only a few months, failing health forcing him out of doors and compelling him to follow life in the open air. He moved to Michigan, and with borrowed capital engaged in the lumber business. The war soon broke out and he promptly offered his services to his country. He enlisted in August, 1861, and the next month was mustered in as a captain of the Second Michigan Cavalry. For three years he served in that branch of the Army and rendered gallant and conspicuous service. His name is closely linked with the names of those two incomparable cavalry leaders, Sheridan and Custer, and had his military training been equal to theirs his military reputation would have been no less, for he was a born commander of men, with natural military genius.

It is hard to realize that this quiet, retiring, modest gentleman who has unobtrusively moved in and out among us for the past four years was one of the most dashing and courageous cavalry commanders in the civil war, but such was the case. No portion of his career shines so resplendent, and no braver or more gallant soldier served in either army. Always the idol of his men, he often led them into desperate situations, but they were always eager to follow where he led. It has been said it was Alger who requested the governor of Michigan to issue a commission to Philip H. Sheridan, then an unknown captain of infantry, as colonel of a cavalry regiment, and Sheridan himself bears witness that it was Alger who, on the 25th day of May, 1862, handed to him telegraphic orders announcing his appointment as colonel of the Second Michigan Cavalry. The two soldiers served together in the siege of Corinth, Miss., and are mentioned side by side in Gen. Gordon Granger's report for having well and faithfully performed their whole duty, and meriting the highest commendation from their general and their country in that compaign.

ALGER led the line of skirmishers in the advance on Boonville on May 30, 1862, which led to its capture, and was mentioned by Colonel Sheridan as having rendered important service. A month later the enemy, with over 5,000 mounted men, attempted to recapture Boonville and attacked Sheridan, who was in command of two regiments, with only about 800 officers and men. When the attack developed the vastly superior force of the enemy Sheridan detached Alger with 90 sabers and directed him to make a detour around the flank of the enemy and attack him in column in the rear. Sheridan in his memoirs says of this movement that he was "confident of Alger's determination to accomplish the purpose for which he set out," and the movement was entirely successful. Sheridan attacked in front with his entire force at the same time Alger struck the rear, and the enemy stampeded and fied. Alger himself was slightly wounded and taken prisoner, but escaped and returned to his command the same day. It was a brilliant charge and nobly executed, and this engagement made Sheridan a brigadier-general and Alger a major. Every promotion that came to him was won by bravery and courage on the field of battle. On the 16th of October, 1862, he was made lieutenant-colonel of the Sixth Michigan Cavalry and ordered to the Army of the Potomac. On February 28, 1863, he was appointed colonel of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry, and his command was the first Union force to enter Gettysburg when threatened by the approach of General Lee and his army. He rendered distinguished service here and participated in the several charges made by his regiment on the fateful 3d of July. He was wounded July 8 at Boonsboro, Md., while in pursuit of the enemy, but returned to duty the following September. To the end of his service he commanded this regiment, which was in Custer's brigade, except for short periods when he was temporarily in command of the brigade, and he was one of Custer's most trusted and fearless regimental commanders. He repulsed an attack of the enemy in the operations around Culpeper Court House in September, 1863, his regiment being in advance of the brigade and passing through the town. In fact, Alge's entire military career while any fighting was going on was spent on the firing line, in the advance, in the skirmish line, or making desperate charges with his men. General Custer honored him as he did no other subordinate. In the winter of 1863-4 he performed special services for President Lincoln, receiving orders from him direct and visiting nearly all the armies in the field.

In the movement from the Rapidan to the James in June, 1864, he participated in several brilliant engagements. Of this famous charge at Trevilian Station, June 11, General Sheridan says:

The cavalry engagement of the 11th and 12th was by far the most brilliant one of the present campaign. The enemy's loss was very heavy. My loss and captured will not exceed 160. They are principally from the Fifth Michigan Cavalry. This regiment, Col. R. A. Alger, gallantly charged down the Gordonsville road, capturing 1,500 horses and about 800 prisoners, but were finally surrounded and had to give them up.

Alger's command in this charge did not exceed 300 men. Though surrounded by the enemy, he cut his way through a column of troops and rejoined the Union Army. For his distinguished gallantry in this engagement Colonel Alger was brevetted a brigadier-general. His own official report of this engagement was most modest. The only tone of exultation it contains was over the fact that through a severe and fatiguing campaign his regiment had not lost a single man from disease, although the total loss in killed and wounded and missing was very great.

The condition of his health compelled him to retire from the Army in October, 1864. He had participated in more than sixty battles and skirmishes, and at the close of the war was brevetted major-general for gallant and meritorious services. He returned home to begin again at the bottom to build for the future. He organized and planned large business enterprises. He acquired wealth, acquired it honestly, and never used it dishonestly. At one time he counted his lumber forests by the hundred square miles. He was a true captain of industry, for he created wealth and distributed it to others. He organized large industries by taking advantage of the opportunities which were open to all men. He was a prophet who looked into the future and foresaw coming demand. He never manipulated the stock market, never made a dollar by speculation, nor tore down what another had built up. When he benefited himself he impoverished no one else, but added to the prosperity of all men with whom he dealt.

His first entrance into politics was in 1884, when his party in Michigan looked for its strongest man in order to regain political control of the State, then administered by the opposition, and named Alger as its candidate. His administration as governor was very popular because of his business methods, his strict honesty, and close attention to duty. He refused a renomination because he could not afford to longer neglect his own business, and he would not slight the State's business for his own.

In the Republican national convention of 1888 he was a formidable candidate for the Presidential nomination and led an enthusiastic and devoted following. On one ballot he received 143 votes out of a total of 830, or more than one-sixth. He was voted for by delegates from twenty-six States and Territories, scattered from Maine to Washington and from Florida to Arizona. In a field of twelve candidates he received on the second ballot the next to the highest vote. After that he never stood lower than third on the list nor received less than 100 votes. On the last ballot, which ballot nominated Harrison, he received 100 votes to 118 for John Sherman, who had led on preceding ballots. No candidate before the convention had a more determined following, and his own State cast its solid vote for him from the beginning to the end of the contest. In this convention was first heard the exclamation, since heard in hundreds and thousands of public gatherings, "Who's all right?" all right." It was applied by the newsboys of Detroit It was applied by the newsboys of Detroit to General ALGER.

He was elected national commander of the Grand Army of the Republic by acclamation in 1889 and was one of the most popular and successful heads of that splendid organization. No soldier was more loved by his comrades who wore the blue.

He was made Secretary of War in President McKinley's Cabinet, with no thought that he would ever be called upon to assume the responsibilities of a war minister. Before the war clouds lowered the American people, with the blind optimism characteristic of them, believed war was impossible. When war did come the nation, as has always been the case in the past, was entirely unprepared. There never was a more popular war, and many times more men offered themselves for service than could be accepted. While there were plenty of men, men as brave and patriotic as ever served the Stars and Stripes, there was a scarcity of every other necessity. There were on hand barely enough of our newly adopted and improved rifles to arm our small Regular Army. The volunteers were equipped with an inferior arm, and our best was not as efficient a weapon as that The volunteers were equipped with an Volunteer regiments had to be sent to carried by the enemy. the firing line carrying cartridges loaded with black powder to face an enemy using only smokeless powder. We had no reserve supply of uniforms or tents, and there was no cloth in the country with which to make the new service uniform required by climatic conditions in a tropical country. The country was surprised and shocked to learn that the State volunteers were The country was not equipped for service, though everyone conversant with the facts well knew such was the case, for in our national blindness we had believed war was impossible. While human passions remain as they have been since passion was born, and national ambitions cross each other, as they always will, war will be a possibility always, and periodically a probability. It has come to the United States once at least in every generation since the nation was born and we have no assurance our future will change that record. No prudent nation will omit insuring itself against the risk of war any more than a prudent householder neglects to insure against the risk of fire. The only effective insurance against war is sufficient preparation for it, and even that protection will not always prevent war. We have profited some by our recent national experience, but further preparation remains to be made before our national security is entirely as-

When the war with Spain came upon us we had a very small but highly trained Army, and a Navy superior to any of its size in the world. Despite our lack of preparedness, the enemy was quickly crushed, both on land and sea. In a short campaign of less than a hundred days Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines were ours for such disposition as we saw fit to make of The nation saw the results and applauded them, but knew little of the terrible strain imposed upon the Secretary of War and his Department in making the necessary preparations. The various supply departments had to be reorganized for providing the munitions of war. "That they were fully provided and that the numerous demands on the industries of our people were met so promptly will remain one of the marvels Such was the verdict of the Commission to Investigate the Conduct of the War Department, and such will be the verdict of history. The Commission reported on the Secretary of War that he "extended to all chiefs of bureaus cordial and full support and promptly responded to every proper demand made upon him by commanding officers." If, as the Commis-sion further found, "there was lacking in the general administration of the War Department during the continuance of the war with Spain that complete grasp of the situation which was essential," who will say that this gallant, fearless soldier, this successful governor, this great captain of industry, whose leading characteristic was his high executive talent, was so much to blame as the departmental system against which more than one strong man has fretted out his heart in vain, trying to overcome its inertia and modernize its antiquated and useless

No army from a temperate zone had ever invaded the Tropics and achieved such magnificent results in such a brief space of time or with so small loss of life from disease. The loss from disease in the army which never left the States was much less than the loss from the same cause during the civil war.

At first came the rush of volunteers attempting to get into the service. The applications for volunteer commissions alone numbered over thirty thousand. Of the large number who were appointed not over half a dozen were personal appointments of the Secretary himself. Mistakes were unavoidably made in the details of organization and preparation, and no secretary could have escaped criticism. The American people alone were to blame for the conditions existing at the outbreak of the war. As in the civil war there was a mad cry, "On to Richmond," long before the Army was ready for such a movement, so there was a mad cry, "On to Habana," when all the conditions and circumstances declared such a movement a most rash and reckless one. War is no holiday pastime, and soldiering is not a trade to be picked up in a few days, and largely because of the lack of experience and knowledge on the part of volunteer officers of the simplest rudiments of camp sanitation epidemics and fevers broke out and many valuable lives were uselessly sacrificed. A state of hysteria developed among the people, aided and abetted by an unbridled and indiscreet press, and the American public, which is prompt to praise and as ready to condemn, like the Roman public at the gladiatorial contests, demanded a victim. It picked out the Secretary of War for its victim, and he was compelled to go. Now that that passion has had time to cool and the conditions of those stirring weeks are weighed with more even balance, the country has a feeling only of kindness and high regard for our warm-hearted, generous friend. He never fell the least in the estimation of the people of his own State, and when the opportunity came they promptly manifested their love and devotion to him by sending him to the Senate, where he would have succeeded himself had he not voluntarily declined to be a candidate for reelection. He was easily the first citizen of Michigan.

He was trained in the hard school of privation and poverty,

He was trained in the hard school of privation and poverty, and, for the perpetuity and vigor of our institutions and our national existence, it is hoped that school will never disappear from among us. He made much of his opportunities, and was a wise administrator of the wealth he acquired. He was generous in his charities, but shunned notoriety. His generosity was "a deep-flowing and continual stream," and no worthy appeal went unanswered. He felt the greatest pride in the esteem and love of his own people. He was loved at home by all classes, but best loved by the poor of his own city. He was incapable of a dishonorable act. He never forgot friends nor their dependents. He fought his foes in the open, and forgave his enemies and his critics. He was patient under abuse. He was true to his friends and his country, always cool and brave under the most trying circumstances, dignified, unassuming, approachable at all times, considerate to others. He was a man justly honored in State and nation, and his loss outside his family circle will nowhere be more deeply felt than in this body, where for four years he was an honored member.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I have listened with genuine satisfaction to the eloquent and just tributes of respect which have been paid to the memory of Russell Alexander Alger, only a few days since a member of this body. Of his services and accomplishments as a United States Senator I shall not speak, as my acquaintance with him in this Chamber covered but little more than a year. I knew him in another and different field. I knew him as a soldier and as a man, and enjoyed his personal friendship for more than a third of a century, and I shall content myself with speaking a few brief words of the deceased as my friend and comrade, and in doing this I appreciate the depths of my poverty of speech.

To lose a friend is the greatest of all losses. Our most en-

To lose a friend is the greatest of all losses. Our most enduring riches are our friends—friends not of a day, but friends that we "grapple to our souls with hooks of steel." It was Emerson, I think, who said, "The only way to have a friend is to be one." The truth of this saying was exemplified in the life of RUSSELL ALEXANDER ALGER. Of him it may be truthfully said that those who knew him best loved him most.

But our dead brother, Mr. President, was more to me than a friend. He was my comrade. The most enduring and tender ties in this life outside of the family circle, I am constrained to believe, are the ties that are welded in the fires of battle between those who have shared, in a common cause, the privations of the camp, the hardships of the march, and the dangers of the battle.

As a citizen he was without reproach; as a soldier he was without fear. To fittingly speak of his record as a soldier would be to recount in no small part the marches and battles of '61 and '65. He was ever upon the firing line, taking an important part in threescore and six battles and skirmishes. For gallant and meritorious services he was brevetted brigadier and major-general of volunteers.

With him, the war ended at Appomattox. Then, in common with those who had borne the battle "with malice toward none, with charity for all," he gladly exchanged the instruments of war for the implements of industry.

But few men have been more highly honored by their States and by the nation than the deceased. Yet, much as he esteemed the honor of being governor, Cabinet minister, and United States Senator, no one or all of these honors did he as highly prize, as he told me in this Chamber a few weeks before his death, as the one of being commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, an organization composed of the survivors of the men who, with him, had followed the flag of our nation as their "pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night."

ors of the men who, with him, had followed the flag of our nation as their "pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night."

He deemed it a blessed privilege to have been an actor in that mighty drama of ages out of which came the conviction universal, more earnest and firm than was ever expressed by the pen of a Hamilton or ever fell from the lips of a Webster, that there is no river, mountain, or other natural boundary line that can ever divide this Republic; that we are one people, one in law, one in hope, and one in destiny. He rejoiced that he had been spared to see the day when the men of the blue and of the gray recall the scenes of the civil war without passion and review its results without regret.

His was one of the gentlest and kindliest spirits I ever knew. His life was an inspiration to the young man of brain, industry, and honesty. He has pitched his tent with the old field marshal on the other side. His life being without reproach, he marched through the "valley of the shadow of death" seeing nothing here to regret or there to fear.

It is a consolation that in the presence of our dead there comes to us an affirmative answer to the question of ages: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, it was the desire of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] to be present at these services, but I received a letter from him this morning stating that illness detained him at his home. I ask that the letter may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. Foraker's letter is as follows:

Washington, February 23, 1907.

DEAR SENATOR BURROWS: An attack of the grip prevents my attending the Senate and participating in the memorial exercises in honor of Senator Alger. I greatly regret that such is the case, for it would be to me a labor of love to join with you and his other colleagues and friends in paying proper tribute to such a splendid character.

It was my good fortune to know him intimately for many years. He first attracted the attention of the American people as a dashing cavalry officer in the civil war, where, on account of his own merit and gallant services at the front, he rose to high rank, succeeded to important commands, and won great distinction. He was a typical volunteer soldier of the Union

As commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, as the governor of Michigan, as the Secretary of War, and, finally, as United States Senator, he filled conspicuous places and rendered great services to his comrades, his State, and the nation. But great as are his claims upon us because of these distinguished services, I shall always think of him first because of his excellent qualities as a man. Amid the busy cares of his active life he never forgot the claims upon him of others. He was one of the most considerate of men. I never knew one freer from envy, jealousy, malice, and every other kind of ill disposition toward others. He was always modest, generous, even tempered, and lovable.

Nothing gratified him so much as to do a favor or extend help to those who were honestly struggling against odds in the battle of life.

His family relations and home life were ideal. There love and affection reigned supreme, and so it is that from whatever view may be taken of his life, character, and public services there comes a real inspiration to emulate his example.

Again regretting that I can not be present to elaborate these suggestions, I remain,

Very truly, yours, etc.,

J. B. FORAKER.

Hon. J. C. Burrows,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, to pay tribute to the deserving, to shower eulogy upon the dead, is the custom of ages and the privilege of friends.

This historic Chamber, the scene of so many fierce political controversies and the abode of so much affectionate good will, is at once the tribune of popular expression, the forum of re-flection, and the theater of action harmoniously combined.

Here the voices of the strong have been raised for the weak and the soldier of destiny has drawn his sword in royal battle. Here the favored son of fortune and the victor over circumstances have poured out their souls in tuneful harmony, and history recalls no loftler aspirations than have moved the hearts and minds of men in this high place.

It is fitting, indeed, that from the vexatious affairs of state we turn in tearful contemplation to one whose life typified his country's greatness and in whose death the shadows fall tinted with mellow glow.

Born in a humble cottage, his early life burdened with the perplexities of poverty and the difficult problems of existence, he soon mastered both himself and circumstance, and marked a royal trail through the forest of life, romantic and thrilling in individual intensity.

To make his way alone from a humble frontier cabin to this exalted station, leaving monuments of generosity and enterprise along the stormy path he traversed is, indeed, the priceless privilege of few.

Laborer, lawyer, soldier, statesman, this busy man unlocked with his magic key the hidden treasures of commerce, and with dauntless spirit leveled forests, cleft mountains in twain, and delved with pick and shovel and spade, guided only by his flickering lamp and his stout heart, to the choicest gifts of mother earth.

Then with lavish hand he scattered his generous bounty into the lap of the poor and the unfortunate until the widow and the orphan, the sick and the distressed, came to look upon this goodly man as religion personified, while that vast army of newsboys in the city of his home, whom he met each year in princely conclave, came to look upon his kindly face with reverential awe, drawing from his inspiring life lessons of comfort and hope, pointing the way to the very summit of the possi-bilities of American manhood.

To blaze the way with ax and saw, to pore with patient vigil over the baffling intricacies of the law, and just as he had taken to his heart the queenly wife who sustained and aided him with such noble dignity and womanly poise in life's great battle, to leave all and risk his life upon countless battlefields is to do that which only a manly man can do.

Obstacles only stimulated him. Danger fired his imagination and strengthened his resolution; poverty spurred him to greater endeavor, and disappointment could not discourage him nor alter his plans.

Tall, lithe, agile, strong, he broke the bonds of circumstance and cleared his own pathway to the highest goal, never doing injustice to any man. His fascinating figure became familiar to his countrymen as he moved with modest but intrepid mien, whether in the thickest of the fray upon the field of battle or in executive, administrative, or Senatorial office. His radiating and inspiring personality stimulated alike the old and the young; and when at last the strain of active life bore too heavily upon him and his big heart broke, his noble character took on again the sweetness of gentle childhood, and he found his greatest comfort in mingling quietly and uncomplainingly among his fellows or in sharing the joys of his beautiful home, where worthy sons and sympathetic daughters vied with wife and mother in a home life that was perfect in its loveliness and in which no discordant note was ever heard, Senator Alger died like the soldier that he was. In the midst of every earthly blessing, richly dowered with the love of friends, he sat under the sword of fate, unmoved by fear and unawed by the shadow of death.

He passed away in the gentle quiet of the early dawn, the morning sun filling his death chamber with rich radiance, typical of his life among men.

About his bier gathered the mighty of State and nation. Soldiers in martial array rode sadly but proudly by his corse. The flag of his country, which he had defended so bravely, was his pall, enshrouding the dead chieftain in its graceful folds, while the remembrance of his loving countrymen constitutes his priceless mausoleum.

Mr. President, from this Chamber Michigan has gathered up the sacred dust of many noble sons who have borne with conspicuous honor the commission of our State.

Cass and Howard, Chandler and Ferry, Conger and Bald-win, Stockbridge and McMillan wrought mightily and faithfully for their country, and the people of our Commonwealth treasure their ashes in memory's golden urn.

To-day we lovingly lay upon the shores of the limitless sea this last contribution to our immortal dead.

Oh! Unseen oarsman, gently, lovingly, and tenderly bear him across the dark river, made wider by our affection and deepened by our tears.

This Chamber may have echoed with more eloquent voices, and abler statesmen may have trod this matchless way; but no kindlier, gentler, manlier man was ever carried through yonder portals than the late modest, unassuming Senator from Michi-

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HITT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolutions from the House of Representatives, which were read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES February 17, 1907.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. ROBERT R. Hitt, late a Member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I submit the following resolutions, and ask that they may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois proposes resolutions, which will be read by the Secretary.

The resolutions were read, and unanimously agreed to, as

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow on account of the death of Hon. ROBERT R. HITT, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be suspended in order that fitting tributes be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the widow and family of the deceased.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, this hour has been set apart that we may review the life, services, and character of a man well known to the majority of Members of this Senate, and with whom I was intimately associated, in public and private life, since our school days together, more than fifty years ago.

speak of the late Hon. Robert R. Hitt, who served as a Member of Congress from the State of Illinois for almost a quarter of a century.

Mr. President, few men in public life occupied so high a place in the esteem and estimation of the people of his State and country as did Mr. HITT.

He was born in Urbana, Champaign County, Ohio, on Janu-

His father, the Rev. Thomas S. Hitt, settled in Ogle County, Ill., in 1837, and this continued to be Mr. Hirr's home until the time of his death. His father was a Methodist minister, a man of force and character, one of the foremost citizens of his portion of the State, and it was through his effort that the Rock River Seminary, at Mount Morris, Ill., a prominent institution of learning in the early days of the State, was established.

The late Representative attended the Rock River Seminary, and, with Governor Beveridge, the distinguished John A. Rawlins, the late Congressman G. L. Fort, John Hitt, and others, were classmates of mine. It was there that I first met and learned to know and appreciate his character, and the intimacy thus early formed continued until his death.

Mr. Hirr was a thorough student. I never knew a young man who was a more constant reader and who seemed never to forget anything he once read.

He received his first start in life through his knowledge of phonography. As a very young man he took a deep interest in shorthand and soon became one of the earliest and most capable stenographers in the West.

The first notable service which Mr. Hirr performed and which attracted the attention of the country to him was his reports of the Lincoln-Douglas debates in 1858. He accompanied Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Douglas to Ottawa, Freeport, Jonesboro, Charleston, Galesburg, Quincy, and Alton, Ill., and it was through his proficiency as a stenographer that millions of intensely interested readers all over this country were enabled to have a daily verbatim report of this greatest of all political discussions, involving the most momentous issues, ever held in this or any other country.

In his Twenty Years of Congress, James G. Blaine characterizes the Lincoln-Douglas debates of 1858 as "a discussion which at the time was so interesting as to enchain the attention of a nation, in its immediate effect so striking as to affect the organization of party, in its subsequent effect so powerful as to change the fate of millions."

Douglas was already a great national figure—one of the ablest of the leaders of a Senate which included in its membership as great a number of eminent statesmen and notable men as were ever before or since gathered together in this Chamberwhile Mr. Lincoln was then comparatively unknown outside of his own State. One can scarcely realize now the intense interest which those debates awakened in every part of this country. They had a tremendous effect upon the public sentiment of the day. Lincoln's masterly effort challenged the admiration of the people, and it was his wonderful success in this debate which finally culminated two years later in his election as President of the United States.

Lincoln became much attached to the young reporter and would decline to begin the discussions until sure that HITT was

The story is told of an interesting occurrence which took place at Freeport, where one of the debates was held.

A stand was erected in a field adjacent to the city. Thousands of people gathered about the platform. The speakers were ready. The throng was impatient. The tall form of Lincoln arose. He looked anxiously over the crowd. He called out, "Where's Hitt? Is Hitt present?" Hitt, from the extreme outskirts of the living mass, answered, "Here I am, but I can not get to the platform." The good-natured people understood the situation. They seized the slender youth and passed him over their heads to the stand.

Mr. Hitt's next important service was rendered as secretary of the Davis-Holt commission, sent to Missouri to investigate the Frémont régime in that portion of the country. long, laborious, and important work, as the voluminous report prepared by him and still preserved in the archives of Congress will show.

After the conclusion of this service Mr. HITT became assoclated in a confidential capacity with that commanding figure of the civil war, Edwin M. Stanton, Lincoln's splendid Secretary of War.

All during the civil war and later Mr. Hirr was employed in many confidential capacities, and his ability and proficiency were so well recognized that his services were constantly sought by commissions, by committees of Congress, by military courts, and by the Executive Departments.

After the return from an extended trip to Europe and the Holy Land in 1871 he accompanied, as its secretary, the Commission sent to Santo Domingo by President Grant to inquire into the resources of the country, with a view to its annexation. Mr. Hirr prepared for the Commission a detailed report, which is still one of the best authorities we have on that unsettled

President Grant, like President Lincoln, had great respect for and confidence in Mr. Hrrr, his capacity and ability, and in 1874 he appointed him as secretary of the United States legation at Paris, which position he filled, with great credit to himself and his country, for more than six years.

That most popular American statesman, James G. Blaine, when he became Secretary of State under President Garfield, immediately tendered Mr. Hitt, whose personal friend he was, the position of Assistant Secretary of State. The tender of the position came as a surprise, but after some hesitation he accepted. He continued as Mr. Blaine's principal assistant until Mr. Arthur became President, when he voluntarily retired with his chief.

Although Mr. Hitt had held many important positions prior to 1882 and had enjoyed in the highest degree the respect, esteem, and confidence of the great public men of the day, commencing with Lincoln, Douglas, and Stanton, continuing with Grant, Garfield, and Blaine, his public career really commenced when he entered Congress in 1882. The nomination was not solicited. It was tendered to him. For twenty-four years he continued to represent his district in Congress, and so much pride did the people of his district take in him that he seldom had opposition in his own party and he was at times elected by majorities ranging from fifteen to more than seventeen thousand.

Twenty-four years in the House is a long term of service. Very few men in our history have had so long, continuous, and honorable service in the House of Representatives.

The House is a great forum in which to achieve distinction. Many of our Presidents achieved, at least in part, that distinction through the reputations they made as Members of the House. The reputation of a Member of the House is made only as a result of individual effort and ability. Here in the Senate seniority and long service do much. A Member of Congress, who can serve nearly a quarter of a century and retire with the reputation Mr. Hirr had, is no ordinary man. He must in the highest degree have had extraordinary ability.

His long service abroad and in the State Department, his knowledge of our foreign affairs, his ability peculiarly adapted him for service on the Foreign Affairs Committee. He was soon made a member of that committee and later he became its chairman, in which position he continued for many years and until his death. A more distinguished and able chairman that committee has never had.

Mr. Hirr occupied an unique position in the House and his death leaves a vacancy which can not easily be filled. In many respects he resembled the late Cushman K. Davis. Like Mr. Davis in the Senate, he took comparative little interest in current legislation, but when any great subject affecting our foreign relations was under discussion he immediately became in the fullest sense leader of the House, just as Mr. Davis, under similar circumstances, became the leader of the Senate.

I think it will be admitted that he was more thoroughly conversant with all that pertains to our foreign relations than any other Member of that body.

Subjects affecting our foreign relations should be above partisanship. Partisanship should cease at our own shores, and questions pertaining to our relations with other governments should be considered and disposed of without regard to party affiliation. But when, unfortunately, such questions have been debated from a partisan standpoint, Mr. Hirr was naturally selected as the leader of his party on the floor of the House. How well he merited that distinction has been often testified to by his colleagues, and the record of his many able speeches in Congress will demonstrate.

His last great speech was a defense of the Administration on the recognition of Panama as an independent Government. It was, I believe, the first speech delivered in either House clearly and forcibly defending the President's position from the standpoint of international law. Even those who disagreed with Mr. Hirt were compelled to admit that it was a most able effort.

He was appointed by President McKinley as a member of the commission to frame a form of government for Hawaii, and, with the senior Senator from Alabama and myself as the other members of the commission, spent some time in Hawaii making a personal investigation and framing a suitable bill providing for its government.

Mr. Hitt was not a politician. He knew very little of the intricacies or machinery of politics. He was purely the statesman, and fortunately he represented an unusually intelligent and appreciative constituency, who took great pride in his reputation and standing in Congress and continued him in the position he graced so well as long as he lived.

In demeanor Mr. Hift was always the thoroughly cultivated gentleman in the best acceptance of that term—quiet and modest, reserved and thoughtful, but at the same time always approachable. When induced to take part in either private conversation or debate on the rostrum or on the floor of the House he always proved himself master of the subject. He was scholarly, a man of broad culture, speaking and writing several languages with ease and fluency, and a student all his life.

He would have made a great Secretary of State, and at one time, not many years ago, I had every reason to suppose that he would be invited to assume the State portfolio. Had he lived and retained his health, I feel certain that this Government, on his retirement from Congress, would have availed itself of his services as an ambassador to one of the important European countries.

But it seemed decreed otherwise, and he passed away at his summer home at Narragansett Pier, R. I., September 20, 1906, surrounded by those he loved best, well and favorably known by the diplomats and statesmen of Europe, mourned by his district and State, respected and esteemed by his colleagues in Congress and by the people of the whole country.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, first impressions are the most vivid. They dwell longest in the memory. They remain clear and sharp in outline when later memories grow blurred. This is as true of new experiences or of a new course of life as of a new country upon which the glance of the traveler rests for So when a man comes to Washington and begins his service in Congress, the figures and events of his first year stand out more clearly in his recollections than many which have followed them. Among the men whom I remember best when I first entered Congress, twenty years ago, was Mr. Hirr. He was one of the leaders, one of the recognized leaders of the House even then. Yet he seldom spoke, and scarcely ever took part in the running debates of the daily sessions. But whenever he took the floor he had the complete attention of the House and its perfect confidence in all questions in which party lines were not drawn. His especial subject was foreign affairs, and he was the leading member, and during all his later years chairman, of the great committee charged with that important subject. His knowledge of our foreign relations, of our diplomatic history, and of the diplomatic history of Europe was unsurpassed. There was no subject, no question involving our relations with other countries, upon which he could not at a moment's notice call out a wealth of information, not only as to the leading principles and essential conditions presented, but as to all the details, both personal and political, with which the history of the transaction could be illuminated or explained. But international relations and the history of diplomacy were but part of a generous learning which ranged over many fields and left none untilled or unharvested. He was a man of the widest reading, and not only remembered what he read, but remembered it intelligently. His learning was never an incumbrance, but an adornment, worn as lightly as a flower and used as skillfully as the blade of the master of fence.

Mr. HITT was a statesman in the most exact and broadest sense of the word, and men did not have to wait until he died to find this out. He was so recognized in the House, where he served so long, and his high qualities were equally recognized in the Senate, where, unfortunately for his State and country, he was never permitted to serve.

I have spoken of him as he appeared to me in his public capacity when I first saw him and as he continued to appear during all the succeeding years. But I should not satisfy myself if I did not speak of him as the friend whom I came to know well and for whom I never ceased to feel a deep affection as well as a very genuine admiration. Mr. Hitt, among many good qualities, had that of kindness to young men, and I have a very grateful memory of his kindness to me when I first entered the House. Thus it happened that I early became his friend, and there was no man whose society I more enjoyed. full of humor, which went hand in hand with his wide knowledge both of men and books, and a more agreeable companion, a more interesting man in talk, it would have been difficult to He had looked out upon the world as he passed through it with keen sight and observant eyes. The observation was always good natured, but always penetrating. He was without illusions, but he was the kindliest cynic that ever smiled upon the inconsistencies and absurdities and pretenses with which humanity is fond of soothing itself at suitable moments.

But his charm as a companion and friend rested on those deeper and stronger qualities without which the most compelling charm is fleeting and superficial. He was eminently loyal to country, to party, and to friend. He was patriotic and able, looking far into consequences and possibilities. He was of high honor and unspotted life. Fortunate in the friendship and trust which Lincoln gave him in his youth, he was equally fortunate in his later life and friendships and the trust and confidence of the great President were continued to him in his age by the people of his State and country and were never forfeited.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, death has taken from the Congress of the United States Hon. Robert R. Hitt, of the State of Illinois. He died full of years and full of honors with his harness on, and the effulgence of his intellect and the sunshine of his disposition and the purity of his patriotism unimpaired.

I first became personally acquainted with him in 1885, when I was appointed a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, of which committee he was also a member. I served with him twelve years on that committee, and a part of the time he was chairman of the committee and part of the time I had the honor to be chairman of that committee, and our long association on that committee was never marred or disturbed by contention or disagreement, but was ever harmonious and pleasant and was the basis of friendship which strengthened with the lapse of years and will always be remembered by me with pleasure and gratification.

God seems to place some men in spheres of life which are congenial and where they can best serve His purposes and benefit their country. For twenty-four years ROBERT R. HITT was a Representative in Congress, and he seemed to be created for the duties of that office. The House of Representatives of the United States is one of the most important forums in the world. There men are judged not by the offices they have held nor by the splendor of their ancestry; not by the honor and renown they have achieved; not by the glamor of conspicuous civil or military careers, but they are judged by what they do, by the capacity, fidelity, and honesty with which they discharge the various and responsible duties of Representatives in the Congress of the United States. In that great forum questions are discussed and measures enacted which concern the destinies of our Republic, and he who as a Representative of the people wins their approbation and advocates their welfare and helps to promote the great interests of the Republic is not only a worthy and faithful public servant, but he has done that which in all ages and in all countries has merited and received lasting honors and continuous admiration and respect.

Mr. Hitt was equal in every respect to the position he held. His ability, industry, integrity, and faithful and efficient service made him a model Congressman, respected by his colleagues and loved by his constituents.

He was well equipped for all kinds of legislation and was a most excellent parliamentarian, but his services as chairman and as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs were conspicuous. He entered Congress after he had experience and training as secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires at Paris, France, and Assistant Secretary of State, and after association with many of the ablest and most prominent men of our country and of Europe, and he soon proved that he was a worthy representative of the great State of Illinois, which had been represented in the councils of the nation by Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, John A. Logan, David Davis, Lyman Trumball, and others

He was an earnest student of international law and was a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to our foreign affairs, and was well informed in diplomacy, and he could have discharged the duties of Secretary of State or ambassador abroad with credit to himself and honor to his country.

Mr. Hirr lived in an age of the greatest achievements and the most marvelous progress the world has ever known. His life, which is a part of the history of his time, illustrated high appreciation of his environments and marked and noble efforts to make the world better because he lived in it, and showed what a man can accomplish by intelligence, energy, integrity, and fidelity to duty.

In his early manhood, after he was educated at De Pauw University, he was a stenographer and reporter, and he preserved and published the exact words of Lincoln and Douglas in their great debate in Illinois in 1858, which marked an epoch in our country's history. He made rapid advancement in learning and in official position, and in the largest part of his mature life he was a Congressman and participated in the administration of the affairs and the enactment of the laws of the greatest Republic in the world during the period embraced by the Presidencies of Garfield, Arthur, Cleveland, Harrison, McKinley, and Roosevelt; and no man gave more earnest consideration to the great problems presented or did his part more faithfully among the patriotic and progressive leaders of his time, or tried more earnestly to do his duty as God gave him the wisdom to see the right, than Hon. Robert R. Hitt.

Our friend, with his rare acquirements, courtly manner, and delicate and refined nature, has left us forever. Our loved colleague, in whose career no breath of suspicion ever assailed his integrity or dimmed the brightness of his honor, now sleeps the sleep of death. He will be missed in the many spheres of usefulness which he adorned. He will be missed in his district, in his State, and in the councils of the nation. He will be missed by his host of friends who admired, respected, and loved him, but above all he will be missed beyond expression in his home he loved so well, and of which he was the light and center, by his loving wife and devoted sons.

In halls of state he sat for many years
Like fabled knight, his visage all aglow,
Receiving, giving sternly, blow for blow.
Champion of right; but from eternity's far shore
Thy spirit will return to join the strife no more.
Rest, citizen, statesman, rest; thy troubled life is o'er.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the request by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom], the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, and long an associate in public life of Robert R. Hitt, that I speak a word of tribute to his memory, comes to me as a command. It seems to be my rather unhappy lot to be called upon to speak in unstudied words and unpolished sentences of colleagues and friends who have gone to the grave from public life. I looked upon Robert R. Hitt as a friend. I entertained for him great respect and admiration. There was an undefinable something about him that seemed to come down from the Lincoln period. He was essentially individual to my apprehension; all in all a quaint character. One like Mr. Hitt could not, in early or later life, be the confidant and associate of Abraham Lincoln without obtaining from that association an education the like of which the schools do not and can not afford.

Mr. Hirr, had he chosen to devote his life to purely legislative functions in general, would have excelled as a practical legislator. But he was a born diplomat. He had spent much time abroad. He had gleaned from his service in France a great and valuable discipline on the lines of diplomatic thought work. He chose to make that his specialty in public service, and he chose wisely and well and for the benefit of his country.

He was not an orator in the sense the world at large thinks and speaks of oratory, but he was a charming and interesting speaker. He was always fully possessed of every phase of the subject upon which he spoke. His diction, never in the slightest apparently studied, was absolutely exquisite in its simplicity and beauty. More than once I have listened to him in the House of Representatives speaking upon some diplomatic question—and none are more important, none more complicated, none more difficult of wise solution, and oftentimes none more dangerous, than the questions which grow out of our foreign relations—and his thought was as clear as crystal and his language was as clear as his thought.

He well deserved the abiding and complete confidence which the late but always to be remembered John Hay reposed in him as a wise counselor and as a loyal and devoted friend. I concur in all that has been said of him by the Senators who have preceded me. He would have made an exceptionally able

Secretary of State. I think, as much as the people of the United States admired and respected him; I think, as dearly as the people who for twenty-four years kept him as their Representative loved him, neither the country at large nor the people of his district fully appreciate the public service which he rendered.

It is a great mistake to measure a man's usefulness in public life, in the House or in the Senate, by the speeches which he makes here, by the reports which he writes and presents upon important public matters, or by the measures which he introduces. We here all realize, what the country at large can hardly be expected to realize, that a great mass of the valuable, splendid service rendered by the Members of the two Houses is rendered in committee room and in consultation with the different Departments of the Government. I know more than once when the wisdom, the experience, and knowledge of diplomatic history in our career as a nation has enabled Mr. Hrrr to solve a problem which gave all, however able, who were concerned in its solution great anxiety.

He was a charming companion. He was one of the best raconteurs I ever met. His memory was stored with anecdotes and experiences gleaned from abroad and at home, which he told in an inimitable way, and no one of which he could not as a gentleman—for there was no finer gentleman—have told in the presence of a lady. His hospitality in his own home was delightful. He was a frank man. There seemed to be, while quite reserved, in him nothing of that stealthy reserve which sometimes characterizes the diplomat. He believed in the modern diplomacy, which tells the truth and which is franker and more open than the diplomacy of old times.

Mr. President, like the Senator whose memory we have honored this afternoon, the heart of Robert R. Hitt proved in the end to be his mortal weakness. I visited him several times during the last months of his life, when he could not take ten steps with safety, and when sitting beside him on his porch not far from my home was the wife who had been his friend and companion and lover during all the years. He talked about the diplomacy of the country, the questions which confronted us, and the dangers which he thought—and he was a farsighted man—beset us; and with apparent sadness he seemed to feel that he would not much longer be a participant in the affairs which for so many years had absorbed him, and pointed here and there to possible solutions, one of which since his death has been approved.

I may say this in conclusion. His life in private and in public was spotless. He was a singularly able public man, calm, wise, patriotic, and devoted. His memory will be forever fragrant and honored in the memory of our people, Mr. President, and I hope some day, although I doubt it, the people of the whole country will come to know that for the labor of twenty-four and more years which he gave to the country, to our people, they owe to him a "debt, immense, of endless gratitude."

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, it is with no ordinary feeling that I rise to say a few words in memory of the distinguished man to whose memory and works for his country and State we to-day pay tribute.

Mr. Hitt's public career covered the most important and critical period of our history and brought him into contact with the most famous men of the times. Beginning as a young man, he reported the famous debates between Lincoln and Douglas. Continuing in public life, it was his fortune to render distinguished service to his country during the Franco-Prussian war at the time of the siege of Paris. He also rendered to his country valuable assistance as Assistant Secretary of State under Mr. Blaine. But his great record was made as a Member of Congress. For more than twenty-four years he gave to his constituents and to the country the benefit of his cultivation of mind, his sound judgment, and his best efforts.

I first knew Robert Hitt when I came to Washington as a young Member of Congress. It was then I learned to appreciate the extent and accuracy of his stores of knowledge and the breadth of his wide experience. I learned to appreciate more than anything else his kindly, generous nature, and while I admired him as a statesman, I loved him as a friend. Most of the happiness of those early days in Washington I owe to the constant, daily association with one so kindly and so gifted. His was true sweetness of disposition, which the sharpness of party strife, the bitterness of disappointment, or even the trial of long, weary illness could not ruffle or embitter. He served his country at home and abroad with ability and success. His attainments remain as monuments to his memory. He has left a place in the councils of his State and nation difficult to fill and a memory gracious, respected, honored, and revered.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it would be well for our country if there were more men in the public service of the character, of the mold, and of the temperament of the late Robert R. Hitt, of Illinois. He was a unique man, a very remarkable man, remarkable for the fine balance of his faculties and for the excellent good judgment he displayed on all occasions. He was remarkable for his serene and gentle disposition. It was not offensive to him that another differed with him in opinion, nor was he ever offensive in stating his differences of opinion with another. He was remarkable in his equipment and in his aptitude for the tasks of public life. Lord Bacon says, "Reading maketh a full man." Mr. Hitt was a full man. He had that thirst of knoweldge which the Creator has implanted in generous minds that love the truth and can never be content in their quest for it. He read much and his fine memory kept in store what he read.

The same great man has also said, "Writing maketh the accurate man." Mr. Hirr was an accurate man. He made just estimate of the tasks which he assumed. He had acquired the habit of writing in the most severe and delicate kind of manual composition, which requires the skilled hand and the nicest and closest application of the intellect. He was in youth a stenographer, and amongst the most skilled of that craft in the West. It is a great cultivation of the whole man to study deeply any question or master any art. His compositions had that delicacy of expression and that fitness of statement which bespeaks the well-ordered mind. They flowed from the accuracy with which he measured men and things. They flowed like streams within their banks. They bore clear messages from a clear mind, and carried light in the exact communication of specific thought to others

"Speaking," said Bacon, "maketh the ready man." Mr. Hitt never seemed to have the ambition or the taste or the dramatic instinct to make himself a figure of conspicuousness or to shine on great occasions, but the serenity of his mind appeared on all occasions and bespoke the settled judgment. When he chose to speak, he spoke neatly and aptly, not to the galleries, not to an absent audience, but to the point of what he was endeavoring to illuminate and to those who were deciding. He was a ready man, one not to be surprised or startled—ready because equipped and because of steady opinion and purpose, and because also gifted with the faculty of natural expression.

Mr. Hirr was credited by all who knew him to be a good man, one who felt the responsibility of the tasks committed to his hands, and one who sought in all becoming ways to accomplish the objects and to carry out the views which impressed him as right and just. And so he could do these things. He seemed to be utterly careless of himself.

Mr. Hitt was one of the most unpretentious men with whom I have ever been thrown in contact. In his intercourse with others and in his dealings with public things it never occurred to you to suppose that he was thinking of himself, and yet when he dealt with things you could see that he had seen through them, that he understood them, and that he was a master of the subject which he undertook to illustrate. He was a conservative man. He did not dip into many things, but he understood a few things, and on these he was an authority and a guide. Like the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCreany], who has paid to him to-day the just tribute of a colleague in most eloquent and fitting terms, I first became acquainted with Mr. Hitt in the Forty-ninth Congress, when he was in the minority and when the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and I were in the majority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

We were not long together before everyone realized that we were fortunate in his presence and in his having a share of our labors. I can not recall ever to have heard a word of partisanry uttered by him or that any kins of partisan spirit was ever engendered amongst the gentlemen who shared in the labors of that committee. They had respect for each other, and each went his way as he thought best.

I then formed a high opinion of Mr. Hrrr, both of his judgment, of his sincerity, of his learning and ability, and of his high and noble character. It is pleasing to me to reflect that at the end of nearly a quarter of a century I can contemplate long relations with him, not indeed those of intimate friendship, but those of frequent contact and association and manly feeling, in which never a word was said or anything done to break the current of cordial esteem and good will between us.

Mr. President, I have broken bread by his fireside, and I know the charm of that home which was the crown of his life and the source of his greatest pride and joys. Many men, as has been remarked by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner], have made great names and have shone in the public annals of our representative bodies here who have neither undertaken nor accomplished such worthy and such lasting tasks as did Mr. Hirr. Yet it is also true that if those records of the Government which are seldom seen by any eye and which make impression upon but few were brought to light and were to be given due and proper weight and consideration, I doubt if there is any man who has served the United States in Congress within a score of years concerning whom would be discovered and brought to light more durable and more worthy memorials of honest and useful public service.

He was useful to his country and to his kind. Is not this the best of all epitaphs, except that he left a name without a shadow or a blemish upon it? It is no wonder that his constituency in Illinois were so faithful to him, for they had learned and they knew that he was faithful to them. He sought as his highest dignity and received the greatest of all rewards in knowing that they appreciated his services.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On account of the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] he requested me to read to the Senate the following:

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, death has claimed few public men recently more honored and respected by the people of Illinois than ROBRET R. HITT.

For several years the rugged health which marked his early and mature years had deserted him. He fought the grim monster Death for years, however, with courage and persistency. During all this time he discharged his public duties and all personal and social obligations with a bright and cheerful spirit that are found ordinarily only in those who enjoy the best of health.

When I first entered public life as a Member of the Fortyninth Congress, Mr. Hirr, whose district joined mine on the west in Illinois, was then a prominent figure in the House of Representatives. He was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and was honored and respected as one of the most cultured and distinguished members of that body.

For a full quarter of a century he represented in the House of Representatives one of the most intelligent and richest districts in Illinois. It had been made famous before his day by sending to the House of Representatives of the United States such men as E. D. Baker, who fell at Balls Bluff, one of the most eloquent orators of his time, and one of the most heroic figures of the civil war; Elihu B. Washburn, a great historical character; Mr. Burchard and Mr. Hawk, less distinguished perhaps than their predecessors, but men, however, of great ability, who rendered conspicuous service in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Hirr had had a long and varied experience in public life prior to his Congressional career. He was Mr. Lincoln's especial friend long before that great man was thought of for the Presidency, and during the now famous debates between Senator Douglas and Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Hirr was selected by Mr. Lincoln to take his speeches in shorthand and transcribe them for the public. He was a very young man at this period, but was regarded, and justly so, as the most accomplished stenographer of his day. He had been educated at what was then known as Rock River Seminary, in Illinois, now known as Mount Morris College, and later at De Pauw University, and thus brought to bear in the discharge of his duties scholarly attainments and a literary finish to his work that are rare in shorthand reporters.

For many years he was secretary of legation and charge d'affaires ad interim at Paris, and later was Assistant Secretary of State. In these several public positions he not only discharged his duty with fidelity, but with an ability that ultimately led to his wider field of usefulness as a Member of Con-

During his entire service in the House of Representatives no Member exerted a wider influence than he in the House and country on all questions affecting our foreign relations. He had made an especial study of our diplomatic relations from the earliest history of the Government, and was looked up to as an authority on the various questions that from time to time came before the House of Representatives affecting our relations with foreign countries.

The people of his district loved and honored him, and their

The people of his district loved and honored him, and their confidence in him was reciprocated by a loyalty that knew no wavering. While he never forgot his duty to his State and country, his first love was to the people of his district, and he allowed no opportunity to pass unnoticed that enabled him to contribute to their welfare and prosperity.

His death, while not unlooked for, when it came was a shock to the good people of his district and the State of Illinois. He has passed over the dark river. His voice will never again be heard in that great legislative body, the House of Representatives, where he so frequently, during his long and dis-tinguished career, defended the great principles of government which have made our country the foremost nation of the world.

He will be missed in the committee room, where his wise counsel controlled and directed his colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee. He will never again be heard in the district that he so long and honorably represented in Congress; but his memory, Mr. President, will long remain not only with the people of his district and the State of Illinois, but with all who had the good fortune during his life to come within the circle of his acquaintance and fellowship, as an inspiration to them and to succeeding generations.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Rockwood Hoar, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that a fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, only two years ago I spoke here in commemoration of the life and services of my revered and distinguished colleague, Senator Hoar. To-day I am called upon to perform the same sad service in honor of his son, who died last September, after much suffering, at his home in Worcester. Senator Hoar died in the fullness of years, after worcester. Senator floar died in the lumbess of years, after a service in Congress covering more than the lifetime of a generation. Rockwood Hoar died in the prime of life, just as his public service here was beginning. He was the last of his generation, and for the first time in more than seventy years there is no man of his name and family in the public life of Massachusetts, and for the first time in more than forty years there is no one of his race representing Massachusetts in either House of Congress.

ROCKWOOD HOAR felt always the responsibility of this tradition of public service which belonged to his family from the seventeenth century down to the present time. He graduated from Harvard, worked hard at his profession, where he won early distinction, was occupied with all the cares and pleasures which an active life and a happy home imposed upon him; but the call to do his share of public work and play his part in the life of his time, that call which came to him out of the past, inseparable from his "birth and state," never fell upon dull ears. He responded to every command, whether in city or in State. He served on the staff of two governors, and did hard and much-needed work in that position during the Spanish war. He was elected district attorney for his county and achieved there great success, bringing to the office the untiring industry and exacting conscientiousness which were among his most conspicuous qualities. Then he was elected to Congress, and had just begun to show here the same ability and earnestness which he had exhibited in other fields when he was taken from us and from the public service which he so valued and enjoyed by an untimely death.

ROCKWOOD HOAR was endowed with all the attributes of mind and character which a Representative of the American people should possess. He was a thorough American, born and bred in Massachusetts, where his ancestors had lived and worked for more than two hundred and fifty years. Love of country, pa-triotism in its highest sense, was born with him, was his inheritance, was bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh. He was well trained, well educated, well read, a sound and able lawyer, a man of entire honesty and courage, of sensitive honor and unblemished character. With all these qualities of mind and heart, his success in the larger field of public usefulness just opening before him was assured.

I have spoken of Mr. Hoar only in his public capacity, as is fittest to speak here and on this occasion. But I can not refrain from expressing my own sense of a great personal loss in the death of one for whom I felt an affection which I like to think was returned. I had known Rockwood Hoar for many years, but our meetings had been casual and at long intervals. Recently, however, circumstances had brought us closely together, and the intimate relations I had had with his father were transferred to the son. Then I came to realize fully his many fine qualities and to feel how worthily he maintained and, if his life were spared, how finely he would illustrate the honored and historic name he bore. It was to me a great gratification to be associated with him here in Washington, to see him starting so fairly to fulfill all the hopes which those who knew him best cherished for him. But that future was not to "He has outsoared the shadow of our night," and we can only in halting words express our sense of the loss which has come to the country and to the State which commanded his devotion and of the sorrow which has befallen his friendsthe only sorrow he ever caused them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this hour has been set apart that we may pay tribute to the memory of a man of distinguished lineage and of notable public service. It was my privi-lege to serve with him in the House of Representatives, where I learned to appreciate his devotion to duty and his manly regard for the principles of honor, truth, and worth.

ROCKWOOD HOAR came from a long line of distinguished ancestors. The family in England had both substance and established positions before events in America were controlled by European hands. For two hundred and fifty years the family has been an honored one in New England, and for more than fifty years it has had a most extraordinary share in shaping public affairs for the entire country. For five generations backward Rockwood Hoar was descended from an unbroken line of patriots and illustrious men. Two of these ancestors-father and son-were side by side at Concord aiding in our struggle for independence. His grandfather was a noted lawyer and a prominent Member of Congress. His father outstripped all of his name in the race for honor and won for himself the plaudits of the world. On his mother's side Rockwood Hoan descended from Roger Sherman, a distinguished signer of the Declaration of Independence, whose other descendants have written their names large upon the pages of our history.

From an ancestry like this ROCKWOOD HOAR could inherit nothing but the most profound conceptions of duty, the most enlightened modes of thought, and the most conservative methods of action. Born of parents most singularly upright and learned, hedged in on all sides by inheritances of speech, thought, and manner Rockwood Hoar could be naught else than a distinguished character.

In his own right, supported of course by the impregnable virtues of his inheritance, Rockwood Hoar took a distinguished place among his fellows. As graduate of Harvard he was well grounded for life's severest struggles and most admirably equipped for a successful career in any line of thought or industry. He chose the law and nonoreu n.

His judgment was methodical, precise, and sound, and in the faithful performance of a trust he was surpassed by none. Beginning in January, 1899, he served six years as district attorney in his home district, laying down this honor to accept the greater honor of a seat in the House of Representatives of the United States, being sent thereto from a district which for three previous terms had elected men in opposition to his political principles. The confidence of his friends was rewarded by the able work he performed as district attorney, and the single session he served in the higher work of Congressional labor gave ample proof of promise and of power. His interest in educational affairs is shown by the fact that he was at the time of his death a trustee of Clark University. Such was the career he worked out for himself in the twenty-six short years from the date of his admission to the bar. Verily he shone by no reflected light, and could he have been spared might have won an equal place with his distinguished father. His father was great in his spiritual discernment; Rockwood Hoar in this respect followed closely in the footsteps of his illustrious sire. The father was courteous, kind, and obliging; the son had all these qualities in an eminent degree. The father lived a long and a most eventful career, dying in a ripe old age; the son lived a vigorous, eventful life, climbing each year to higher heights, but was cut off in the very prime of life, before the seeds of promise had full time to bud and flower and bring forth the rich fruitage of a grand and powerful life. ROCKWOOD HOAR made but few speeches in his short Congressional career, but in those that have been preserved he exhibited the tenderest regard for the sentiments of others and the single desire to contribute something which would in reality illuminate the subject. His rugged common sense and his experience with a great number of vital questions gave his utterances upon great questions a power they would otherwise not have gained, and foreshadowed a greater power when he should have had a longer service and the wider confidence of his associates. Rockwood Hoar brought into the House high ideals of public life and unswerving loyalty to public duty; these were his compass and guide throughout the short period of his service.

In his private life he was above all reproach and with his friends the kindliest of men. So passed from us a man of unblemished and noble character-a man of varied and great abilities. He did a great work without living out the fullest span In his native State, where his honors were most of human life. largely won, his demise was universally regretted and deplored, and in the Congress of the United States his departure was a blow. It was unexpected, and to his fellows, who were just coming to know him as a man and as a friend, his death brought sorrow and regret. So died an honest, sincere, and upright man, a man well fitted for public life, and who in every relation of life discharged to the fullest his duties to himself, to his family, to his State, and to the country at large.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. President, Rockwood Hoar served but one session in the House of Representatives. The tributes paid to him by his associates show that during that brief time he had not only won their affectionate regard, but had impressed them to a remarkable degree with his industry, ability, and sterling worth. They have spoken with tenderness and evident sincerity of his lovable personality, of his courage and spirit of independence, of the high ideals which governed his life, and of his unyielding devotion to duty. Mr. Hoar was fitted by education and by capacity for work for the position to which he was chosen by those who knew him well and among whom all his life had been spent.

He was nominated unanimously by the Republicans of the Third Massachusetts district as their candidate for Representa-tive in Congress in 1904, and elected by a large majority. The fact that two years later he was again nominated without opposition showed how satisfactory his service had been to his constituents and gave reasonable assurance that he would have had an opportunity for extended service in a field that was so attractive to him and where he could have been relied upon to do faithful and efficient work.

He took great interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the region in which he lived. He could always be depended upon to give freely of his time and ability, not alone in official positions, but wherever he saw that he could be of use to the city and county of Worcester. For four years he was a member of the city council, and during the last year of such service was president of that body. From 1899 to 1905 he was district attorney of the county of Worcester and had formerly served for three years as its assistant district attorney. He brought to the discharge of his duties in these positions thoroughness and painstaking effort and exhibited at all times that courage and independence which so impressed his colleagues in the House of Representatives during his brief service with them.

He was also interested in military affairs and was an aid-decamp on the staff of Governor Oliver Ames from 1887 to 1890. Seven years later he accepted a position on the staff of Governor Roger Wolcott as judge-advocate.

Rockwood Hoar was descended from men who had rendered distinguished service to State and nation. It was just at the end of his father's long and illustrious life that he became a Member of Congress. He was naturally ambitious and rejoiced in the opportunity which had come to him to bear some part in shaping national legislation. His friends knew that he was well equipped for the work which he undertook with so much satisfaction and enthusiasm. They hoped that he was entering upon a career of usefulness and influence. His untimely death has prevented the realization of these hopes and has brought sorrow to the people of Massachusetts, whom he was so anxious to serve.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LESTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolutions from the House of Representatives; which were of the deceased

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia submits resolutions, which will be read:

The resolutions were read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Rufus E. Lester, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that a fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I rise to pay my last tribute of respect to a friend, a loyal and devoted friend. I first met Hon. RUFUS E. LESTER during a session of the legislature in my State in 1882, and I knew him intimately from that time up to his death. He was then comparatively a young man; although only 45 years of age, he was recognized as one of the leading public men of my State. Mr. LESTER enjoyed in a high degree the universal confidence and esteem of the results of George the universal confidence and esteem of the people of Georgia, and he retained their confidence and affection throughout his public life. He held many public positions of honor and trust, and always faithfully discharged his duty. His career was a most remarkable one. Mr. Lester was born in Burke County, Ga., December 12, 1837, and died in this city in his sixty-ninth year during the session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, while a Member of Congress from the First Congressional district of Georgia, which he had represented continuously for sixteen years; and he had been reelected to the Fifty-ninth Congress but had only served out a part of his term at the time of his death. Had Mr. Lester lived to serve out the remainder of his term, he would have had eighteen years of continuous service in the House of Representatives, a service noted for devotion to the public interest and highly appreciated by his colleagues and constituents. His boyhood gave many evidences of the useful career he had before him. As a boy he was thoughtful, industrious, and studious, and graduated from Mercer University with first honor.

His kind and generous nature made him a host of friends among his classmates, and these friendships lasted for a lifetime. After graduation he read law with one of the ablest law firms of the city of Savannah, Messrs. Norwood & Wilson, and his preceptors were so impressed with the high character and ability of their student that they immediately offered to make him a member of their firm, which he promptly accepted. Mr. Norwood was afterwards elected to the United States Senate and served with distinction in this body for six years.

In 1861 Mr. Lester entered the Confederate Army as lieutenant of the Twenty-fifth Georgia Regiment. He was twice wounded at the battle of Chickamauga, two horses were shot from under him, and after the battle he was commended for gallant conduct on the field and recommended for promotion. soldier of the Confederate Army none were braver and truer than Mr. Lester. His courage and patience at all times met the demands of the occasion. My colleague is familiar with his soldier life and I'll leave this field to him.

Immediately after the close of the war he came back to Savannah and commenced again the practice of law and established an extensive and lucrative practice. In practicing his chosen profession his conduct was most scrupulous; he taught his clients to expect nothing at his hands in conducting their cases except honorable conduct. The conditions in Georgia in 1865, after the close of the civil war, were most critical. The State needed the counsel and services of her ablest and most popular sons. Savannah was a city of culture and refinement; her bar ranked as the ablest in the State. Mr. Lester was chosen to represent the First senatorial district in the Georgia senate of 1866, and served continuously for a period of nine years. Probably the most useful and distinguished services he ever ren-dered his State were during this period. These were the dark days of reconstruction, when there were passed at one session of the legislature thirty-two acts which directed State indorsements to be placed on the bonds of as many different railroads.

Henry G. Turner, another distinguished Georgian, before he passed away, said:

These indorsements so authorized, with the contingent liability created by seven other acts previously passed, would have amounted to $40,000,000, and that all the rallroads to be built under these acts collapsed with a single exception, and the latter would have been built without

The same great Georgian tells us further that all these bonds were indorsed in violation of the constitution and of the acts providing for the indorsement. Impartial history tells us that in order to hold together the combination of members who supported these measures a resolution was passed requiring that each and every bill in which State aid was granted be retained by the president of the senate and speaker of the house, respectively, until each and every bill was acted upon, so that they all might go to the governor at the same time. Mr. Turner tells us, in his History of Reconstruction, that it was a conspiracy which enabled every member to command the vote of every other member who had such a bill, and that this arrangement pooled all their bills and consolidated all their supporting influences.

Financial ruin threatened the State. It was a situation in which all good citizens banded themselves together against a disgraceful administration. Well did Mr. Turner say that reconstruction accomplished not one useful result and left behind it not one pleasant recollection. During this entire period Mr. Lester was a member of the State, senate and for three years president of the senate, and he battled fearlessly and continuously for honest, clean, good government. He fought manfully State indorsement of fraudulent bonds and exposed the corrupt practices of an ignorant and unscrupulous legislature. He won the confidence and esteem of the good people of the entire State. It is impossible to calculate the value of his services to the people of Georgia during this period. A few years afterwards Mr. Lester's friends pressed him to make the race for governor. He declined to enter actively into the canvass, but allowed the use of his name, and while he did not receive the nomination in the convention he made a most creditable race. Under party custom it required two-thirds of the delegates to make a nomination and neither of the four candidates had enough votes to secure the party nomination. After balloting for days the convention adjourned without a nomination.

Mr. Lester declined to press any further his candidacy. When he announced his candidacy a leading Georgia daily gave this estimate of his character and fitness for the high office of governor.

Whatever his hands find to do he does with his might. As he fought for the late Confederacy in the field so he has labored and fought since the day he sheathed his sword—for the good of his people, the honor of his State, and the success of his party. He possesses wisdom, justice, and moderation. As a lawyer he is in the very foremost of his rank, full of learning and of the singular magnetism, so that juries delight to give him verdicts. He is a symbol of strength, his mental vision broad, and he is especially known for his individuality and boldness of thought and action; his moral and physical courage superb.

This was a just tribute to the great Georgian. He was afterwards elected mayor of the city of Savannah and held the office for six years. He did not desire the office, but the office sought the man, and he accepted the position at the instance and earnest desire of his fellow-citizens. He gave the city a splendid administration.

He held the police department under the strictest discipline and adopted as his motto: Every city officer must do his whole He looked especially after the health of the duty to the people. city and sought by every possible means to improve the school system of the city. He was an uncompromising foe of mob law. On two occasions he prevented mob violence by taking command of the police. The respect and love the people had for him calmed the mob, and through his efforts bloodshed was averted and the law upheld. Mr. Lester felt special pride in the growth and derelopment of the city of Savannah. He knew what deep water meant for that city. When Mr. Lester entered Congress, and before the Savannah River had been improved, only light cargoes would seek the port. Through his efforts, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, large appropriations were obtained to improve Savannah River and Harbor, and the growth of the commerce of Savannah, as a result of his efforts, has been marvelous. In 1890 the depth of the water was 20 feet and 9 inches, and in 1905 26 feet and 6 inches. In 1900 only 660,458 tons of freight were handled by regular coastwise steamship lines from this port, and in 1905 the tonnage had increased to 1,022,779 tons.

The total appropriations made by the Government for the improvement of the Savannah River have been $7,574,983. The larger part of this vast sum came through the untiring efforts of Mr. Lester. During the seventeen years he represented his district in Congress he toiled day and night to secure the necessary appropriations for the continuation of the improvements of this magnificent harbor. Before he died he saw the result of his good work. He saw the number of steamers increase from 43 to 192 and the net tonnage increase from 1,077 to 2,086 tons in the same period. When he entered Congress the largest steamer entering the port carried only 1,774 tons; when he died several steamers with net register of 4,600 tons loaded daily at the city wharves carrying from twenty-three to twenty-four thousand bales of cotton. He lived to see the imports of his city almost trebled in a period of four years. When he died Savannah's exports were greater than the exports of Wilmington, Newport 'News, Brunswick, Fernandina, Norfolk, and Charleston all combined.

Mr. Lester is dead, but the good work he accomplished while living is still going on.

The present river and harbor bill carries a million dollars to improve the river and harbor at the city of Savannah. member well the fight made in the Fifty-eighth Congress to secure the necessary survey to estimate the cost and the advisability of securing a depth of 26 feet at mean low tide. The Senate had adopted the amendment, and a majority of the conferees of the House fought it bitterly, contending that the cost would be enormous and that the work ought not to be done. Mr. Lester was on the conference committee, and his soul was enlisted in behalf of this work. Largely through his calm demeanor and persistent efforts the House conferees were reconciled to the amendment, and the survey was allowed to remain in the bill. What has been the result? The engineer in charge of this work, after a most thorough investigation, made a careful estimate of the cost and set forth the importance and necessity for this great importance, and as a result of such survey the river and harbor bill now carries a million dollars to make these improvements.

I repeat, Rufus E. Lester gave seventeen of the best years of his life to develop the commercial interests of the city of Savannah

His work is done, and was well done. He held public office thirty-two years, and throughout his entire life there was never a blot upon his character, never a stain upon his fair name. Political opponents admired his honesty. He was modest, brave, sympathetic, and tender. He was frank, sincere, and just. He was kind and always considerate of others. It can be truthfully said that he died without enemics. I have often heard it said since his death that he didn't have a single enemy in the House, where he had served for seventeen years. He adopted as his motto—

Write your name in kindness, love, and mercy on the hearts of the thousands you come in contact with year by year and you will never be forgotten.

All classes honored, respected, and loved him in his home city. The colored people asked permission of Mrs. Lester to allow a hundred of their best men to attend the funeral in a body, She cheerfully granted the request. I have often visited his home city, and I have never yet heard anyone speak an unkind word of Mr. Lester. His home life was happy and most beautiful. I stopped at the same hotel with Mr. and Mrs. Lester. His only child, a beloved daughter, died several years before her father's death. She left two sweet little daughters. These granddaughters lived with Mr. and Mrs. Lester. He was always happy in their society. It was in his home, with his beloved and most estimable wife and grandchildren, he found true and sweet rest.

RUFUS E. LESTER was a gallant soldier, a faithful Representative in Congress, a model citizen, an indulgent father, and an affectionate and devoted husband. I repeat, he could afford to cease from his labors, for his work had been well and gloriously done. Georgians are proud of his record. They will ever honor and revere his memory and teach their sons to profit by the lessons taught by this distinguished son of the State. He now sleeps in the bosom of the State and city he loved so well. He is dead, but the good work he accomplished will live on for generations to come. Our sons will study his life and emulate his virtues. Who can calculate the good that will follow such a life? His colleagues will feel the loss of his intelligent and useful labor and his prudent and wise counsel. But death is the fate of all men. His life, his deeds, his services, were given for the good of his country. Society has been exalted by his influence, and men have been made better by his life. Peace and honor to his memory.

[Mr. DOLLIVER addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I should do violence to my own feelings did I permit this occasion to pass without joining with others in paying tribute to the memory of the Hon. Rufus E. Lester, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Georgia. It was my good fortune to serve with Mr. Lester in the National House of Representatives for many years, where I learned to appreciate his high character and respect his manly qualities. Although we differed politically and radically on most public questions, yet these differences never engendered any personal hostility or provoked estrangement. In every conflict, however severe, he was always the same courteous gentleman and manly man. I never knew a more chivalrous antagonist.

I brought with me to the Senate the most pleasing recollections of him, and though in the latter days of his life, by reason of a bodily infirmity, he was able to greet me only with broken speech, yet our friendship remained unimpaired to the hour of his death. I join with the Senators from Georgia in deploring the loss of a public servant from their State, honest, capable, and patriotic, and with them extend to his surviving family the tenderest sympathy of a friend, who feels in the death of Mr. Lester a personal bereavement.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, it is natural for us to seek to perpetuate the memory of the virtues of an esteemed associate whose earthly career has been closed forever. Few men are so unqualifiedly bad and unregenerate that those who knew them best in life are unable truthfully to assign to them some trait or characteristic more or less commendable and sufficiently striking to justify some good words. To speak ill of the dead is repugnant to all just men, even the most unenlightened; to hurl epithets gratuitously at those whose lips are closed forever is to strike the helpless and is an invidious task. Our better impulses protest against it and prompt us rather to emphasize and dwell on what of good, however little that may be, the record of the dead discloses than to hold up to harsh criticism its less admirable features.

This may be accepted as the general rule, exemplified by many instances in the experience of all of us, and by it we and our successors will be governed to the end of time.

But when death has struck a truly shining mark, when the life story of its victim is a harmonious epic of truth, courage, devotion to duty, and unswerving adherence to lofty principle, and when we ourselves can testify to the verity and unexaggerated quality of that story it becomes a sacred duty, alike to ourselves and to posterity, to endeavor to make perpetual the memory of such a character.

It was my privilege to form the acquaintance of Rufus Ezekiel Lester some sixteen years ago, when I came to Washington as a Member of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-second Congress. He had already served one term in that body, and had impressed himself upon its membership as a man of sterling character, untiring industry, sound judgment, and broad patriotism. I doubt, Mr. President, if there ever was a body of men in which the measure of one's character and capacity was more promptly or more accurately taken than it is in the popular branch of our National Legislature. The possession of the confidence and personal regard of its Members is a guaranty of exceptional worth and merit on the part of the possessor, and no higher tribute can be paid to a Member of that body than to say of him that he enjoyed the respect and esteem of his colleagues.

Of Mr. Lester, this could be said without reservation or qualification.

Gifted by nature with a clear mental vision that enabled him always to see things as they were, and with a temperament that subordinated the promptings of passion or prejudice, to the dictates of a conscientious judgment, he was of a moral fiber that was as unyielding as the heart of oak to any suggestion of compromise with wrong or injustice.

To this rarely complete equipment for meeting and solving the Protean problems of life that cause so many men to "wax gray and ghastly, withering ere their time," was added a ripe and varied experience, the result of his environment and the momentous period in our country's history in which he lived.

Born in Burke County, Ga., December 12, 1837, he attended the local schools during his boyhood and graduated at Mercer University in that State shortly after he had attained his twentieth year. Two years thereafter he was admitted to the bar at Savannah and began the practice of law in that city under most favorable auspices. He was rapidly rising to distinction in his profession when the tocsin of civil strife resounded and the war drum throbbed throughout the land, and with the prompt appreciation of duty that ever characterized him and shaped his conduct, he volunteered as a private in the ranks of the Twenty-fifth Georgia Regiment, and for four years dedicated his life and energies to the defense of his native land. During those strenuous years of peril, privation, and suffering he was several times honored by promotion, but was finally so seriously wounded at the battle of Chickamauga that he was incapacitated for further active service in the field. The close of the war found him holding the position of inspector-general on the staff of General Mackall at Macon.

Mr. President, while their fortitude and devotion to the cause for which they fought compelled the admiration of the world for the soldiers and sailors of the Southern Confederacy, I claim that the qualities exhibited by them, when, realizing that their cause was lost forever, they returned to their desolated homes, and with naked hands essayed the task of rebuilding their, shattered fortunes and bringing order out of chaos, were no less worthy of the world's unstinted applause. Without money or credit, subjected to the political domination of their former slaves, marshaled and directed by a horde of conscienceless, alien, hostile white men, they never lost heart, never for a moment weakened in their high purpose of redeeming their beloved land from the thrall of that alliance of ignorance and venality. That the task was stupendous, and that it required the exercise of phenomenal patience, courage, discretion, and energetic persistence, may well be imagined, but I apprehend that a true portrayal of the multiform enormities with which the men of the South had to cope in that Saturnalian era of political frenzy has never yet been given to the

It would be strange, indeed, if young LESTER, endowed as he was by nature, imbued with patriotic fervor, and ripened into serious and thoughtful maturity by the forcing processes of many hard campaigns and bloody battles, should have failed to take an active and prominent part in the struggle for the redemption of his State. Georgia needed the services of her wisest, most discreet, and determined sons, and young Lester had scarcely begun the resumption of his law practice when, in obedience to the mandate of his people, he accepted an unsought election to the State senate from the Savannah district. As was practically the rule in such cases, the decree of the people was promptly reversed by the irresponsible mob that then controlled the Georgia senate, and Mr. Lester was deprived of his seat in order that it might be given to a negro contestant who could be depended on to vote with the majority. At the next election, however, held in 1870, he was again chosen to represent the Savannah district, and for nine years thereafter filled that position with great credit to himself and much advantage to his district and State. At the expiration of his ninth year of service as a legislator he declined a renomination, and again betook himself to the practice of his profession. But the conspicuous and influential part that he had acted in the rescue of Georgia from the ruinous domination of the negro and the carpetbagger had commended him so highly to the people of his home city, and, in fact, to the en-tire State, that within a year after his retirement from the legislature he was again called on to devote his talents and energy to the service of his fellow-citizens. For the next six years he filled the position of mayor of Savannah, and, as in the administration of every other public trust confided to him, performed its duties so wisely, faithfully, and energetically as to win the cordial commendation of all classes and conditions of the people.

Once more he sought release from the burdens and responsibilities of official life, and hoped to enjoy uninterruptedly an opportunity to devote himself wholly to the pursuit of his profession. He had served his people long and faithfully, at the expense of his personal interest, and it was but just to his family and himself that he should devote the remaining years of his vigorous manhood to securing a modest competency for the future. But it was not to be. His respite was of short duration, for within two years, without solicitation on his part, he was nominated and elected to represent his Congressional district in the Fifty-first Congress. From that time until his death, on the 16th day of June, 1906, he represented continuously the people of that district in the House of Representatives

Aside from the many great and enduring material benefits which his State and district secured from Congress, through his wise prevision and unremitting effort, his services to the country at large as a far-seeing, safe, and broad-minded legislator, whose patriotism knew no limit or constraint within the borders of his native land, were of immeasurable value. Truly modest and even self-repressing at all times, and unambitious to pose as a conspicuous figure in the Congressional arena, he was none the less positive, firm, and even aggressive when the cause or occasion demanded such a course.

His well-known moderation and habit of carefully weighing the claims of both sides to a controversy before reaching a conclusion thereon, assured for his views on every important question a degree of attention and consideration quite exceptional, and gave him an influence in the House of Representatives which the general public scarcely appreciated. In brief, Mr. President, his career in that body amply justified the discernment of his constituency and their appraisement of his courage, character, and capacity which was manifested by electing him for nine successive terms and until death removed him from his

The record of his private life is equally without blemish. True to himself and his convictions, he could not be untrue in his relations with any human being. The same conscientious observance of every obligation that his varied official duties imposed on him marked his intercourse with all men at all times. Generous and sympathetic without a savor of weakness or indecision, he was courteous alike to the exalted and the lowly, and as prompt to condemn and combat wrongdoing on the part of the one as on that of the other. By slower processes, but not less accurately than the intuition of a woman, he gauged the character of men; for the foibles and minor defects that mar or detract from the symmetry of our mysterious dual nature he had an abundant charity, but he was utterly intolerant of insincerity or falsity in any of its manifestations, and the disclosure of such traits rendered intimacy between him and their possessor a moral impossibility.

The friendship of such a man was an honor to him on whom it was bestowed.

Mr. President, to what extent the modicum of good that is discoverable in the life story of any individual may have contributed to the progress of humanity no man can say. But we do know that in many signal instances the example set us by true, brave, and unselfish spirits of the past have proven precious legacies serving to strengthen and uplift mankind in its efforts to achieve a higher and more perfect development. inscriptions in turgid metaphor cut deep in the rugged sides of stupendous mountain passes, with which the mighty monarchs of Assyria and Babylon sought to perpetuate the memory of their desolating conquests, have been effaced for thousands of years by the eroding touch of time. The memory of their bloody achievements, the records of their so-called "power and were as effectually obliterated for many centuries as if they had never existed; and even the names of those proud potentates themselves, each of whom rightfully claimed the title, king of kings, are now the subjects of controversy for learned and laborious students of ancient history. Who of us to-day could recall the name of one of the dreary succession of tyrant kings of Egypt, but for those fast crumbling but wonderful mausoleums which their arrogance and pride caused to be erected with the vain purpose of perpetuating the barren memory of their futile reigns?

The deathless names of history are oftener coupled with personal disappointment and disaster than with the enjoyment of success and victory; but whether their life work was crowned with realization of its matured fruits, or whether they passed into the realm of silence unappreciated by a sluggish and sordid world, their lives were not in vain, and their memory, cherished in the hearts of just men, will endure forever.

Mr. President, it was permitted the subject of this brief sketch to realize in the enjoyment of the respect and personal affection of all of his people something of a return for his unfailing devotion to their interests. It was an acceptable recompense, and he valued it beyond price. But the basis of that respect and affection rested not alone on the recognition of his ability as a successful exponent of their wishes. They of all people knew him best, and so knowing, their respect and affection were constant and spontaneous tributes to his singularly admirable and harmonious qualities of head and heart. The same nobility of nature that without art or studied effort won for him the favor of the impartial and disinterested was equally potent in disarming envy and silencing its insidious suggestions

Successful as was his political career, he nevertheless was in no sense a politician as the term is usually understood. He was, in fact, essentially a home lover, and was happiest at his own fireside with his family around him. He was a devoted husband and a fond father, never unmindful of the great responsibility imposed on a parent, always a participant in the joys and sorrows of his loved ones.

This was the man. A brave soldier, a wise counselor, a diligent, patriotic, and sagacious legislator, and the idol and revered guardian of a happy home.

Truly his life was not in vain.

Conscious of unfailing adherence to rectitude of purpose that, like a sacred labarum, had guided him through life, and secure in the possession of the respect and love of the people to whose service that life had been devoted, he heard without fear or repining the irreversible decree that all must bow to, and passed from the sight of men forever. "The rest is silence."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, when one dear to us passes away, sweet is the voice of praise which testifies to his virtues, his character, and his deeds. With grateful ear, sir, I have heard from his colleagues in the House of Representatives upon a former day, and in the Senate to-day, the beautiful and touching tributes of those who knew Rufus E. Lester so well, and, because they thus knew him, esteemed and loved him so It is in no perfunctory and formal observance that I lay upon his bier my offering of affection. If length of duration is the measure of friendship, then was I in that relation with him second to but few, for ours was the friendship not of a few years; it was the uninterrupted, close friendship of a long lifetime. I have known him much longer than any other with whom he has been associated in either House of Congress. I recall vividly my first acquaintance with him when I, a college boy upon my vacation in Savannah, met him, then an eager young lawyer just entering upon the practice of his professionin the flush of vigorous young manhood, his cheek ruddy with health, the glow of expectancy lighting his eye as of one girded for the mastery. I shall ever remember the admiration and pardonable envy with which I then regarded him. was only a few years older than myself, still he had crossed the divide upon which as a boy my view was strained—the line to the boy and the youth of all time as distinct and almost as distant to his impatience as the horizon—the line which separates the schoolboy from the dignity, the liberty, the opportunity of recognized manhood, with its associations in the responsible affairs of life.

The acquaintance then made ripened into an ardent personal friendship which lasted without interruption through all the long succeeding years until the sun had passed the meridian and the lengthening shadows told of the evening of life. diately after that early meeting came the tragic conflict of civil war, and in its thunder clouds and storms and smoke and dust we were at times hidden the one from the other; but through its din and uproar there came to me time and again tidings of the gallantry of the youthful Lester-how on many a sanguinary field his sword had flashed in the forefront; how at Chickamauga he won the plaudits of the men and the praise of his commanding officer; how two horses on that fateful day had fallen under him, and how, mounting the third, he, undismayed in that carnage of death, rode to victory at the head of the charging legions. The South had no son whose consecration of life and all to her cause was more unreserved than was his, and while the fortune of war did not require from him the highest sacrifice which a soldier can make and which he so freely dared, still more than once his blood was poured out a libation in her cause; and when that cause was finally lost, among the most active of those whose efforts, in the succeeding years of trial and unwearied toil, rehabilitated the South, restored her industries, and rebuilt the altars of her social order was Rufus E. LESTER. Only those who endured its trial can realize the anguish of that day, with hopes crushed, the highest endeavor and the grandest sacrifice lost in defeat, the land sodden with the blood of its sons, and a universal material desolation on every hand, with-

Heroic men and still more heroic women were they who then defied despair and nerved themselves to the herculean task of restoration.

I would not now speak a word of crimination, but by all it is now conceded, in the kindly feeling of the present, that the humiliation of the South in the reconstruction measures was an unfortunate political mistake, one which those who took part in enacting them now freely say they would not repeat.

The events of that day are not pleasant either to recite or to remember. But they summoned the men and women of the South to the rescue of their local governments from those elements which were destroying the material interests, overturning the social fabric, and blotting out the civilization of that fair land. There was a saturnalia of public plunder and political debauchery. In each Southern State the cry for rescue rang out through its borders. Among the foremost who sprang In each Southern State the cry for rescue to the call was Lester, battling sternly and untiringly to drive out the despoilers. Georgia was the first of the reconstructed States to restore her government to the control of her own people. Within three years after the organization of the reconstruction State governments a legislature was elected by the white voters which was representative of property interests, social order, and of a civilization to be restored. When it assembled at the State capital the members found the executive chair vacant. The governor had absconded between two suns and left for parts then unknown.

In that and three succeeding legislatures Lester was a member of the Senate. A most difficult and untried task devolved upon the legislature of the State during the years succeeding the reconstruction period. With practically all personal property destroyed and with the value of real estate reduced to a minimum, in three years of misrule a mountain of debt had been piled upon the State. At its close, with exhausted resources, an empty treasury was on one hand and a bankrupt public credit was upon the other. In matters social and political old things had passed away, and the legislation to be enacted must be adjusted to new conditions in their unparalleled incongruities and ever-increasing antagonisms. To restore the lost credit of the State, to rebuild anew a social fabric upon the wreck and ruins of a former civilization, to reopen the educational institutions, and set again in motion the industries which war had stricken down, to insure the supremacy and control of the virtue, the intelligence, the integrity, and the property interests of the State, and to frame and to guard and protect all against the license of the ignorant and the vicious which under evil influences threatened on every hand—this was the task, the magnitude and perplexing difficulty of which can at this distance be scarcely imagined.

But in the eight or ten years which followed this apparently impossible task was accomplished, and upon those desolate ruins there has arisen a new civilization which is not inferior to that which preceded it, and there has been builded a new prosperity and a new wealth greater than those of the former day. In this invaluable work of constructive statesmanship in a field of legislation for which there were no precedents upon which to model the work Lester was one of the master workmen, earnest, zealous, patient, determined, fertile in resource, unwearied in effort.

Mr. President, it is a matter of personal pride to me that I was with him in that great work, a lesser coworker, he a senator and I a representative; and during a large part of the time we were contemporaneously the presiding officers of our respective houses. During all those years I lived in the same house with I learned then not only in still larger measure his personal worth, but the value and extent of his labors in that the results of which in the lengthening years crucial time, should be to him a perpetual monument.

From that field of labor each of us was within a few years transferred to the National Congress, and here again, during more than eleven years, have been continued and strengthened the ties of friendship which have thus bound us in closest union. Mr. President, while mine has been a friendship among the longest in duration, a man so leved, as he was, by all who were in close association with him can not be claimed in a friendship stronger than that given by him to many others, for he was one of those sweet and sympathetic and gentle characters, kindly, tender, considerate, generous, loyal, whose lives are made beautiful in the love of friends and happy beyond the power of tongue to tell in the sweet devotion of those who stand with them behind the sacred veil of domestic life.

Mr. President, I have known so well and so long Rufus E. Lester, I have esteemed and loved him so sincerely, that were I to say now all that I wish I would exceed the limits properly set for this occasion. As friend, father, husband, citizen, legislator, soldier, his life is a theme upon which I would dwell and upon which I am reluctant to speak the final word. Through the streets of his loved and beautiful Savannah, filled with the mourning thousands of all classes who viewed the solemn cortége. I followed him to the sacred groves of Bonaventure. There I saw him laid to his final rest. And, fitting close to the career of a gallant soldier was it, as beneath the bending boughs and the drooping moss, amid weeping loved ones and sympathizing friends, while tender hands covered his grave with beautiful flowers, glorified with the rays of the sinking sun, the remnant of the vanishing band of those who with him wore the gray, drooped over his earthly bed the tattered banner and with bugle call echoing through the great aisles of the giant oaks sounded their intrepid comrade to his last martial sleep

Until the joyful reveille of the final morn shall awaken him, God rest him !

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. Algen, Mr. Hitt, Mr. Hoar, and Mr. Lester the Senate do now adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Michigan.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to, and (at 7 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, Febuary 25, 1907, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 23, 1907.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. Lodge, and Mr. McLaurin members of the commission on the part of the Senate to make full inquiry, examination, and investigation into the subject of immigration, as provided for in section 39 of the act "to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8451. An act ratifying and confirming chapter 58 of the twenty-third legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, providing for repair of the Territorial bridge at Florence, Pinal County, Ariz.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bills of the following titles: H. J. Res. 223. Joint resolution relating to the holders of medals of honor

H.R. 25475. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of pharmacy and the sale of poisons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved May 7, 1906; and

H. R. 5169. An act for the relief of W. B. Sutter.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24925) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Hale, Mr. Perkins, and Mr. Tillman as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 24537. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes.

CONFERENCE REPORT, LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPRO-PRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 21574, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. It is a complete agreement, and I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there The Chair hears none, and the objection? [After a pause.] Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

L. N. LITTAUER, L. F. LIVINGSTON, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House agree to the report.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, this conference report includes the arrangement between the two Houses upon the Congressional salary proposition. There has been some difference proposed by the House, for the compensation of the Attorney-General; increases the salary of the attorney in charge of par-dons from $2,400 to $2,750, as proposed by the Senate; strikes legislation upon the question of mileage; whether the provision in regard to salary abrogated the provision of the statute authorizing the payment of mileage to Members of Congress. would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he will ex-plain the attitude of the committee on that question or the significance of that change on the salary statute as bearing on the mileage question?

Mr. LITTAUER. The committee on conference had simply the disagreements between the two Houses before it for consideration. The appropriation for mileage had already been adopted by the House and Senate prior to the subsequent action in reference to salary of Members; consequently the subject of mileage was not in conference, and the bill as now reported carries the usual appropriation for mileage as it passed the House and Senate. I would state to the gentleman from Indiana that the Committee on Appropriations has in the consideration of the deficiency bill, now being prepared, considered the matter of adopting some provision to recommend to Congress for future action in connection with the matter of mileage, but as the matter at present stands the appropriation is made in the legislative bill for the usual mileage allowance.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I asked this question purely for information. I believe the present statutory allowance for mileage is too large in view of the action of Congress in increasing the pay of Members. I think it ought to be reduced in amount to cover actual traveling expenses for one round trip for each session of Congress, and I am glad to learn that the Committee on Appropriations contemplates reporting a provision on the subject

Mr. LITTAUER. A general expression has been made by Members of the House that action ought to be taken on the question of mileage in view of the increase in salary, which increase was based upon the merits of the matter and not simply upon a desire on the part of Members of Congress to increase unduly their salaries. Many Members have declared that a provision for mileage covering only the actual expenses of each Member to and from each session of Congress should be made, and that subject is now being considered in connection with the deficiency bill which will be reported next week.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I always regarded the original provision as part of the compensation of Members of Congress.

Mr. LITTAUER. It is so stated in the law.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the amount of salary fixed in the existing statute is perhaps not inequitable and out of the way; but in view of the increase of salary, I hope the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the general deficiency bill may report something more equitable. The mileage ought to be reduced to cover reasonable expenses of travel.

Mr. LITTAUER. And the committee is very glad of the sug-

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] that when the deficiency bill comes in in a few days he will have ample opportunity to express himself on that proposition?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. Lit-TAUER] if the conferees of the Senate and the House did not agree that it was not within their jurisdiction?

Mr. LITTAUER. It was not within their jurisdiction.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can not the committee reporting the deficiency bill or the bill the gentleman just alluded to fix in that bill the compensation for mileage?

Mr. LITTAUER. It certainly can bring the matter before the House, but we realize fully that such a provision will be subject to a point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Whatever proposition they bring in some gentleman will object. I am opposed to this 20 per cent mileage proposition, first, because it is considered part of the salary. I have never so considered it. Second, the rate is too high, I think. We should fix this matter in clean-cut language.

Mr. LITTAUER. The law considers it as part of the compensation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is grave doubt whether the law does or not. It should not now at any rate. Salary is one thing and mileage another, and we should say so. the committee will bring in a measure and fix this mileage at actual transportation expenditures paid within certain limits, and I want to say now if they do not do something of that kind I do not propose to take anything out of the 20 per cent mileage allowed me except my actual expenses, excluding meals en route. I believe the law ought to be changed, and at once.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LITTAUER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the

SIXTEEN-HOUR BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania Dalzell] submits the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolutions of the House Nos. 860 and 863, have had the same under consideration, and in lieu thereof report the following resolution, with the recommendation that it be agreed to:

"Resolved, That the bill (S. 5133) entitled 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon' be, and the same is hereby, taken up for consideration: that the amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be, and hereby is, agreed to, with the following amendments thereto, to wit:

"1. In line 3, on page 4, and in line 6, on page 5, strike out the word 'knowingly."

"2. Beginning with the word 'unless,' in line 13, on page 4, strike out the language to and including the word 'duty,' in line 17 of said page.

page. 33. In lines 13 and 14, on page 5, strike out the words 'under direc-

"3. In lines 13 and 14, on page 3, state out the word in the Attorney-General."

"4. In line 14, on page 5, strike out the word 'duty' and insert the word 'satisfactory."

"5. In line 3, on page 6, strike out the word 'ordinary' and insert the word 'reasonable."

"6. In line 22 and in line 24, on page 4, strike out the word 'consenting."

"That the bill as amended be, and hereby is, passed; that a conference be, and hereby is, asked with the Senate, and that the Speaker be, and he hereby is, directed to appoint, without intervening motion or appeal, the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the previous question upon the resolution and amendments thereto.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We will have, of course, the usual time on the demand?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes on a side. The question is on the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly necessary that I should occupy very much of the time of the House in the discussion of this proposition. The bill referred to is what is popularly known as the "sixteen-hour bill"—a bill to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon. It is safe to say, I think, that there is a general consensus of opinion in favor of legislation along this line. Such legislation has been recommended in two or three property of the control mended in two or three reports by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and has been recommended in a message—at least one message and possibly more-of the President of the United States. In addition to that there is a general call for legislation in the interest of the traveling public and in the interest of employees, a due regard being had, of course, to the interest of the railroad managers who employ those servants.

Now, while it is safe to say that there is a general consensus of opinion in favor of this kind of legislation, it is true also that there is a great diversity of opinion as to what the details of the legislaton should be. There are a great many practical questions involved in introducing a new system such as is provided for in this legislation. The Senate has expressed its views upon the subject and has sent to the House the bill The majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have expressed their views upon the subject in an amendment to the Senate bill submitted to the House; and that was voted upon on Monday last under suspension of the rules. It did not secure the two-thirds vote, but did secure the support of a majority of the membership of the House.

Now, under those circumstances, it being granted that every-body wants some sort of legislation and that there is a diversity of opinion as to the methods to be adopted, the practical thing to do at this stage of the session is to agree upon such legislation as the majority desires and send it to conference, where a result may be worked out satisfactorily to all parties The House is familiar with the amendment suginterested. gested by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to the Senate bill. I want to call attention now to some amendments to the House amendment that have been agreed upon and are embodied in this rule.

First, the word "knowingly" in section 2 and in section 3 of the bill has been stricken out. In section 2, line 3, on page 4 of the bill the word "knowingly" has been stricken out. Beginning in line 13 and ending in line 17 on page 4 the following paragraph has been stricken out:

Unless immediately prior to said twenty-four-hour period such employee had at least eight consecutive hours off duty and during said period of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty. off duty.

It has been thought that this, instead of accomplishing the purpose intended to be accomplished by the bill, would result as a limitation on it. For that reason that clause was stricken out. In lines 22 and 24 on page 4 the word "consecutive" has been stricken out; so that the paragraph will read this way:

That no operator, train dispatcher, or other employee who, by the use of the telephone or telegraph dispatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to remain on duty for a longer period than nine hours in any twenty-four-hour period in all towers, etc.

Now, it is perfectly apparent that the object sought to be accomplished by that paragraph was that no employees should be engaged for more than nine hours in a twenty-four-hour It is also perfectly apparent that if you leave the word "consecutive" in he may be employed for nine consecutive hours, unemployed for an hour or half an hour, and then employed for nine hours more in the same twenty-four hours. It will, therefore, be apparent that to strike out that word is in the interest of the legislation that is sought to be enacted.

I have already called attention to line 6, page 5, where the word "knowingly" is omitted. On the same page, lines 13 and 14, we strike out the words "under direction of the Attorney-General," so as to leave the matter of prosecution entirely in the hands of the various district attorneys. In line 14 on page 5, at the end of the line, the word "satisfactory" has been substituted for "duly." It is a mere choice of terms.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls attention to a clerical error in the identification of the bill. It is in the order 2553 and the number of the bill is 5133. Without objection, the Chair will cause the clerical error to be corrected.

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. There is another change on page 6, in line 3; the word "ordinary" has been stricken out and the word "reasonable" inserted.

With these changes in the amendment of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Senate bill it is believed that the objections that have heretofore been urged have been successfully met.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania justify the action of those of us who voted against the suspension of the rules and thus passing this bill the other day without giving the House any power of amendment. The manner in which he justined us was as could be, though not in express words. He showed how much could be, though not in express words. He showed how much the bill has been improved from its then condition, in order to reach its present condition; and that statement is of itself a justification of our conduct. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that conduct was applauded by the men who are chiefly concerned and interested in the pending legislation. I hold in my hand a telegram addressed to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN], a member of the committee on the minority side, from A. P. Garrettson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors, saying that they objected to the bill as presented in the House the other day. I hold another telegram addressed to the same gentleman [Mr. Ryan] from W. S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers to the same effect, and still another telegram addressed to the same gentleman [Mr. RYAN] from the head of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen to the same effect. I shall insert them as a part of my remarks.

So much for the past, Mr. Speaker; now, let us come to the present and see what the bill is as it now stands after the modifications in accord with the demand of the Democratic minority on the committee and in the House. Why, in the first part of the blH, as it was the other day, in line 3, page 4, and in line 6 of page 7, occurred the word "knowingly." So we were absolutely about to pass legislation requiring a corporation to permit things "knowingly" before it could be penalized. A corporation without ears, without eyes, without individuality, and as it is sometimes said, without soul, that could not do anything "knowingly" except through its authorized agents. If they have knowledge, that is the only sort of knowledge the corporation could have. We were about to pass a law requiring a corporation, in order to be visited with punishment, to commit an offense "knowingly." This bill as now reported and amended strikes out this word "knowingly," on pages 4 and 5, to which we called attention. Then, in lines 13 to 17, on page 4, the modification strikes out this language:

Unless immediately prior to said twenty-four-hour period such employee had at least eight consecutive hours off duty, and during said period of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty.

This language constituted an extension of the period of employment, and it seemed to us that it was unjust, and that there was in it what is ordinarily called a "joker." We objected to that very seriously. The modification strikes that language out of the bill and leaves substantially the provisions of the La Follette bill as it left the Senate with regard to this subject-matter.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there occurred in the proviso as regards telegraphers the following language; "that they were not to be on duty for a longer period than nine consecutive hours in a period of twenty-four hours, nor for a longer period than thir-teen consecutive hours," lapping over from one day to another. We objected very naturally to the adjective "consecutive" there, because it would enable the railroad to work a man nine consecutive hours and then take him off two hours, or two minutes for that matter, and then work him nine more consecutive hours, and then take him off for two more minutes and work him for the balance of the twenty-four hours. The modification, as proposed by the Committee on Rules this morning, strikes out the word "consecutive," where it occurs, and cures that objection.

Then, Mr. Speaker, as the bill was presented to the House the other day, and as it would have become a law if two-thirds had voted for it, leaving no power of amendment in the House, no prosecutions could have been entered except under "direction of the Attorney-General," thereby initiating prosecutions at Washington, with results which all may well understand; first, of delay, and secondly, that for the most part the central office of the Department of Justice at Washington would not know what was going on and therefore would not initiate or "direct."

This bill as now modified strikes out the words in lines 13 and 14 on page 5, "under direction of the Attorney-General," and leaves the district attorneys of the United States to proceed to prosecute without waiting for orders from Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, the word "duly" has been stricken out and "satisfactory" put in its place in line 14 on page 5, because the latter word was thought to be more liberal in the direction of the remedy desired.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not the best bill that the Democratic party could present to the country upon this subject. It is not as good a bill as the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who the other day signalized their devotion to the best interests of the country by leading this side of the House to the course that it took, could prepare, but it is the best bill we can get now, and it has been so nearly perfected in every respect that we do not feel that we can stand in the pathway of the proposed legislation so important in every way.

Mr. Speaker, the Democracy never performed a more signal service to the country; the Democratic members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee never performed a more signal service to the country than they did the other day when they refused to be stampeded by the cry that they were "opposing a sixteen-hour law," and defeated the suspension of the rules, so that the House might get what it now has-[Applause on the Democratic side.]

And, I repeat, I am glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] justify our conduct by telling the House how much better this bill is than the one which the other side of this Chamber, guided by their leaders, tried on Monday last to cram down our throats without any power of amendment or of betterment. [Applause.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 20, 1907.

Hon. W. H. RYAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I am informed that the House committee have offered substitute for the La Follette hours service bill, S. 5133. This organization is op-posed to this substitution, and we sincerely trust you will do all you can to prevent its passage and to have passed the La Follette bill (S. 5133) in the same form as it passed the Senate without any change whatsoever.

W. S. STONE, Grand Chief, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed? The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] five minutes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, this proceeding this morning furnishes us the lone example in all the history of your rule in this House, as I recollect it, of actual progress made in the proceedings of the Committee on Rules. The committee, after a great deal of travail and a great deal of hesitation and reluctance, has reported a rule which will tend to facilitate legislation upon this most important subject. A good many have been waiting quite a little while for the presentation of a rule of an entirely different character. How it came about that that rule was not presented, and how it happened that this rule, a modification of that in important particulars, is substituted, we do not know. Contrary to that very sacred thing known as "precedent" in this House, the Committee upon Rules has precedent" really concluded to submit to the House a rule that is tolerable. It is true that there is to be no amendment and no opportunity Strange it is, too, that, with abundance of time for things that are not important, there is not enough time to permit the Members of this House, every one of them a sovereign Representative in his own right, to offer and to consider amendments and to vote and to act upon his own views on propositions submitted upon a question of very great and far-reaching importance.

But for the little that we have, where but very little is given and that given grudgingly, let us be thankful. There is at last opportunity given to the House and to the Congress and to the country to get some legislation that will accomplish something that is desirable. The word "knowingly," put in knowingly, no doubt, to render this measure, if it should pass, absolutely worthless and useless, is knowingly, with great reluctance and much deliberation, withdrawn. The word "consecutive," put in with full understanding and for the direct purpose of making this legislation useless, has been withdrawn, withdrawn most reluctantly, withdrawn after much comparison of notes and much consideration of possible consequences; but it is with-drawn, and the House now has the opportunity, under the form of a rule most drastic in its terms, expression, and purpose, to send to conference something upon which there may be rested a hope for good legislation.

Thanks to the timidity of the Committee on Rules; thanks to the powers and influences, whatever they may be, that have coerced that body of coercion into doing something contrary to its general course, something which may result in good to the public! May those persons who coerced the Committee on Rules, may those influences that have prevailed over it in this one instance for the right, be exerted again and again! May this be the dawning of the day when the Committee on Rules will cease to be autocratic, when it will share with the House of Representatives itself, with the 383 Members, leaving out of the count the powerful three who constitute the majority of the Committee on Rules, the power of the House!

383 henceforth have a chance to do something!

Let us welcome this as a harbinger of better times; let us hail this as a sign that, at least once after many years, upon one measure at least, for reasons satisfactory to it, this mighty Committee on Rules has barkened to the voice of the public and has given the House of Representatives a little opportunity to do something justly important.

I do not wish, however, to grow too hopeful nor too optimistic; there is too much in the past, there are too many examples to the contrary, too much of evil in the spirit which governs the Committee on Rules to warrant the hope that this example will become contagious. But let us hope it will have some repetitions. [Applause.]
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the country and compliment the majority on the concessions in this resolution, made in the line of doing something toward favorable and valuable legislation to limit the working hours of train men. Our fight last Monday in opposition to the objectionable features in the Esch substitute the majority by proposing the pending rule has vindicated and justified formally and em-We successfully resisted an attempt to pass the substitute under suspension of the rules, without allowing amendments to be offered. The pending resolution proposes all the amendments for which we contended.

While on principle I am usually opposed to rules to do right and proper things that could and should be done without a rule, the concessions proposed go so far to meet and remove the objections upon which we based our fight we could not now afford to oppose the substitute, with the amendments carried with it in this resolution. True there are other changes which we desired; but the concessions are so great and valuable that, while protesting against the rule, we shall with pleasure vote for the substitute which has been so beneficially amended, especially as there remains the possibility and hope of further improve-Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of ment in conference y time. [Applause.[ Mr. WILLIAMS. How many minutes have I remaining? my time

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining. Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I very heartily concur in the amendments made by the Committee on Rules to this very important bill. I believe that if you take the Record of last Monday (the 18th of February), every concession made by the Committee on Rules you will see pointed out and objected to as defects in the substitute bill which the Republican party presented for the consideration and indorsement of the House. In the speech I made, published in the RECORD of Monday, I claimed and charged in plain words that the substitute fered by the Republicans was a "travesty" upon the relief the country demanded, and they have come forward and acknowledged, this morning by the "amendments" of the Rules Committee, this to be true. It was said more than once that the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and For-eign Commerce were "playing politics." If they were, Mr. Speaker and fellow-Democrats, they played it successfully. [Applause.] We stood for principle. We were and are anxious to establish sixteen hours as the limit for work of railroad employees. We were utterly unwilling to become sponsors bill of "pretenses" submitted by the majority, and we said so. We were utterly unwilling to become sponsors for the We then contended, and did contend for three months, that the word "knowingly" in this bill applied to a corporation that had an artificial existence, and made it in effect an abortion and quite impossible for any conviction to take place under its provisions. I know the ingenious, tactful, and able men of the leading Republicans on the other side of this Hall were vo-ciferous in declaring that the word "knowingly" applied to "common earrier, its officers or agents." If all this be true, why do they come penitently forward this morning and strike from the bill "knowingly" where it occurs?

The fact is the Republicans unconditionally admit that the objections we so earnestly urged against that substitute bill last Monday were well taken by yielding to every complaint we made save one, as I now recall it. I can call out but one other phase of this bill that after a careful deliberation of months I myself object to as still being in there, and I believe even that will bring trouble in the enforcement of the law. What is it? It is in keeping with the letter and the spirit of all the obstructions and hindrances first inserted in the bill. It simply says this: That in all prosecutions under this act the common carrier shall be deemed to have had knowledge of all of the acts of its "duly authorized agents." I Mr. Speaker, that the words "duly authorized agents" in that bill for the purpose of throwing obstructions and obstacles in the way of convicting men who work their employees more than sixteen hours. Why put in the words "duly authorized?" Why not put it simply "the agent of the corporation," and that will embrace them all in their diversified employments. Is it not true that in a court proceeding the burden of proof will be on the Government seeking to recover, to prove under legal rules that the employee complaining was the common carrier's "duly authorized agent?" There is some mysteinfluence that has fallen over the Republicans of majority of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee What is it? since all this discussion came up last Monday. read from the President's last message, of December, 1906, and I am free to say, with a great deal of respect, that it is generally understood that he usually takes a hand in matters of this kind if the legislation does not suit him. What did he say in that message?

I call your attention to the need of passing the bill limiting the number of hours of employment of railroad employees. The measure is a very modest one, and I can conceive of no serious objection to it.

What measure was the President referring to when he said "the measure is a very modest one?" It was the Esch bill (H. R. 18671), introduced in the House April 26, 1906, and referred to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House and by that committee unanimously reported favor-

I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, in my speech on Monday, the vital points of difference between the substitute bill and the Esch and La Follette bills. We contended, Mr. Speaker, that the Republicans were seeking to foist on the country a measure for relief the provisions of which made it impracticable to enforce its penalties. In other words, they were to lay all the responsibility of the defeat of the law on the courts. The Republicans having conceded our contentions, having admitted that it was Democratic opposition and Democratic courage that prevented them from perpetrating on the country their sham measure, it behooves the Democrats, all of whom so earnestly desire helpful and sane legislation on this important subject, to vote solidly for the bill as amended by the Committee on Rules. This day's work ought to inspire Democrats to stand united on questions of principle and subjects of legislation and go to the country, if necessary, on our convic-

What, really, have the Republicans under these amendments What, really, have the Republicans under these amendments conceded besides erasing the word "knowingly," which was the little joker in their political play, intended to take all the tricks. We objected to the word "consecutive" as used in the bill in connection with the limit of "sixteen hours." It simply meant that the word "consecutive," as used in the bill, legalized, in effect, the working of an employee more than sixteen hours by not letting him be added to the first formal transfer. not letting him be on duty at any time for sixteen consecutive hours. That this word was so construed is clearly demonstrated by striking out the following paragraph from the bill by the Rules Committee, as follows:

Unless immediately prior to said twenty-four-hour period such employee had at least eight consecutive hours off duty and during said period of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty.

All of this vital and confusing paragraph is eliminated, and the provisions as left in the bill are practically the same as are in the La Follette bill.

Again we contended that the substitute of the majority provided such circumlocution, such a long roundabout way for an employee to get relief from a violation of the law by the common carrier, that it served as a prohibition. Hence the Rules Committee struck out this objectionable feature by eliminating these words "under the direction of the Attorney-General." It is idle to contend that the words "under the direction of the Attorney-General" means the same as "under the supervision of the Attorney-General." Direction, in legal and ordinary sense, means to tell the district attorney to proceed to file papers; that the Attorney-General has had the papers examined and you have a case or no case. Now, as the bill stands the district attorney can act as he does in all other matters, without first having to wait to be "directed" by the Attorney-General or the Department of Justice. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, the bill as presented by the majority last Monday, on motion to suspend the rules, appeared to me to hunt up all the difficulties, hindrances, and objections to enforcement which would have made the proceedings in court veritably a "moot court." These are the principal points the minority contended for and were yielded by the majority.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch].

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the railroad employees on this legislation is not by any means unanimous. records of our committee indicate that quite a large number of employees engaged in train operation protest against any legislation whatever on the subject, and those that favor legislation on the subject are not at all agreed as to the terms of such legislation. As indicative of this, I wish to call the attention of the House to a letter which I received on January 14 from Mr. H. R. Fuller, the able and industrious legislative representative of the railroad brotherhoods, criticising the Senate bill. That letter is as follows:

H. R. FULLER, 216 NEW JERSEY AVENUE NW., Washington, D. C., January 14, 1907.

Hon. J. J. ESCH, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Hon. J. J. Esch, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I am inclosing herewith a copy of Senate bill No. 5133, entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," which passed the Senate on the 10th instant with only one dissenting vote, and which has been referred to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

On behalf of the railroad employees who are seeking this legislation for the protection of their own lives and the lives of the traveling public, I most respectfully solicit your valuable support as a member of the committee in securing an early and favorable report upon this bill to the House, and would also submit for your consideration the following amendments, which we think are vitally important if the bill is to accomplish the object for which it is intended:

The words "carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers" as they appear in lines 9 and 10, page 1, should be stricken out, as it will be readily seen that their retention in the bill would exempt from its operation a large part of the traffic of an interstate railroad which is not either interstate or foreign freight or passengers; and in order to protect the lives of interstate passengers from the evit of excessive hours of service of employees it is just as necessary to prevent excessive hours of the employees on a train carrying intrastate commerce as it is to prevent excessive hours of the employees actually engaged upon the train upon which such interstate passengers are hauled, for the reason that trains are run indiscriminately without regard to the character of the commerce, and an overworked employee on an intrastate train is just as liable to cause a collision of his train with an interstate train as is an overworked employee on an interstate train liable to cause a collision of his train. A railroad engaged in interstate commerce is an instrument of such commerce, and therefore Congress has the authority to say that it shall not work its employees excessive hours for the reason that it endangers the lives of interstate passengers. Congress has in several acts exercised this authority over such railroads. The national arbitration act, approved June 1, 1898, provides "That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers and their officers, agents, and employees * * * engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad and partly by water for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory of the United States to an adjacent foreign country to any other place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country or from any place in the United States to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, approved March 3, 1901, and which received the consideration of and was reported favorably from the House Committee on leaves the track and of an accidents of the comployees."

The safety-appliance law of March 2, 1903, which also received the favorable consideration of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the Fifty seventh Congress contains this landing the complex contains the same contain

"And the provisions and requirements hereof and of said acts relating to train brakes, automatic couplers, grab frons, and the height of drawbars shall be held to apply to all trains, locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate Commerce."

House bill 18671 entitled "A bill to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon" contains this language:

"That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers, their officers, agents, and employees, engaged in the transportation of passengers and property by railroad in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States or from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States,"

The employers' liability law of Congress, approved June 11, 1906, provides:

"That every common carrier engaged in trade or contractions."

The employers' liability law of Congress, approved June 11, 1906, provides:

"That every common carrier engaged in trade or commerce in the District of Columbia, or in any Territory of the United States, or between the several States, or between any Territory and another, or between any Territory or Territories and any State or States, or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, shall be liable to any of its employees " of rail damages which may result from the negligence of any of its officers, agents, or employees, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, ways, or works."

The words "and except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving" as they appear in line 13, page 1, and lines 1, 2, and 3, page 2, should be stricken out, for the reason that all unavoidable accidents are covered in the word "casualty," as it appears on page 1. Then, too, there is no more reason for exempting delays to trains with which a train connects than there is for exempting delays to trains with these words were put in for the purpose of covering passenger trains which make connections, yet they are so broad that they could be made to cover freight trains which waited at a terminal for freight trains of another road to arrive before they started on their trips.

"For each and every such violation, to be recovered in a suit or suits to be brought by the United States district attorney in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction in the locality where such violation shall have been committed; and it shall be the duty of such district attorney to bring such suits upon duly verified information being lodged with him of such violation having occurred."

This would impose the same du

. H. R. FULLER, Legislative Representative.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the three grave defects of the Senate bill, called attention to by Mr. Fuller, are remedied in the House bill. Persuasion was used with Members of this House to support the Senate bill, notwithstanding it contained these grave defects. I was not one who had so little faith in the efficacy of a conference committee as to doubt that the conferees could improve the House amendment. I am gratified that the action of the Committee on Rules incorporated in the bill the ideas which I originally held and persistently contended for in committee, and I trust now that the bill as amended will receive the practically unanimous vote of both sides of this Chamber; if so, there need be no fear about its receiving Executive sanction when it gets to the other end of Pennsylvania avenue. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn].
Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the very estimable gentlemen who constitute the minority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce seldom make mistakes when they devote themselves to business. When they devote themselves to the game of politics, however, they sometimes blunder, and have recently done that and have induced their colleagues, the minority of this Chamber, to follow them in that blunder. Mr. Speaker, I want it to be understood that on the other day, when this matter was briefly discussed, these gentlemen, while reprobating the action of the minority of the committee in making its report, pinned their adhesion and their allegiance to the La Follette bill—the Senate bill. That was the burden of their song. In that they were to find all of the remedies which would correct the troubles in regard to this matter from which the country suffers. I want briefly to show how those gentlemen proposed to deport themselves with regard to actual legislation on this great subject. That bill provided that the common carrier should not require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than six-teen consecutive hours. There is not a Member of this House who understands that language who will dare to vote for that bill and stop there—not a member of the minority of that committee who dare vote for that bill and stop there. What does that do? In the case of the train that brought disaster to so many homes in this vicinity a little while ago, although it was under the management of an engineer who had been on duty forty-eight hours, no man could have been punished under the provisions of the Senate bill. No man can be punished under the provisions of the bill who is not connected with the movement of a train that is carrying interstate or foreign freight or passen-The fast mail trains and crews are exempt under the provisions of the Senate bill. The excursion trains carrying hundreds of passengers, that do not cross the State limits are exempt under the provisions of that bill. Every train that moves solely within the limits of the State are exempt under the provisions of the bill. That is the kind of relief that these gentlemen, in their pursuit of politics the other day, proposed to give to the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, see how deftly these acrobats get down from the pole on which they have climbed. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILIAMS] says that he objects because the word "knowingly" was inserted in line 3, of page 4; that it was to operate upon a corporation that had no soul, and therefore could not have knowledge. The language of the bill is:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or Did you ever read that? Again the bill says:

In all prosecutions under this act the common carrier shall be deemed to have had knowledge of all acts of its duly authorized agents.

Did the gentleman from Mississippi ever read that? Did he know that was in the bill? How puerile his objection now seems to be when the attention of the House is called to the provisions of the bill, but the word "knowingly" was "good enough Morgan" to enable him to slide down from the pole he had elevated himself upon. [Laughter.]

Again, the word "consecutive" seems to trouble the gentleman. Now, the provision in that section is this:

That no operator, train dispatcher, or other employee who, by the use of the telegraph or telephone, dispatches, reports, transmits, receives, or delivers orders pertaining to or affecting train movements shall be required or permitted to be or remain on duty for a longer period than nine consecutive hours in any twenty-four-hour period.

Not a day and night, but a twenty-four-hour period. He can not be permitted to remain on duty for more than nine consecutive hours in that period. That is the criticism of the gentleman, that he may be required to work practically continuously. In that he 's not correct. And then I would call his attention to this matter, that he now regards as a very important matter, that that was not in the Senate bill at all. provision with regard to telegraphers or employees of that kind,

But, again, the gentleman thinks that the word "duly very important, and that the bill has been wonderfully improved by introducing the word "satisfactory." If he can proved by introducing the word "satisfactory." If he can derive any consolation from that, he is welcome to it. But, again, the word "ordinary" is stricken out and the word "reasonable" introduced. The gentleman finds consolation by the committee because it contained the provision "and it shall be the duty of the district attorney under the direction of the Attorney-General to bring such suits, etc.

That is the law now. That language need not have been inserted. It will be the law if it is stricken out. Every district attorney acts under the direction of the Attorney-General. All of these hundreds of suits that are now being introduced against the railway companies for failure to observe the safetyappliance laws are under the direction of the Attorney-General; and so it is with regard to this act. Here are suits to be brought-not prosecutions, but suits to recover a penalty-not prosecutions instituted on indictments, and in those instances in all cases the district attorney acts under the direction of the Attorney-General, and he will continue to do it under the operation of this law whether that language remains in or goes out of the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the balance of my time-two minutes-to the gentleman from Georgia. BARTLETT.]

BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Herburn] charges that we, the minority members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, were guilty of playing politics on this bill on Monday last, and calls us "political acrobats," and that we to-day have "slid down the pole."

I can retort with much more truth that they, the majority members, are much better "political acrobats" than we, for they have been forced to get down off of their perch by some power. I do not know whether it was the "big stick" or not. Applause on the Democratic side.] The other day they undertook to force us, under suspension of the rules, to pass this bill without opportunity to amend it. We did not yield to that power and that pressure, but the gentlemen on the other side have yielded to some pressure by which they permit the amendments in this bill in the very identical way which the minority suggested in the report we made on this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman must not forget that his party went before the people in the Congressional election last November with a promise made on the stump and in their campaign book pledged to report and support a real efficient bill of this character limiting the hours of employment of railway employees, and not to support, as they undertook last Monday, a bill which is a fraud and a deception upon the railway employees and the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Republican campaign book of 1906 contained a letter from the President to Mr. James E. Watson, which was widely heralded as a "trenchant analysis of the issues" then before the people, and in that letter the President said:

I hope and have reason to believe that favorable action will be taken on the bill limiting the hours of employment of railway employees.

The action of a majority of the House on last Monday demonstrated that they had forgotten the promise then made when they undertook to force through a bill on this subject which their action to-day shows was not a fulfillment of the promise of the President and the Republicans to enact a law properly protecting the public and the railway employees in the matter of hours of employment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the report was made on this bill the minority members in their minority views called attention to the fact that we wanted to support the Senate bill in prefer-ence to the substitute reported by the majority, provided we could have the right to amend it by striking out the word "knowingly" and by putting into it the provision with reference to telegraphers and operators and making its enforcement effective. We call attention to the fact that there had been for months upon the Calendar of this House a bill known as the "Esch bill," unanimously reported by the Committee on Inter-state and Foreign Commerce of the House, which we stood ready to vote for without the change of a word, and they would not permit us to do it. We congratulate the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn] and the Republican majority that by some means they have been enabled to vote for a halfway decent and respectable bill, which will in some measure relieve the situa-[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I do not reply to the suggestions that either side has been playing politics, but I make reference to some of the leading performers in the farcical performances we have had upon this bill as sustaining my proposiin that. Does anybody else regard it as important? I certainly, for one, do not. Again, he objected to the bill reported side of this House. I have before me, on page 3304 of the Contion that all this is new matter to the gentlemen on the other oressional Record of a few days ago, the entire speech of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams]. He opposed sending the bill to conference under the proposition that was then submitted, and he undertook, in his usual graphic and very elegant manner, to tell what there was wrong about the bill. And I ask your attention to the fact that he did not name one of the changes that has been made in the report of the committee this morning. [Applause on the Republican side.] Not one. There is the proposition; there is the indictment; there is what he said about it, and he never pointed out to this House a single error that was in the bill. What do you think has caused the gentlemen on the east side of the House to get down on their marrow bones, and what power has pointed out to them the changes that we now propose to make in this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there? I call his attention to the fact that the minority report contained all of these suggestions, and that I had no time to go into details

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has no right to take me off the floor. The gentleman had twenty minutes of time, and he was arguing against the action of this side of the House. It was not enough for him, if he knew anything about it, and I assume he did, to quote the report of the minority. If he was fairly opposing the action of this side of the House, it was his duty to have told what was the matter with the bill under consideration. Now, for a moment, Mr. Speaker, let us see what he has

The word "knowingly" is stricken out, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] considers that a wonderful improvement. I want any lawyer on this floor to tell me if in his judgment a corporation under this law will ever be mulcted in damages where there is no allegation and proof of negli-gence sufficient to make a case independent of the use of the word "knowingly?" For my part, I do not believe in creating crimes which a party may commit without knowing he is committing a crime. But in the bill under consideration there is an express application of the term "knowingly"—that is, legal knowledge carried to it by the assertion that knowledge brought to the individual operator of a corporation shall be alleged against the corporation itself. It is the strongest language in the statute, as strong as any statute on the statute book of the United States. What is there left? We are told that prosecutions here. as the bill stands, are to be governed by the Department of Justice. Does anybody believe that? Does anybody believe there will be a prosecution made against a railroad company under this statute that is not directed by the Attorney-General? The general laws of the country give him power and control over these cases, so this language if stricken out is simply a matter that does not add to or take from the force of this bill. It was the Republicans on this side of this House that proposed to put into the bill the proposition that this limitation should be put upon telegraph operators. And you were ready to pass a bill and put it upon the statute books that would have limited the hours brakemen might work, but turn wide open the door for the telegraph operator and the train dispatcher to kill and murder, as they have been doing all along the line on these railroads.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope there will be a solid vote on this side on this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired; time for debate has expired; and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was under consideration before this House last Monday I was constrained to vote against it, notwithstanding my reluctance to differ with any measure recommended by the great Committee of the House on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It came up at that time under suspension of the rule and required for its passage a vote of two-thirds in its favor. It received a majority, but not two-thirds, and was therefore defeated. It was reported on Saturday, the 16th of February, and brought up for consideration on Monday, the 18th of February. We had but little time to examine or consider it.

My objection to it at that time was that the second section was blind, obscure, and indefinite, and that, if enacted into law in that form, its enforcement would lead to trouble, confusion, and no end of litigation. The judgment of those who voted against the bill has been vindicated, for it comes up now amended in several respects, and especially the second section has been amended by striking out the part which made it obscure and indefinite, and to which we objected. As thus amended it will pass the House with practical unanimity, for the reason that the membership of this House has been and is in favor of a law along the lines contained in the Senate bill and in this amendment and have only differed with reference to certain provisions contained in it.

Of late years wrecks and disasters on railroads have been so frequent, and in many cases so appalling, that the traveling public, as well as railway employees, demand that, so far as law may accomplish anything, it may be invoked and applied for the safety of employees and travelers. All seem to recognize the necessity of such a law; at all events, all recognize the ghastly fact that wrecks in the running service of railroads are increasing in number and fatalities.

It is suggested by some that this law will reduce wrecks and disasters on railroads to a minimum. I am not so optimistic, and do not expect it will accomplish such beneficent results. A safety-appliance law was passed some time ago and has been amended from time to time, and other precautions have been taken, and yet wrecks are on the increase. Engines, boilers, cars, and other appliances have been improved from year to year, both as to capacity and availability. Grades on most of the railroads have been reduced and roadbeds have been bal-Air brakes and block systems have been invented and lasted applied to the great railroads throughout the country, with the hope and expectation that casualties may be avoided. Telegraphy has been developed and the telephone has been invented, both of which are used in practical railroading. Steel and concrete culverts and bridges have displaced old wooden struc-Yet, with all these modern and approved appliances, management, and methods, the destruction of human life and of property has been increasing year after year.

Now, it is proposed by legislation to improve the character and fitness of the employees engaged in the running service of railroads, in the hope that by reason of so doing greater safety to the traveling public and less danger to the employees themselves may follow. For no matter how excellent the tracks, switches, rolling stock, and appliances and systems may be, unless the men are careful and competent accidents and unnecessary casualties will occur. The men should be not only careful. but they should be competent. They are engaged in most responsible employment. Lives and property are in their hands. A slight mistake or inattention may result in a terrible calam-Therefore the men should be not only sober, intelligent, and careful, but they should be in such physical condition at all times when engaged in this responsible work as to render the best service of which they are capable. A man may be a thoroughly efficient locomotive engineer when in his normal condition, but if under the influence of intoxicants he is not a safe man to intrust with an engine. Likewise, if he has worked so long and continuously that his body is exhausted and his mental faculties dull and sluggish he is not a fit or competent man for such work; and what is true of the engineer is true of all the other men engaged, directly or indirectly, in the running

On this subject I speak not only from the statistics furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by railorad commissions throughout the country, showing the number of people—employees and travelers—killed and injured during recent years, but I speak somewhat from personal experience and observation. I have during my professional career tried many negligence cases against railroad corporations and have given some study to the causes of wrecks and disasters in the running service of those roads, and I believe that many of them have been and are caused by the fact that the men engaged in the operation of trains are, by overwork, lack of sleep and needed rest, rendered unfit for the duties which they undertake to discharge.

It is a matter of much surprise that railroad managements and the employees have not of their own volition corrected these mistakes and avoided many of those disasters. It is for the interest of both that greater care be observed and greater safety assured. Corporations have every possible motive to avoid accidents. They may not be liable in many instances for death losses to their employees, because such claims and actions may often be avoided by the defenses that the risks were assumed by the employees or the accidents caused by the negligence of some coemployee; but the corporations are liable in practically all cases for deaths and injuries of passengers, and they are insurers of freight, and therefore are absolutely Then wrecks give their liable for all losses in that regard. roads bad reputations and cause them to lose business. On the other hand, the employees are even more vitally concerned, because their lives are in danger. There is no adequate compensation to a man for the loss of an arm or leg, or to the family for the loss of the breadwinner. Yet both the corporations and employees have drifted along, the companies paying damages and the employees suffering injuries from accidents which could, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence on the part of both, have been avoided.

I am not disposed to throw all the responsibility or shift all the blame in such cases onto the corporations. The men are paid not by the month or day generally, but by the mile or trip and the number of miles made in the month. They are thereand the number of miles made in the month. They are therefore anxious to make as many trips as possible and are naturally inclined to undertake return trips to their homes when they are not in proper physical condition for the work.

It is hoped that this law may do what the managements and men have failed to accomplish; that a statute with a penalty for its violation may prevent the men from engaging in the management of trains, passenger or freight, who are not in a proper physical condition to discharge that responsible and arduous work. The public has been demanding such a law, and the organizations of railway employees are in favor of it. This bill as now amended has, as I am informed, the indorsement of those railway employees' organizations, and if enacted into law it will be up to them to faithfully observe it and see into law it will be up to them to faithfully observe it and see that it is intelligently and conscientiously enforced.

There are three classes of people who will be affected by this proposed legislation and who are therefore interested in it. The employees are the most directly concerned, because their lives are in danger by the negligence of their coservants who are overworked and unfit for the service. The corporations are interested, for they must pay the damage caused by wrecks. They are entitled to a hearing and to fair and considerate treatment in the law which will perhaps require them to modify their former methods of doing business and impose penalties in cases of violation. They should not be hampered or crippled by the enactment of drastic and unreasonable laws, but they should recognize the fact that the number of disasters is constantly growing and becoming more appalling year after year.

And if a law will help in avoiding those disasters they should encourage it and cheerfully and conscientiously obey it. Then the third party concerned is the traveling public. They pay their fares and put their lives into the hands of the companies and of the men employed in the management of trains. Great wrecks and disasters have been so numerous and terrible that the passenger now feels when he enters a car that he is taking his life in his hands and subjecting himself to perils that are not necessary. He feels that there is something wrong in the management of the railroads, else there would not be so much

The public demands a law like this, in the hope that greater safety may be secured, and in obedience to the demand on the part of the employees and public the Congress has undertaken to legislate on this important subject.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, considering the importance of this bill, I would like to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 281, nays 0, answered "present" 1, not voting 95, as follows:

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 24537) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference,

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Military Academy appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House Mr. Hull, Mr. Capron, and Mr. Slayden.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and pending that motion I desire to make a

But one week of the session remains. It is of the utmost importance that this bill reach the Senate by Monday morning. I shall therefore ask the House to remain in continuous session until the bill is completed. I think we can complete it by early to-night, and that there will be no special hardship on any Member; but it is of the utmost importance that it be completed between now and Monday morning.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman

if it would not be better to take a recess at half past 6, for an hour or two, to enable gentlemen to go home and get their suppers and come back here feeling comfortable?

Mr. TAWNEY. The difficulty about that, Mr. Speaker—
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not want to hinder you in any way, but I think it will expedite the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. If we have not a quorum when we return here, it will be impossible to go into Committee of the Whole if anyone makes the point.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to remind the gentleman that he made the same observation the other day, and at the night session we had a very large quorum in attendance.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a matter we can determine later on in the day.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. TAWNEY was Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25745-the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. Warson in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

One half of the foregoing sums under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether any part of the appropriation for the improvement of the Potomac is for the purpose of erecting bath houses or other facilities to promote the health and welfare of the people generally and especially the poorer classes of the residents of the District?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the appropriations do not contemplate the construction of any bath houses. They will provide, however, for promoting the health of the public in so far as a park contributes to that end. This is merely for the completion of the park which was begun in the last four years. There is a strip of land on the Potomac side which it is proposed to improve during the next fiscal year. The improvements authorized at the last session of Congress are practically completed, and I think every Member of the House who has visited that park is not only satisfied with the result, but convinced that the remainder of the park ought to be improved in the same manner. It does not contemplate bath houses.

Mr. WANGER. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I heartily approve of what has been done, but it seems to me the work is sadly incomplete; and it is a sorry commentary on the capital of the nation, supposedly having a government by the people and for the people, that there is not that provision made for the enjoyment of the average citizen, and especially of the poorer citizen, that the capitals of many monarchies provide. I hope this plan very soon will not only be adopted, but provision made for securing these valuable facilities for the health and happiness of everybody.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania further that there was no estimate submitted to Congress for an appropriation for the purposes mentioned by him.

Mr. WANGER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Under appropriations herein contained no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavements in Washington City at a higher price than $1.85 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1886, and with a base of not less than 6 inches in thickness.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that paragraph.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of placing in the Record some tables with reference to the effect of the amendment to letter carriers' pay recently adopted in the House, and also of the Crane bill. With the leave of the House, I desire to place these in the Record at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey desires to put in the Record the matter he refers to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the matter referred to:

FEBRUARY 23, 1907.

In order to inform the House as to the probable effect upon the pay of post-office employees by the bill passed by the House the other day, and of the Senate (Crane) bill, I beg leave to insert in the Record certain tables, certain tables.

I. The effect of the House provision in cities where annual receipts are less than $50,000.

II. The same where receipts are between $50,000 and $200,000.

III. The same where receipts are over $200,000.

IV. The effect of the Crane bill in the last two cases.

I. In cities where the gross receipts are less than $50,000 a carrier would earn the same amount of money in the first six years of his service as he would under the present law, as can be seen by the following table:

PRESENT LAW.

$19.00 per month, average as substitute. 12 months.

228. 00 per year as substitute. 3 years.

684. 00 total earnings, three years as substitute. 600. 00 first year regular service. 850. 00 second year regular service. 850. 00 third year regular service.

6)2,984.00 total earnings for six years.

365) 497. 34 average annual salary.

1.36 average per day.

PROPOSED LAW.

$19.00 per month, average as substitute.

228. 00 per year as substitute. 3 years.

684.00 total earnings, three years as substitute. 600.00 first year regular service. 800.00 second year regular service. 900.00 third year regular service.

6)2,984.00 total earnings for six years.

365) 497. 34 average annual salary.

In twenty years the carriers in these cities would earn an average annual salary of $779.20, or $2.13 per day.

II. In cities where the gross receipts are between $50,000 and $200,000 the average annual salary which could be earned in twenty years would be $849.20, or $2.33 per day, as can be seen by the following table:

$19.00 per month, average as substitute.

228, 00 per year as substitute.

684.00 total earnings, three years as substitute, 600.00 first year regular service.
800.00 second year regular service.
900.00 third year regular service.
14,000.00 fourteen years at $1,000 per year.

20) 16, 984, 00 total earnings for twenty years.

2. 33 average per day.

III. In offices where the gross receipts are in excess of $200,000 per annum it would take a carrier eight years to earn the same amount of money under the proposed law that he earns in the same period of time under the present law, as the following table will show:

PRESENT LAW.

$19.00 per month, average as substitute. 12 months.

228. 00 per year as substitute. 3 years.

684.00 total earnings, three years as substitute.

1.74 average per day.

In twenty years the carriers in these offices would earn an average annual salary under the proposed law of $914.20, or $2.50 per day.

IV. If the bill introduced in the Senate by Mr. Crane, and which was passed by that honorable body under date of February 1, and which meets the approval of the carriers of the country, should be enacted into law the average annual salary which could be earned by the carriers in first-class offices in twenty years would be $949.20, or $2.61 per day.

And in second-class offices the average annual salary would be $834.20, or $2.29 per day, as the following tables will show:

FIRST-CLASS OFFICES.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I raised the point of order on this paragraph on the ground that the price for concrete pave-ment has been increased from $1.65 to $1.85, and that is a change of existing law as much as would be a change in the increase of salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the chairman inform the Chair whether there is authorization of law for this purpose? The gentleman from Arkansas has made the point of order that this changes existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that it is a limitation on the appropriation on the construction of asphalt walks. There is no law on the subject. There has been carried in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for many years a similar limitation as to the cost of the construction of sidewalks, but this year, at this session of Congress, the District Commissioners appeared before the subcommittee on the District appropriation bill and represented that it was absolutely impossible to secure any bids for the construction of the sidewalks at the limitation fixed in the previous appropriation. The District Committee increased that price, and the appropriation in this bill is made to conform to the price fixed in the District appropriation bill.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman from Minnesota states that the interestible to be residently constructed for a less price.

it is impossible to have sidewalks constructed for a less price than this mentioned in the bill, of course I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs of building where Abraham Lincoln died: For painting and miscellaneous repairs, $200.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he will consent to return to this paragraph after we conclude the reading of the bill, so that I may offer an amendment to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the nature of the amendment the gentleman desires to offer?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment appropriating a sufficient amount for the erection of a memorial tablet to be placed upon this building, being the building where Abraham Lincoln died.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I will have no objection to returning to the item.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to that same paragraph. It is a United States building, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.
Mr. SCOTT. My understanding is that an admission fee is charged by those in care of it. I would like just a word of explanation as to the arrangement that is made by the caretakers which authorizes them to charge an admission.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman that the man in charge of it owns an exhibit in the building. The custodian receives no compensation from the Government. The fee that he charges for persons visiting the building to see this exhibit is the compensation for services as custodian.

Mr. DAVIDSON. How much does that amount to in a year? Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at New Haven, Conn.: For completing improvement in accordance with the adopted and extended projects, $64,926.10.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 127 strike out lines 14, 15, 16, and 17.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say in explanation, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is offered upon the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton], and is the same item that went out of the sundry civil appropriation bill a year ago. It seems that the sundry civil appropriation bill a year ago. It seems that this amount is not required at this time.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, it is true that this item went out a year ago—the item which it is proposed to strike out now. The item is a balance due under the original authorization for New Haven Harbor, and we ask for the continuing of the dredging of the Quinnipiack River. Why this should be stricken out last year and again stricken out this year requires a little explanation to understand. I wish the gentleman would give the House the reasons why it is to be stricken out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is not on the floor at this time. He expected to be when this item was reached and himself would have made the motion to have it stricken out on the ground, as I understand it, that the work, if done, will be done primarily in the interest of private parties, and that it is not a public necessity that is being served. That, as I understand it from the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, is the reason for asking that it go out. But because there is a balance and because this work is authorized the War Department, of course, submitted their estimate for the balance in order to complete this work. That is the only reason that I know of for omitting the item; and when the statement was made to me by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, a gentleman who has given a great deal of thought and consideration to all these river and harbor improvements and who is intimately acquainted with all of them—this one in particular, having personally investigated the matter on the ground—I felt that the Committee on Appropriations is justified in granting his request and acting upon his judgment, which, I think, the Committee of the Whole will be justified in doing.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, that may be true, but last year the Secretary of War himself went to the committee and requested this to be placed in the bill as reported last year. Now it comes again, and now the gentleman says it is because of some private interests and that a public benefit is not being served, and he gives that as the reason this item should go out. I hope that this item will not be stricken out. The money is a part of the sum originally authorized by Congress for New Haven Harbor. It ought to be appropriated, and if there is any private interest involved there I wish the gentleman would tell me who it is that is being benefited.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to give the gentleman the iuformation. I have not made an investigation personally. The committee has acted upon the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I now call for a

Mr. SPERRY. I hope it will not be stricken out.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were-ayes 38, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairing roadways to national cemeteries: For repairs to roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress: Provided, That no railroad shall be permitted upon the right of way which may have been acquired by the United States to a national cemetery, or to encroach upon any roads or walks constructed thereon and maintained by the United States, $12,000: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway within the corporate limits of any city, town, or village.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to get a little information from the chairman of the committee. I see here is an appropriation we have carried heretofore for repairs to roadways to national cemeterles. I would like to ask the chairman what roads the Government accepts jurisdiction over, and how many roads it is intended to keep in repair by this appropriation of $12,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa that there are twenty-three of these roads to be repaired and kept in proper condition, aggregating 27 miles. The annual appropriations heretofore made for this purpose, it is claimed by the Department, are entirely inadequate. We have been appropriating, so far as the record for this purpose shows, since 1894 annually. Now they say the $12,000 which we gave them last year and the year before, which amount was less by $3,000 than they were receiving the four preceding years, is not sufficient to keep these roads in repair, and the estimate shows it would require at least $25,000 during the next fiscal year to meet that expenditure.

Mr. HULL. What special authority of Congress has been granted in these roads, simply on appropriation bills?
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The language is, "which have been constructed by special authority of Congress." It is not permissible to be used for any other purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. The authority was given by law. to time Congress has accepted jurisdiction over roads and has been appropriating under those laws for a number of years.

Mr. HULL. Is the national cemetery at Vicksburg one of these roads?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it is. I think it has a separate appropriation.

Mr. HULL. Does not the gentleman know whether it is or

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not. They do not give the

Mr. HULL. They do not give the cemeteries?
Mr. TAWNEY. They do not give the exact location of all of

Mr. HULL. The committee in its hearings, then, took no steps to find out what roads are included in this general provi-

Mr. TAWNEY. In the case of the Vicksburg Cemetery road the special appropriation was given because exceptional circumstances demanded the necessity for this improvement. The amount necessary to improve the road at Vicksburg would have increased so much this appropriation we thought best to make a specific appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. HULL. How long is the Vicksburg road?

Mr. TAWNEY. My recollection is it is about 2 miles.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion, as I have not enough information to make any motion to strike out the paragraph. I was in hopes the chairman could give the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

National cemetery, Vicksburg, Miss.: For repairs to the Government roadway to the Vicksburg, Miss., National Cemetery, $10,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to see if I can get some information on this. I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, why the national cemetery road at Vicksburg is given a special appropriation here, when, on page 133, a general provision has been put in for all roads over which the Government has assumed jurisdiction?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say in answer to the gentleman from

Mr. HULL. Let me add one more word, so you can explain it all—with a further proviso in the general appropriation that no part shall be used within the corporate limits of any city or town, and you leave it out of this appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the reason there is a special appropriation for this road is because of the cost necessary to repair the road and put it in shape for travel. The amount, if added to the general appropriation for this purpose, would very largely increase it. The conditions here are exceptional, owing to a flood or some condition of nature-I do not now recall what it was-and if we increase the general appropriation to the extent to cover this item now, we would then in the next Congress be called upon to reduce it, and it is harder to reduce these appropriations a great deal than to increase them, as the gentleman from Iowa well knows. This is to complete the work, and when it is done the general repairs of this road will come under the head of the general appropriation for that purpose. I will say the length of the road is 7,200 feet, and runs along the eastern bank of the Mississippi River to the northern limits of the city of Vicksburga distance of 7,200 feet. The greater portion of the road is located on the side of a hill. The expense of keeping it in proper repair is naturally great, and the longer such repairs are delayed the greater will be the cost of making.

On June 6, 1906, proposals were invited for the making of Under an appropriation given at the last session these repairs. of Congress the lowest bid was $9,715, which the gentleman will see is almost equal to the appropriation for the current fiscal year for the general repairs on all of the twenty-seven roads over which the Government has assumed jurisdiction. But the work was not authorized, as the necessary fund was not available.

Mr. HULL. My objection to the whole thing lies in the fact that localities are gradually getting the Government to assume charge of their local roads. This road is of no use to the Gov-ernment. It is of great use to the city of Vicksburg. There is a national cemetery there with three men in the employ of the Government to take care of it, and for the Government of the United States to be saddled with the care of these roads approaching national cemeteries, in sums of ten thousand or twenty thousand or thirty thousand dollars for the benefit of the locality, is an absolute injustice to the Government. Congress will soon have all of them at enormous expense.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. In one minute. I am inclined to think that we have assumed a jurisdiction over this that would not make it subject to a point of order, for the reason that at the first session of this Congress, we passed a bill recognizing our jurisdiction and granting a right of way to a railroad on the condition that they keep that part of the road in good repair between the rails and 2 feet on each side.

Mr. TAWNEY. Two feet on each side.

Mr. HULL. I do not know whether the committee has taken that into consideration as reducing the cost or not.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was in the hearings and was fully taken into consideration.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will turn to page 214 of the hearings, he will see that the matter is fully discussed there.

Mr. HULL. I would like very much, if the Government assumes jurisdiction, that the committee would put them in good repair for the localities with the proviso that thereafter the Government should not be called upon to maintain the road. It is a question in my mind whether we do assume jurisdiction by simply making an appropriation. I want to give this committee warning now that with the departure of the Committee on Appropriations in the bill in this session, in inserting new places, that you are going to have jurisdiction ceded to you approaching every fort and every national cemetery in this country. The abutting property owners will gladly give deeds if that compels us to build the road. You have to get a deed of it, and a million dollars will not pay the expense the Government will be called upon to meet.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman point out one road in this bill where we have assumed jurisdiction?

Mr. HULL. I will point two or three if the committee will give me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. I will call attention here to the road at Barrancas, Fla. There is a bill on the Calendar of the House making an appropriation for this road, in which they ask $32,000. The committee refused to grant any money to build this road beyond the limits of the reservation, and on consultation with the parties representing Florida and the War Department representing the Government as to what it would cost, they amended the bill, giving them $12,000 to build to the Government line, and put a proviso in limiting it so far as the same lies on the land of the United States. I know what the gentleman wants to say, that in 1897 the Government did give $10,000 to build this road.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is not what I wanted to say at all.

Mr. HULL. Congress did it anyhow. Now, Mr. Chairman, the city of Pensacola has gone on and commenced the construction of the road to the Government line. They have made the appropriation for it and they have arranged to build it. Pass this proposition as carried in this bill and the Government of the United States would refund to the city of Pensacola the entire amount they are now expending on their own roads. That is one thing that the committee has taken over. . Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to the fact that in the hearings on this matter we find this:

The records show that the Government owns the entire roadway from the north end of the bridge over Glass Bayou at the northern limits of the city to the southern entrance of the national cemetery, an approximate distance of 7,200 feet, no portion of which is within the corporate limits of the city of Vicksburg.

Mr. HULL. I am speaking of Pensacola. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But it was as to Vicksburg that you The Government owns the road. It may started the inquiry. have been an error, it may have been a mistake to acquire it by the action of your committee or some other committee, but it has been ceded, and the Government has accepted the title. Of course the Government does not have to accept the title, but it having been ceded to it and title having been acquired, the Government does own this road from the title thus acquired, and the local authorities can not in prove this road; and there is nobody that can do it but the Government of the United States. If the gentleman is correct, I submit that the proper procedure would be for his committee to report a bill ceding back all the roads to the State government.

Mr. HULL. I think so, too, if it is done by the committee's action; but my impression is that it is accepted by making appropriations, but without any other action.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. HULL. We all agree that an item put on an appropriation bill does not make law for an appropriation on any other appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no. The Government owns this road, and either the Government ought to keep it in repair or the gentleman's committee ought to report a bill ceding the land to the local authorities.

Mr. HULL. I am glad to get the information that the Government really does own the road.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to make an inquiry, in order to get at the right situation in this matter. I wish to ask, Do I understand both gentlemen to take the position that they believe if the Government owned a road in some locality that the Government was obliged to spend thousands of dollars upon it every year for the purpose of keeping it in repair? I want to know whether they think, as a matter of law, that the owning of the road imposes any obligation to improve?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If a road or highway in any part of the United States should be ceded and is accepted by the Gov-ernment of the United States and is owned by the United States, if it has ceased to be in repair and becomes unfit for the purpose for which it was formerly used, and there is no one else that can repair it but the Government of the United States, under those circumstances I think that the Government ought to keep it in repair.

Mr. KEIFER. It imposes no legal obligation on the Government to keep it in repair.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; it does not impose a legal obligation.

Mr. KEIFER. There being no legal obligation imposed on the Government to repair it, there is no existing law to make this appropriation.

Mr. HULL. I withdraw the point of order as to Vicksburg. The Clerk read as follows:

Road to national cemetery, Pensacola, Fla.: For completing the construction of the Government roadway to the Barrancas, Fla., National Cemetery, near Pensacola, Fla., $32,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order? Mr. HULL. It is entirely new legislation, not included in any law. For five years they have been seeking authority of law. There have been bills introduced, and never until this year was a recommendation made by the War Department in the estimates.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would say that this road is owned by the Government of the United States. On page 511 of the hearings, Captain Parker, in charge of this cemetery, said:

The amount that we want to repair is about 1½ miles in length, and they own that part of the road. It joins the road running to Pensacola, which has been built by the county. The read is about a mile and a half long, but there is a bridge to be built across the Bayou and a half long, but there is a bridge to be built across the bayou Grande.

Mr. TAYLOR. The bridge is 1,270 feet in length.

The Chairman. How much of this road has been constructed that this money is for the completion of?

Captain Parker. There was an appropriation of $10,000 in 1898. From this appropriation about $8,000 was used in building this bridge across Bayou Grande. The remainder of the appropriation was used in clearing the ground of trees, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. From the reading of the paragraph itself and from the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, this seems to be an appropriation for the continuation of a Government work in progress, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HULL. Then, I move to strike out the paragraph included in lines 15 to 18.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard

Mr. HULL. I do. I wish to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs has reported a bill on this subject, and that the city of Pensacola has accepted the provisions of it, so that there is no excuse for the Congress of the United States appropriating $32,000 for a proposition to build a road where the locality itself is willing to recognize the justice of building their road outside of the line of the Government property.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption

there?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.
Mr. TAWNEY. I want the committee to have full information as to the facts. We appropriated money for the construction of this bridge

Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the principal item of cost to be expended out of this appropriation. The bridge that we constructed was almost entirely swept away last September by the storm at Pensacola. Just a few piles were left, and it is for the purpose of building 1½ miles of road and rebuilding the bridge.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not propose to limit it to the line of the Government, what is owned by the United States, but proposes to build it to Pensa-It is precisely with that item on which the Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull to inquire whether the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would accept as an amendment the limitation in the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL. If he will accept that, I will withdraw my motion to strike out.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Why does not the gentleman offer the amendment?

I will change my motion, then, with the consent of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is confined now to what the Government

Mr. HULL. There is nothing to indicate that the Government owns the entire line covered by the committee provisions. Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has not seen the paragraph.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes, I have. Mr. TAWNEY. And I submit, before the gentleman begins to criticise the language of the bill, he ought to read it.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York has read the paragraph and is as familiar with it as the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the gentleman has misstated it, if he is familiar with it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to change my motion so as to amend the paragraph, so that it will read:

For completing construction of the Government roadway to the Barrancas, Fla., National Cemetery, so far as the same lies on the land of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment, Mr. Chairman. This is for the completion of a Government road. Now, I can not conceive how we can be more definite as to what road the money is to be expended upon. It is the road owned by the Government. If it was not owned by the Government, it would not be a Government road, and I submit that there is no necessity for any further limitation.

Mr. HULL. In answer to that, I should like to say just one word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks to have his amendment changed in certain particulars; and without objection it will be so changed, and the Clerk will report it to the

Mr. HULL. After the word "roadway," in line 17, insert the words "so far as the same lies on the land of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "roadway," in line 17, page 135, the following:
"So far as the same lies on land of the United States."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the language of the paragraph as it stands in the bill now reads as follows:

For completing the construction of the Government roadway-The Government roadway to where?

To the Barrancas, Fla., National Cemetery, near Pensacola, Fla., $32,000.

Now, the only road on which this money can be expended, or any part of it, is the Government road, the road owned by the Government, the road leading to the national cemetery, and the road near Pensacola.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to tell the Committee of the Whole where the road begins? Does it begin on State land or does it begin on Government land?

Mr. TAWNEY. It begins on Government land and ends on Government land

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If that is true, that takes care of it.

Mr. HULL. If that is true, then this amendment can do no possible harm.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, that amendment would unsettle a great many of the most valuable roads and approaches to our national parks and cemeteries in the South. To illustrate, the Government has acquired the right to occupy and use—has, if you please, acquired an easement upon the road leading from Chattanooga to the Chickamagua National Park, the old Lafayette turnpike. That provision that is proposed to be put into this bill, if it applied to that, would prevent the Government from spending money to repair and keep in repair that great thoroughfare, which is absolutely indispensable to a proper occupation of that property. The Government, to all intents and purposes, owns the road, by cession of the legislatures of the two States, Georgia and Tennessee, and while it is not on Government property, in the proper sense of the term, the road is the property of the Government for the pur-poses of the enjoyment of the easement granted therein; and so I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this road begins on Government land, it ends on Government land, it is a Government road, and the appropriation is made for the improvement of that Government road. No language that the gentleman from Iowa or the gentleman from New York can suggest will make it more specific than the language in the paragraph making the appropriation, and I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a report from General Humphrey, the Quartermaster-General of the Army, dated February 14, 1906, in which, speaking of this road, he says:

The records of this office show that the total length of this road from the west limits of the city of Pensacola to the national cemetery is 25,800 feet, or about 4.89 miles. Of this 1,270 feet are included in a bridge, and about 600 feet at the beginning of the road on the west side of Bayou Chico is macadamized. Of the total 25,800 feet of road, about 7,400 feet are within the Government reservation.

The portion of the road from the national cemetery to the city of Pensacola which lies on the Government reservation is on the naval reservation.

The land transportation facilities between the national cemetery, Barrancas Barracks, and the navy-yard—in fact, between the Government reservation and the city of Pensacola—are very poor.

It is considered by this office that this roadway should be improved and placed in a proper condition. The passage of this bill is therefore recommended.

And then in another communication, dated April 21, 1906, Quartermaster-General Humphrey says:

In regard to the construction of that portion of the road which does not lie on Government reservation, and reducing the estimate accordingly, you of course understand that an appropriation of $10,000 was made for the entire roadway up to the west limits of the city of Pensacola in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1897, and that as much of this roadway as possible was constructed under that appropriation, which, however, was too small to perform the work in a proper and substantial manner; hence the call which has been made for several years for additional money to complete this work.

Now there is enough there to show that if this empendment is Now, there is enough there to show that if this amendment is not put in the bill they will construe it as they construed a former provision and apply it to the whole road on the Government property and on the other, and inasmuch as Pensacola, as I understand, is willing to construct their share of the road, I do not know why we should not limit it to the Government road.

Mr. TAWNEY, It is limited now. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want, in reply to the gentleman from New York, to call attention to the portion of the hearings of the officer of the Quartermaster's Department, at the head of which General Humphrey is:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is for the road to the national cemetery, Pensacola, Fla. For completing the construction of the Government roadway to Barrancas, Fla., National Cemetery, near Pensacola, $32,000.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Government own that 5 miles of road?
Captain PARKER. The amount that we want to repair is about 1½ miles in length, and they own that part of the road. It joins the road running to Pensacola, which has been built by the county. The road is about a mile and a half long, but there is a bridge to be built across the Bayou Grande.

This, it seems to me, is a complete answer to what has here been said. It appears that there is a road running to Pensa-cola the whole of which is 5 miles in length and of which about a mile and a half is Government road, owned by the Government of the United States. This bill provides that this money is for the improvement of that Government road, and yet it is said that under such language the Department will spend money not on the Government road, but on the extension of the road owned by the county. I deny that such a thing would be possible, and to insert in this bill the language which the gentleman from Iowa has offered would be about as wise as to provide an appropriation for the improvement of the Capitol and then provide that no portion of it should be spent upon property not owned by the Government of the United States.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. In the hearings before the Military Committee this report of the Quartermaster-General means, if it means anything, the building of the entire road into the city of Pensacola. The blueprints, the report of the engineer, showed it, and I assume the gentleman had the same thing before his commit-It showed that this $32,000 would complete the road into the city of Pensacola.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not at all; they showed exactly the contrary in our committee.

Mr. HULL. They showed exactly that in our committee, and that is the reason why we limited it. I will ask the gentleman if the Government owns a mile and a half of this road and this limitation is put in, can not the money be spent on the mile and a half owned by the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The money will be spent on the mile and a half of road owned by the Government without the limitation being put in.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Is not the part of the road owned by the State a government road? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Why, does the gentleman say that a State is not a government?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In every item put into an appropriation bill where the word "Government" is used it refers to the Government of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Is there any judicial opinion to that effect? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think it needs any judicial opinion. When it speaks of construction by the Government, it means the Government of the United States and not some other government than that for which we are legislating.

Mr. MANN. I would be inclined to agree with the gentleman, but it is not absolutely certain that that is the case.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman what action by Congress has ever been had to accept any part of this road outside of the limits of the reservation except the appropriation

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In answer to the gentleman I will say that I base my statement on the testimony uncontroverted here by the officer of the Quartermaster's Department that the Government owns a mile and a half of that road.

Mr. HULL. We had nothing before us to show that the Government owned anything outside of the reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman does not doubt that this is the fact that we do own it?

Mr. HULL. I doubt the truthfulness of the officer. I will change the word "truthful," and say that I doubt his infor-

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it isn't, a fact that $19,000 of this appropriation will be used in the construction of a new bridge?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. MADDEN. And all the rest is necessary to construct the road within the reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Within the reservation, and the Government owns the ground on which it will be made.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As I understand it, the principal question in controversy between the two gentlemen from Iowa is largely verbal and technical. The gentleman from Iowa on the committee [Mr. SMITH] claims that he already does by his bill what the other gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] wants to be

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am the mere intervenor in the controversy between the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, Do I not state the controversy correctly?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; in a sense. Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So it is largely a technical question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; largely a technical question as to whether the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] is better able to draft the language of this bill than is the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In other words, the committee does not like to be criticised indirectly.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, we have no objection to that. Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then, why not pass the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, when this matter was before the Committee on Appropriations for consideration the following occurred. I read from the hearings:

ing occurred. I read from the hearings;

Captain Parker. The bridge would cost about $8,000.

The Chairman. So $24,000 of this appropriation would then be for building a mile and a half of road?

Captain Parker. Yes, sir; 1½ miles.

There was an appropriation of $10,000 in 1898, which was used in building a bridge across Bayou Grande and also in clearing away the trees from this land over which the road was to run. The appropriation would be used for grading and surfacing, $11,150; for building the new pile bridge, $19,390.

The Chairman. So that the new bridge that you propose to put in in place of the one that was washed out will cost about $10,000 more than the other one.

Captain Parker. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. What is the cause of the increased cost?

Captain Parker. Well, for one thing, material and larbor are higher, and another thing, we wanted to build a better bridge, one that will not be washed away.

The Chairman. Have you got the several items that go to make up this item of expenditure?

Captain Parker. The first item is grading and surfacing and restoring, $11,150. The second item is the pile bridge, $19,390. That makes a total of $30,540, and the difference would be for contingencies which might arise.

Mr. Smith. All but about $2,000 worth of work that has been done which might arise.

Mr. SMITH. All but about $2,000 worth of work that has been done has been lost through this flood?

Captain Parker. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no question about the fact that the money appropriated in this section is to be limited to the portion of the road which is on Government property purely, and as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. has just stated, the increased cost lies in the fact that the Government is compelled to reestablish a bridge across Bayou Grande swept away in the hurricane of last September at Pensacola. The appropriation in the sundry civil bill of $10,000 for this road in 1897 went into that bridge practically. Now, nearly $20,000 is required to be put into this bridge, under modern cost, to make it as the Government would like to construct it. There is no attempt on the part of the city of Pensa-cola to get something out of Congress which it is not entitled to, or to get something in a roundabout way through this committee which it can not get through the Committee on Military Affairs. There is a bill pending on the Calendar, introduced by myself in this House, appropriating $32,000 to cover the cost of this road. It has been reported out favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, but has been reduced in amount to $12,000. That bill I shall call up for passage at the earliest practical moment if this sundry civil paragraph fails. The city of Pensacola, by private subscription, is building this road from the city line up to the Government reservation line, and I have here a letter written to me by the secretary of the chamber of commerce explaining the matter, the amount of work done, and the character of it, and I desire that letter to go upon the record as showing the bona fides of the people of that community. That letter I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF PENSACOLA, Pensacola, Fla., February 18, 1907.

Hon. W. B. LAMAR, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Hon. W. B. Lamar, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Referring to yours of recent date to Mr. Frank L. Mayes, in which you request that he have the Chamber of Commerce write you with reference to the plans of this (Escambia) county in the matter of a road from the city limits of Pensacola to Bayou Grande, to connect with the proposed military road from Bayou Grande to the national cemetery, I beg to advise that the county is now working all of its convicts on this road and that about half of the road has been completed. As soon as the road is completed, which will be in the course of the next ninety days, the county commissioners have planned to construct a substantial steel bridge across Bayou Chico to replace the present wooden structure which is now in use across this bayou.

The county does not contemplate rebuilding the Government bridge which spans Bayou Grande and which was practically destroyed in the September hurricane. I am of the impression that the War Department contemplates reconstructing this bridge. Some three or four weeks ago there was a civil engineer here from the Quartermaster-General's office to inspect this bridge and report upon the cost of reconstruction. I accompanied him upon his visit of inspection, and from my conversation with him gained the impression that it was the intention of the War Department to repair the bridge without reference to the passage of the military road bill now pending. Inquiry at the office of the Quartermaster-General will develop whether or not my impressions were correct.

I might add that a large portion of the expense of building the road between the two bayous is being liquidated by private subscriptions secured with the idea that there will be no hitch in the passage of the bill for the construction of the road across the Government reservation.

Very truly, yours,

W. C. JONES. Secretary.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, it appears, then, that in these 5 miles of road between the city limits of Pensacola and the military post there are two bridges, one over Bayou Chico and one over Bayou Grande. Bayou Chico is off the Government reservation, and the county of Escambia is now preparing to build a steel bridge over it. A line of road between the res-ervation line and the city of Pensacola is being constructed at the cost of the individual citizens of that city, so this amount which appears somewhat large no doubt to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in view of his indorsement of my bill, the main portion of it is for the construction of the Government bridge on the Government land over Bayou Grande, destroyed in the hurricane of last September.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAMAR. So this paragraph appropriating $32,000 is merely legislation that embraces the $12,000 for the military road construction that now has the indorsement of the Committee on Military Affairs, and appropriates the further sum of about $20,000 for the construction of the Government bridge.

Mr. HULL. Is it not true that the gentleman's bill asked for $32,000 to build the road the whole distance?

Mr. LAMAR. That is very true, but that did not contemplate the construction of this $18,000 or $20,000 steel bridge on the Government property, which lately has been swept away and destroyed.

Mr. HULL. I grant that. The bridge part was supposed to have been practically built. I grant you that the construc-tion of the bridge had made a difference in the amount. Is it not true the city of Pensacola has accepted in good faith the report of the Committee on Military Affairs and has been pro-ceeding on the theory we would give them a good road to the limit of the reservation?

Mr. LAMAR. That letter shows that.
Mr. HULL. The letter shows they were proceeding on the belief that the action of the Committee on Military Affairs and their Representatives here would be ratified by Congress.

Mr. LAMAR. That is true.
Mr. HULL. Then I can see no objection—
Mr. LAMAR. But, as I understand, the $32,000 is recommended by the Government experts.

Mr. HULL. No; $32,000 is recommended before the Military Committee for the entire road.

Mr. LAMAR. I meant the amount carried in this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Do we understand from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that the people of Pensacola were satisfied with the proviso that you reported, as an amendment to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Florida, which is in substance the amendment which you propose to the sundry civil bill?

Mr. HULL. They have accepted that in good faith.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And this bill conforms to it.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There seems to be some doubt involved in the matter, and I would like to ask the chairman of the Comin the matter, and I would have mittee on Military Affairs—

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then all you are fighting about and the only question is what language shall be used. The gentle-man from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, wants to make it certain, and the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee want to leave it uncertain. That is

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, the gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations think it is as certain as it can be made by any language that either he or the gentle-man from Iowa can add to it. It is a Government road and you can not have a Government road on any other man's property or property owned by any county or any State.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman from Ohio a short while ago made a speech in which he said there were a great many Government roads or State property, at Chattanooga and va-rious other places, which I have no doubt is perfectly true.

This, of course, does not affect that-

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does. Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very well, then. The gentleman from Ohio, who is an intelligent gentleman, claims this language is sufficient to cover a Government road going over State lands as well as Government lands. The gentleman from Iowa, likewise an intelligent gentleman, thinks this language is broad enough. Now, the committee is simply fighting this amendment on the ground that this language is sufficient and other intelligent men think it is not sufficient and want to make it certain, and I think the Committee of the Whole ought to make it certain.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman from Maine did not quite understand the point I made. At Nashville, at Chattanooga, and everywhere in the South the Chickamauga National Park, which will come up directly in this bill, and all these other places, instead of compelling the Government to buy road to have access to its own property, the States have ceded an easement in their public roads to the Government of the United States. It is not Government property in the technical sense. It is an easement over property belonging to the Access to the great Chickamauga National Park, which is occupied and constantly used by the Government, passes over the Lafayette turnpike road, which is not owned by the Government, but the Government has an easement created by the legislature of Georgia. Now, this provision applied to that case would prevent the repair and maintenance of that road, and that pervades everywhere where these national cemeteries are in the South.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to get the explanation of the gentleman from Ohio, because, if the same legal condition exists in this section that exists in these other sections, I wish to call attention to the fact that it simply absolutely negatives the construction of the language put on this appropriation by the Committee on Appropriations. Bethis appropriation by the Committee on Appropriations. Because, from the standpoint of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor], the Government may now have an easement running clear to the city of Pensacola; but the committee have, over and over again, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Smith] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] have informed us that this appropriation covers only about a mile and a half of road instead of 5 miles of road. Now, if the assertion of the gentleman from Ohio be correct, it really does cover and is intended to cover and ought to cover 5 miles. That is his proposition. So there is a difference of opinion as to the meaning of this language. Now, I understand the committee to admit that they only want to cover the Government land, and if they only want to cover the Government land, then the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, ought to be adopted by the committee, in order to limit this language and eliminate the construction that was suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, unless under the guise of this general language the committee want $32,000 appropriated here to enable and compel the Government to maintain a road clear to the city of Pensacola, which they say they do not want. In order to get this specifically taken care of, we ought to have the other language.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Littlefield], the committee certainly can not contemplate that $11,000 or $13,000 will build 5 miles of road. The Committee on Appropriations has appropriated for the roads substantially what the Committee on Military Affairs has appropriated. The addition to $19,390 is for the reconstruction of a bridge that was destroyed by the floods there last September. It is simply for the construction of the Government road across the Government reservation, and there is nothing more certain than what the language expresses here.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is in error when he makes the application of his statement universal. It is true with regard to access to Chickamauga Park, but it is not true as I understand it in regard to the access to all of the national cemeteries. Indeed, there was an application for an appropriation to build a road to a national cemetery in Missouri two or three years ago, and it was clearly brought out in the hearings that the people in that community wanted the Government to build the road from their town to the national cemetery as well as within the Government reservation. For one I do not believe the Government ought to go into the work of building roads for communities where the Government has already expended thousands of dollars, secondarily, for their benefit. There is certainly not a community in the United States where a national cemetery is located that has not directly and indirectly and will perpetually derive profit from the Government. nooga National Cemetery is worth a great deal to the city of Chattanooga from a financial point of view, as well as the cemetery at Murfreesboro, the cemetery at Vicksburg, and all these other great burial places, where hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended, and where annually an appropria-tion is made to keep them in repair and in condition, and which call to them year by year great numbers of visitors from dif-ferent sections of the country. But the Government ought not to build national highways on State lands to gain access to these. If the communities have not pride enough or interest enough to do these things, then let them ride over roads that are unimproved until they strike the Government reservation.

And now if there is any doubt in the minds of the committee or anyone else that this appropriation shall apply to a foot of soil that is not on land belonging to the United States, then it ought to be cleared up.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that on the next page there is a reappropriation for constructing and repairing the Government roadway to Fort Scott. Now, is that not evidently another property than the Government, namely, the Government roadway to Fort Scott?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think there is clearly a distinction between a Government roadway and the roadway built by the Government on national grounds or ground belonging to the Government. The two may exist, and the Government may appropriate to either or both of them, but I believe it ought not to appropriate in building highways on State lands or municipal lands.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that all debate be now closed on the paragraph and pending amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. Division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Road to the national cemetery, Port Hudson, La.: For repairing the bridge, culvert, and roadway from Port Hickey, La., to the Port Hudson, La., national cemetery, $10,000.

Mr. PARKER. I reserve the point of order; or I make the point of order, unless some explanation is given.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this road was authorized by an act approved May 14, 1890. The note in the Book of Estimates says:

This road is badly washed out in places, and near its upper end a deep ditch 150 feet long has been washed under and through the road in the form of a tunnel, and the brick gutters on the steep grade are broken and undermined in many places. The appropriation for "repairing roads in national cemeteries" is entirely inadequate to meet the expense of putting this road in good condition.

That is the note reported to the committee by Asst. Q. M. Gen. George E. Pond. It is a Government road.

Mr. HULL. Did the gentleman say that this is a Government road the entire distance from Port Hickey to Port Hud-

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know about that; but that part of the road to be repaired is a Government road.

Mr. HULL. It does not say so. It is in the same vague language: "For repairing the bridge, culvert, and roadway from Port Hickey, La., to Port Hudson, La., National Cemetery." It does not say that it is a Government road.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I will read the testimony, Mr. Chair-

Mr. SMITH. "For repairing the bridge, culvert, and roadway from Port Hickey, La., to Port Hudson, La., National Cemetery, $10,000." Is this roadway on Government land?

Captain PARKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. In all these items where you are estimating for rebuilding roads you are asking for separate appropriations for the Missispipi River places which was the same ground upon which you asked for an increased general appropriation?

Captain PARKER. Well, I only spoke of that generally.

The road is a Government road over the points designated in the language of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair learns from the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that this is a Government road, and as the appropriation is for the repair of that road, the Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Road to national cemetery, Keokuk, Iowa: For repairs to the approach roadway to the Keokuk, Iowa, National Cemetery, $1.500: Provided, That the city of Keokuk deeds to the United States, free of charge, the land over which the road extends: And provided further, That the city of Keokuk improve and agree to maintain in proper repair the road leading south from the main driveway of the city cemetery to the point where the Government road begins, $1,500.

Mr. PARKER. I make the point of order on the paragraph

Mr. HEDGE. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order in order that I may make an explanation of the item.

Mr. PARKER. Certainly; I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey reserves

the point of order.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, this is a little national cemetery that was established September 23, 1861. I suppose that during the war something over 700 soldiers were buried there. It is outside of the city limits of Keokuk, and the only approach to it that ever has been is through the generosity of the city cemetery. There is no public approach to it. We simply are asking on behalf of the old soldiers of Iowa a proper and respectable roadway to this national cemetery. This expenditure of $1,500 will cover all that is required and macadamize the road. It is not open to the suggestion made by my friend from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER]. This cemetery is not one of those places of resort that attracts strangers. It is a plain, homely, little place, surrounded by an iron fence, and nobody, I suppose, goes there except the personal friends of the soldiers or the little company that accompanies a dead soldier to his last resting place. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that these suggestions of mine may be received in good faith, as this will probably be the last request I shall be allowed to make to this House.

Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a Mr. PARKER.

question?

Mr. HEDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. Can the gentleman assure me that the granting of this $1,500 now will not become an obligation for further repairs of this road by the Government?

Mr. HEDGE. I can not, because the proviso is there that the city of Keokuk, or whoever is the owner

Mr. PARKER. Shall do the rest. But will the city of Keokuk hereafter keep the road in repair, so that we will not have appropriations any more for that purpose?

Mr. HEDGE. I can not make any promise for the city of Keokuk.

Mr. PARKER. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I renew it.

CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to renew the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I renew it, or will reserve it if the gentleman desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hedge] has the floor.

Mr. HEDGE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the This is an exceptional case. I presume it is point of order. an unique case. The streets of the city of Keokuk go to the Oakland Cemetery, which is near by. But there is absolutely no way to this national cemetery except through the good will of the proprietors of Oakland Cemetery, and they have generously permitted us to use the strip of land through their cemetery all this time and kept it in order at their expense; but it so happens that they can not longer, without additional expense and trouble, permit the use of this old roadway over to the cemetery, and there we are. It is the only national cemetery in the State of Iowa. As I said a minute ago, it is not a show place or a place of resort, and the result of this can not be of any advantage to the people of Keokuk. It will not make the town of Keokuk a place of resort. It can not bring any profit to any living man in Keokuk. I am speaking in behalf of the old soldiers of the State of Iowa, to give their national cemetery, about the first one ever started during the civil war, a proper and decent and seemly approach, such as the Government ought to make to a place of that kind. all I am asking, and I hope that no technical objection will be raised.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard briefly on the point of order, if it is insisted upon. This, as I am advised, is the only national cemetery in the State of Iowa. Under repeated recent rulings I am unable to see why appropriation for the acquisition and improvement of an addition or extension to a national cemetery is not in order upon this bill, and when reduced to a clear statement I think that will be found to be what this means. They have there a national cemetery. Roads within a national cemetery are just as much a part of the cemetery as the little lots in which the dead are buried. Here comes a proposition to acquire additional land for road purposes in connection with a national cemetery, an enlargement of a national cemetery for road pur-No one will claim that the roads within the cemetery are not just as important a part of the cemetery as the grave lots. Here arises a proposition to enlarge this cemetery for the purpose of giving access to it. I see no reason if, as ruled here, it be admissible upon an appropriation bill to carry money to buy additional grounds for Fort Hamilton, and for the enlargement of other Government reservations, why it would not be admissible to appropriate money directly for the purchase and improvement of additional grounds adjacent to national

This bill provides $1,500 for the enlargement and improvement of the national cemetery at Keokuk, Iowa. That is the true interpretation of it. It provides that the city shall donate this land to the Government of the United States as a roadway to the cemetery, as essential a part of the cemetery as any other part, and that $1,500 shall be expended upon this addition to the cemetery when it shall have been so enlarged. That. in my judgment, is the legal effect of this provision; and if so, the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I take issue with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] on the proposition that a roadway outside of a national cemetery is an enlargement of the national cemetery itself. I understood the gentleman to use those exact words, that this appropriation was for the enlargement of the national cemetery at Keokuk, Iowa. It savs:

For repairs to the approach roadway to the Keokuk, Iowa, National

That is all there is-no enlargement. It does not go inside Everything is outside. the gates.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The question, Mr. Chairman, is whether an enlargement of a national cemetery can not be made unless it is inside the fences already constructed.

This provides for $1,500 to improve the access to the cemetery when the ground upon which the improvement is to be made shall have been ceded to the United States. For what purpose, does it say?

For repairs to the approach roadway.

It is the approach to the cemetery, and the approach to the cemetery is as much a part of the cemetery, if it is owned by the Government, in my judgment, as any burial lot within the inclosure

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Let us look at that for a moment. Grant it, and I want to tell the gentleman from Iowa that inside of ten years you will have appropriations amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars to enlarge national cemeteries by means of roads dedicated to the National Government, some of them 1, 2, 3, and 5 miles long.

Mr. HULL. And some of them more than that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. More than that. I am sorry to take issue with my friend from Iowa. The people of Keokuk, if it comes to that, can do this work without coming with outstretched hands to the Government for the sum of $1,500.

Gentlemen, it is time to call a halt; let the National Treasury cease to pour out its money for roadways where national territory ends, and let the national territory end at the gate that leads to the sacred precincts of the dead. Let us not go on building highways over the South and over the North simply on the plea that they are for access to national cemeteries, when, as gentlemen know, where one vehicle carries visitors to the cemetery, thousands go in the daily pursuit of traffic or for pleasure drives, and for nothing to do with the cemeteries whatever. It is a nice thing to have, but is that the business of the Government? Is that what we collect money for from the people—to build pleasure drives and furnish better roads for people to go to market over. I tell you, gentlemen, it is time to say no, and call a halt on these things. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, one word further. We passed over a proposition a few minutes ago for building a road to Barrancas, Fla., appropriating $32,000. That, in my judgment, is on all fours with this. If the Chairman was right in ruling that a point of order would not lie against that, then certainly it would not lie against this other provision.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WATSON). To which ruling does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HULL. I raised a point of order on the paragraph beginning on line 15 and ending on line 18, and the Chair, not the present occupant, promptly overruled it.

Mr. MANN. The Chair overruled the point of order on the distinct statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it was intended for the improvement of a road owned entirely by the Government, and the Chair, in overruling the point of order, stated that fact. Does the Chair desire to hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is pretty well satisfied on the point of order. The Chair thinks there is a very clear line of demarcation between the ruling referred to by the gentleman from Iowa and the present case. As the gentleman from Illinois has said, the proposition embodied in the language from line 15 to 18 is clearly in order, and the very language of the proposition made it in order, besides the statement made by the chairman of the committee that it was for the improvement of a Government road, a road now owned by the Government. It was therefore clearly within the rule of a Government work in progress.

Here is a proposition to build a road over land that does not now belong to the Government, and the mere fact that a proviso is put in does not change the rule.

Neither can the Chair coincide with the view expressed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] on the ground that the road is necessary to get to the cemetery and therefore is essential to the cemetery.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the Chair indulge me for saying that I did not mean necessary in any sense except that Congress is to judge of the necessity? I did not mean it as a matter of law that any Government reservation is necessary or is a matter of parliamentary law, but that it was for Congress to pass on the necessity of a Government reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. For years the construction of these roads has gone to the Committee on Military Affairs. Never before, as far as the present occupant of the chair knows, has a proposition of this kind been added to an appropriation bill,

Mr. HULL. Will the Chair indulge me for one suggestion? Do I understand the Chair to rule that the Committee on Appropriations by simply putting in the words "for a Government roadway" or "for improvement of a Government highway" makes it in order?

Mr. MANN. I submit that the Chair is not called on to rule on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have no hesitancy in ruling upon it, although it is a hypothetical case; but the Chair is of opinion that unless the bill itself said that it was for a Government road or for the improvement of a road already owned by the Government, the Comptroller of the Treasury would not be authorized in paying any money out for this im-

Mr. HULL. I do not want to be technical, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the Chair will not understand that I feel that way, but I got the impression from what the Chair stated, that if the committee put in an appropriation "for the repair of a Government roadway," whether the Government owned it or not, it would make it in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair will state that under the only ruling on this proposition heretofore made not only was that language in the bill, but the chairman of the committee stated that the Government owned the road-That seems to be entirely sufficient. If this language had been different from what it is, and a limitation on an appropriation had been sought, the ruling of the Chair might have been different, but under the circumstances it is very clear to the Chair that it is obnoxious to the rule, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Road to national cemetery, Fort Scott, Kans.: For reconstructing and repairing the Government roadway to Fort Scott, Kans., National Cemetery, known as "National avenue." $17,500, which shall be expended commencing at the end of the road nearest the cemetery and so as to make a thoroughly good road for such distance as can be completed for said sum, and when the amount so appropriated has been expended the title to the whole of said roadway, including the portion thus improved and that remaining unimproved, shall pass to the city of Fort Scott for street purposes: Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be available until the city of Fort Scott, Kans., shall, by valid ordinance, accept the provisions hereof and agree to accept said cession and to promptly and well pave all the portions of National avenue not improved under this appropriation and bind said city to forever maintain the whole of National avenue in good repair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this and I want to make a little statement to begin with, and then the committee, I think, may be able to give some informa-tion. Some years ago the Congress of the United States made an appropriation for the construction of this road, ting property owners, as they will in all cases, ceded the property to the United States. The Government virtually accepted that cession by making an appropriation to build the road, but it coupled with it the proviso that when the road was built it should not thereafter be a charge on the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman say there was any such law as that?

Mr. HULL. I think that was coupled with the appropriation. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am compelled to inform the gentleman that there is no such law.

Mr. HULL. I got my information from the gentleman, so I may be mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken as to what information he received.

Mr. HULL. Now, they have built this road once and turned it over to the authorities, and here comes in another proposition. They never even kept it in repair; they did absolutely nothing for the road, and now it is proposed to build the road over again on condition that they will relieve us of any further responsibility. I think the act itself provided we were not to have further expense. The gentleman has the ordinance down there. It is also about all in the city limits of Fort Scott.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will state the facts fully if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. HULL. Of course I want the facts. That is why I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in compliance with the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], I will state the facts regarding this road. It was ceded to the Government of the United States and appropriations were made from time to time.

Mr. HULL. Right at that point, it was ceded by those parties owning the abutting property-never by the State.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think the cession was made by the property owners alone, because I do not understand they owned it.

Mr. HULL. Kansas never passed any act on the subject. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I don't know that there was an act of the legislature. That was not necessary. There has never been any claim but that this road was properly ceded to the Government of the United States and that appropriations were made from time to time specifically for its improvement. There never was any law containing any such condition as the gentleman has referred to, but I will explain what he has misinterpreted in my conversation upon that subject. It is the fact that after all the appropriations made by Congress had been expended upon this road that an application was made to the War Department for the improvement of this road out of the general appropriation for the repair, etc., of roads at national cemeteries. The Quartermaster-General, upon his own authority and without any direction from Congress, directed an estimate to be made of how much it would require to put the road in good condition. That estimate was made, and exceeded $5,000. Then the Quartermaster-General stated, in writing, to the authorities of the city of Fort Scott that he would not make the allotment unless the State of Kansas would pass a law authorizing the city of Fort Scott to prohibit heavy traffic on the road and the city of Fort Scott would agree thereafter to keep the road in repair. The city of Fort Scott then, by resolution, agreed that if the Government of the United States would put this road in first-class condition and repair it would then keep the road in repair. Under that, which was not quite in accordance with the demand of the Quartermaster-General, something over $4,000 and a considerable amount less than the estimate was expended in repairing the road. The Quarter-master-General now reports that the road never was in good condition; that it was defectively constructed; that it had no gutters and was so constructed as to necessarily wash away, and, in effect, therefore reports that the condition in the resolution of the city council of the city of Fort Scott was never complied with. That made a debatable question of the fact as to whether the road was actually put in first-class condition and repair, as provided by this resolution of the city council of Fort Scott. This road, which all belongs to the United States, is about half in the settled portion of Fort Scott and about half not in the settled portion of Fort Scott. Your committee believed that that portion in the settled portion of Fort Scott ought to be paved like ordinary streets in ordinary cities.

It therefore refused to report an appropriation of $35,000, the amount necessary to put this road in good condition through its entire length, but reported a recommendation for $17,500 to be expended on the end of the road nearest the national cemetery and farthest from settlement, but, believing that the growth of Fort Scott would, during the life of this new road, carry it to the gates of the national cemetery, it provided that this appropriation shall not be available unless the city of Fort Scott shall, by a valid ordinance, agree to accept the whole of this road from the Government of the United States as soon as this amount has been expended on the end nearest the cemetery and forever contract to keep the whole of the National avenue in good repair. The committee believed that this was under all the circumstances the best adjustment that could be made of this controversy. The appropriation is surely in order, for it is a Government road. The Government owns title to the land and has built one road over it, and if the gentleman objects to the provision we have incorporated for the cession of this road and the assumption by the city of Fort Scott of a perpetual obligation to keep it in repair, I simply say to him that this condition is the very one he requested us to make in his argument on one of the other national roads. It is a great pleasure to discover we fully agree with him on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks undoubtedly an appropriation to reconstruct and repair a Government roadway is in order. What is the opinion of the gentleman from Iowa ou that part of the first section beginning with the word "and," in line 13, "and when the amount so appropriated has been expended the title to the whole of said roadway, including the portion thus improved and that remaining unimproved, shall pass to the city of Fort Scott for street purposes?" Does the gentleman think that is a limitation upon the appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think that particular clause makes this section doubtful as to its being in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not the gentleman regard that as legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But I submit that the gentleman who has reserved the point of order does not wish to compel us to reoffer it without this provision, and it is upon the assumption that we are following the advice of the gentleman that I suggest that he ought not to force the committee to strike out that provision, which he urges us to add to all these appropriations.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order, because I was exceedingly anxious to have as much debate on this provision as we could possibly get. The part of the resolution that is obnoxious to the rule under decisions of the Chair is the part that makes it at least tolerable to me. now get rid of this road on any fair terms, I want to do it. just want to say one word further—that this debate and this contention emphasizes exactly what I have been standing for for a long time, that whenever you depart from the rule of confining yourself within the grounds owned by the Government you are getting upon a sea without any shore, and under the rulings of the Chair that the mere ceding to the Government an easement of abutting property owners carries with it the rights of building the road by bringing in an appropriation on the sundry civil bill would be time at the next session of Congress for radical action to be taken deeding back, and insisting they take back, what they have already given us. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I renew it. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Scorr] on the point of order.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the question as to whether or not this paragraph is obnoxious to the rule, under the previous rulings of the present occupant of the chair, depends wholly on the question as to the ownership of the road. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has already stated, the roadway is at this time and for many years has been Government property. I hold in my hand a letter from the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, dated January 23, 1906, addressed to myself, in which he makes the following statement:

By ordinance of the mayor and council of Fort Scott, Kans., approved March 15, 1881, that portion of Jones street in said city extending from the "northeast corner of block 2, of Mrs. Stuart's addition," to the "south line of Newkirk & Jaynes's addition "was vacated and discontinued as a street, the ordinance reciting that this action was taken to furnish the right of way for a highway to the national cemetery.

A number of deeds are on file to the portion of the street vacated and to the other portions of the roadway to the cemetery. They describe the lands conveyed thereby by metes and bounds and purport to grant, bargain, and sell the same to the United States, "to have and to hold" the same "unto the United States forever," except that some of the deeds provide for reversion to the grantors if the United States shall fail to make and maintain a macadam road thereon, and some of them in case of vacation or nonuse by the United States. The conveyance to the lands covered by Jones street include 4 feet on each side of the original width of 72 feet, so as to make the street 80 feet wide.

Upon examination of the deeds on file in this office, it is my opinion that, subject to the conditions as to reversion in the deeds referred to above, it must be held that the United States acquired a fee simple title to the lands described in the deeds.

I may add that under date of April 26, 1881, the Attorney-General reported that these "deeds (thirteen in number) vest in the United States a valid title to the right of way referred to." This is signed by George B. Davis, Judge-Advocate-General.

That would seem to close the question as to the title of the

That would seem to close the question as to the title of the roadway. I recognize that part of the paragraph, as has been suggested, is obnoxious to the rule, and if the point of order is insisted upon, the entire paragraph will go out. In that event I shall ask to be recognized to offer an amendment to restore the paragraph with the obnoxious words eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion-Mr. SMITH of Iowa. A moment, Mr. Chairman. I have some doubt as to whether the gentleman is not willing to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HULL. I understand the Chair to rule that simply the appropriation would clearly be in order and the legislative provision is the part that is at issue?

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may be pardoned for ruling at this time, I would state that that part of this section running down to the word "sum," in line 13, is entirely in order, but that the other part is clearly legislation. The Chair would sustain the point of order to the whole paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is about to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MANN. The item in the bill, which, of course, is clearly subject to the point of order, while it contains the legislative provision, provides that after this appropriation the street shall pass to the city of Fort Scott for street purposes. Now, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Smith] whether in his opinion a provision of that sort in a bill will actually pass the title of the United States to land to somebody else?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think it would except as accompanied with the other language here, that it must be formally accepted by the city of Fort Scott. I do not think that a Congress ceding property to anybody transfers the title if that party accepts it, and before any money is expended it must be accepted by a valid ordinance.

Mr. MANN. It may be possible, although there is no provision here for the making of a deed or the giving of a patent. It may be possible that the Government can by an incidental provision of the bill pass title to real estate. I do not think it ever has been done before, and I doubt whether the gentleman himself would be willing to take title acquired in that waybut if it is a sufficient passing of title to hang a ruling of the Chair heretofore that the title is not in the Government, I will be perfectly satisfied. But I do not want to be buncoed. know the gentleman does not want to bunco us.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We do not want to bunco the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to be buncoed by an incidental provision in the bill purporting to pass title to real estate which the gentleman himself as a lawyer would not contemplate making for a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not claim, Mr. Chairman, to be a very good lawyer, but I would not hesitate for a moment to accept anything I could get under the express cession by act of Congress, without any patent whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of getting rid of the title to the land, so that no appropriation hereafter will be in order for an improvement, if that is the construction to be put upon it, so far as I am concerned, withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] to withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

National cemetery, Greeneville, Tenn.: For the construction of a superintendent's lodge, roadways, walks, etc., within the tract of land known as "Monument Hill," near Greeneville, Tenn., and inclosing walls and approaches thereto. $32,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to this provision. It is proposed to build a wall around 15 acres of land dedicated by one of the heirs of Andrew Johnson for a national cemetery, and in which plot of ground Andrew Johnson and two of his sons lie buried. It is proposed to expend $32,000 for that purpose. That is not They are to build a lodge, to cost $6,000; walls and gates, $20,000; roads in cemetery, $2,000; roads, with approach to cemetery, $2,000; walks and steps in the cemetery, $1,000; drainage, $1,000; total, $32,000. But that is not all. I read from the hearings:

Mr. SMITH. Does this have in contemplation also, Captain, the establishment of a superintendent there? Do you have superintendents at fourth-class cemeteries?

Captain Parker. Yes, sir; at a salary of $60 a month.

Mr. SMITH. And quarters?

Captain Parker. Yes; quarters and fuel.

Mr. SMITH. Have we done this for any other President of the United States?

States?
Captain PARKER. I do not know, sir.

Now, what is the real situation? It is to put a wall around a 15-acre inclosure containing the remains of Andrew Johnson and two sons, and nobody else. To call it a national cemetery, and build a lodge costing $6,000, and put a man in there perpetually at a salary is an uncalled-for piece of extravagance, and I therefore move to strike out that proposition from the bill—the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 132, beginning with line 4, strike out down to and including line 8, for national cemetery, Greeneville, Tenn.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. This cemetery was created by authority of Congress, which authority was carried in the Army appropriation bill of last session of Congress, approved June 12, 1906.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentle man to raise the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. It came into the Army appropriation bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, in answer to the gentleman from New Jersey, and was reported in that bill for the support of the Army-

Mr. PARKER. Did it not come to the committee as a Senate amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). In the act approved June 12, 1906.

Mr. PARKER. We never reported it.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). It is therefore a national cemetery established by law.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment? It is a national cemetery and not a solitary soldier in it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not accountable for that; I hope that not one will ever be buried in it, so far as that is concerned; but it is Government property, and whatever purpose it may be dedicated to, it is described as a national cemetery, and it is entitled to the same consideration that we are giving to other cemeteries of like character-cemeteries that are dedicated for the same purpose, and we must preserve this property. Now, in order to do that, the War Department have recommended this appropriation as being necessary to preserve the property belonging to the Government, which we have accepted, and for that reason the Committee on Appropriations recommend it. hope that the paragraph will remain in the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it necessary to build this wall around this 15-acre tract of land and provide for a perpetual guard there?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In answer to part of that question I will state that the law makes it a fourth-class cemetery, with a superintendent at $60 a month, without any reference to this bill, and gives him a house and fuel.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And already provided? Mr. SMITH of Iowa. At the last session of Congress

Mr. HULL. It is provided by law and made a fourth-class

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And the superintendent is there to-day. Mr. CRUMPACKER. And gives him a house?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And a residence, the same as given in every other national cemetery.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in regard to the speech of my colleague on the committee [Mr. Gardner of Michigan], who says that there is not a soldier buried in this cemetery

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman will permit me, I stated that there were two sons or sons-in-law of Andrew Johnson, who served in the Army, who are buried there, but no soldier from the neighborhood. They are not seeking to be buried there. My understanding is that the posts own their own cemeteries there, and their dead are buried in those cemeteries from preference over this one.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Now, the gentleman does not mean to misrepresent the facts. I believe that he means to do my constituents absolute and exact justice; but he does not state the facts, and he does not come within gunshot of the truth of the situation. This was made a national cemetery by act of both Houses of Congress, receiving the signature of the President of the United States. There are no cemeteries connected with the posts in that section of country. The First Congressional district of Tennessee furnished more soldiers to the Union service during the dark days of the rebellion than any Congressional district in the United States; and yet we were 100 miles inside the Confederate lines. There is no national cemetery, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, within 75 miles west of the point where this cemetery is established. Culpeper, Va. over 300 miles to the east, is the nearest. The north and south can not be reached from that district.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, when these soldiers left eastern Tennessee they were followed by bloodhounds. They bid their wives, their daughters, and their sweethearts good-by by moonlight at the old home spring and went across the mountains into Kentucky and joined the Union Army. When they went, Mr. Chairman, they did not go, as did the men in the North, for thirty, sixty, or ninety days, but they went with the full understanding that they could never return to their families and their homes unless the cause that they espoused was successful.

Ex-President Johnson was a Democrat. He was a member of the United States Senate from Tennessee, and was the only Senator of his party, North or South, that stood by Abraham

Lincoln in favor of the old flag and a united country

And yet, here from this northern section of the country, comes the opposition to doing honor to these people of the mountains who were loyal to the cause of the Union and the old flag. Andrew Johnson was surrounded and supported by the votes of the State rights secession democracy of the South, yet he went with the cause of the Union, stood by the Government, stood by Abraham Lincoln, and I have asserted heretofore, and I reassert, that taking his surroundings and his acts and comparing them, I believe he was the greatest patriot of the civil war. [Applause.] Brownlow, Nelson, and Maynard stood shoulder to shoulder with Johnson, but they had made their fight for the Union, the Constitution, and the enforcement of the laws under the leadership of John Bell, of Tennessee, and Edward Everett, of Massachusetts. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed without limit. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will not be diverted from the line of duty-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Brownlow] have fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has been recognized and has begun his remarks.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman from Tennessee will occupy more time, I shall be glad to yield to him. If we have done nothing else, we have succeeded in eliciting an excellent speech from a gentleman whose voice is rarely heard on the floor of the House, and certainly no man who loves his country can withhold assent to the splendid eulogy he has delivered to the patriots of East Tennessee. But, gentlemen, do not let us lose sight of this fact, that a descendant of Andrew Johnson has dedicated to the Government 15 acres of ground, where his ancestor lies buried with two of his kinsmen. No soldier save his kinsmen is buried there, but it is proposed to put a perpetual charge upon the Government, not in taking care of the grounds, but in building a lodge and keeping a man there at continual expense and found. Do we want to do that as a business proposition?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman's opposition to the appropriation based upon the ground that there are no

Federal soldiers buried there?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, sir; my opposition to the proposition is that it is in a sense a private enterprise on the part of the descendants of Andrew Johnson to have his grave cared for and to establish there a national cemetery for which there is at this time no necessity. On this theory you can establish a national cemetery in every township in the Northern States that sent men to the war.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There never was but one Andrew,

Johnson and never will be.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. What has that to do with the

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You said they could establish a national cemetery in every township. I say there never was but one Andrew Johnson and never will be. I wish there were 3,000,000 like him.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I stood by the grave of Andrew Jackson, and it did not have any wall about it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes; there is an iron fence, and Senator Bate had it put around his grave when he was governor.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. When I was there trying, in a very inconspicuous way, to save the Union over which Andrew Jackson presided, there was no wall around it nor any lodge house, save the near by late home of the old hero.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is an iron fence there now that the gentleman could not jump over. I do not know how long it has been there. But we are preserving his grave, and we are going to continue to preserve it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But I want to say to the gentleman that it is not for Andrew Johnson; it is for the national cemetery in the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is why I am going to vote It is a public cemetery for the Federal soldiers.

Mr. BROWNLOW. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNLOW. The gentleman says this is not a national cemetery, but that it is put there for the purpose of taking care of the grave of ex-President Andrew Johnson. Now, that is wide of the mark. This is in the center of a Congressional district that furnished more Union soldiers to the Army of the National Government during the civil war than any other in the United States, and yet we were 100 miles within the Confederate lines, and the Grand Army posts throughout the district have unanimously indorsed it as a national cemetery where their members may be buried when they die.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Is it true that there are only three bodies buried in this cemetery?

Mr. BROWNLOW. There are only four soldiers buried there, but there has been no opportunity. It has just been made a national cemetery and is now open for that purpose. Prior to this it was a private burying ground. It is the only place where the soldiers of that Congressional district have an opportunity

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to ask a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I just want to listen to the [Laughter.] gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is very kind of the gentle-an. Now, gentlemen, do not be swept off your feet in favor of this appeal from patriotic East Tennessee. There is no necessity for this national cemetery and it never would have been established except for this being the burial place of an ex-President of the United States. Now, why should we build a lodge and keep a man there for hundreds of years, it may be perpetually, extending the care for this little patch of ground in the meantime waiting for some one to be buried there who once served this country in war.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did the gentleman from Michigan ever see that beautiful spot in Greeneville where Andrew Johnson is buried?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I understand it is 300 miles from Nashville. Does the gentleman want to bring the soldiers who die in East Tennessee 300 miles to Nashville and bury them in that beautiful national cemetery? There are thousands of Union soldiers who die in East Tennessee who are poor people, and they ought to have a place near by where their neighbors can properly bury them.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I understand this is a ques-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; but we will give the gentleman more time.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. Is there any national cemetery in New York or Massachusetts?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; nor in the State of Michi-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We can't help that; you didn't furnish enough soldiers in the civil war to make one. [Great laughter.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that we furnished the soldiers and you people made necessary the cemeteries. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am glad that there is no necessity for any more, but I think there is plenty of necessity for

Mr. POWERS rose.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. POWERS. I want to ask a question in the nature of a suggestion. Is it not a fact that more than three-quarters, if not nine-tenths, of the old soldiers prefer to be buried in burying grounds where their wives and fathers and children are buried rather than be carried off to a national cemetery :

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I certainly think so. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The people in this part of the country have not that high privilege of being buried in Government burying grounds close by Andrew Johnson, who stood for the Union and the flag, and I know it, for I have heard the old men in my country say so, and I have great respect for his ability and courage.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. There are but three national cemeteries, as I recall them, in Tennessee: Chattanooga, where there are 13,000 Union soldiers buried, a large percentage of them killed in battle or died from wounds received in action; the cemetery at Stone River, where 6,000 battle soldiers lie buried who died on the field, and the other one at Shiloh. You might provide a hundred national cemeteries in Tennessee and you would find places where heroes might be buried; but is it policy? You can provide twenty cemeteries in Michigan and fill every one of them like this with heroic men just as brave, just as patriotic as the gentlemen who enlisted from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I suppose the soldiers that die in Michigan would like to be buried near their homes.

Mr. MANN. But not in national cemeteries.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course they do, and there was a widow of a soldier came to me not long ago and asked me if she could have her remains and those of her mother buried by the side of her husband.

Mr. MANN. We do not bury them in national cemeteries, and we do not have the national cemeteries in the North in which to bury them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments be closed in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the debate which has gone on on this provision is just one year too late. mittee on Military Affairs reported to this House a bill to make of this ground a national cemetery. Finally the substance of that bill was put upon the Army appropriation bill a year ago, and it reads as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby anthorized to accept under the will of Margaret J. Patterson and from the heirs of W. P. Bachman, all descendants of Andrew Johnson, late President of the United States, free of cost to the Government, the tract of land where said Andrew Johnson's remains now lie, known as "Monument Hill," containing not exceeding 15 acres, and situated in Greene County and in or near the town of Greeneville, Tenn., and upon presentation of good and perfect title to said tract of land the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to establish thereon a national cemetery of the fourth class.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Was not that a Senate amendment, No. 6, Mr. PARKER. which came in only in conference and which never passed the Committee on Military Affairs of the House?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That was put on as a Senate amendment, it is true, but a similar bill had been reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs before that time. Then was the time for Congress to discover if we did not need a national cemetery down there. When that law passed it fixed a character upon this land, and under existing law the perpetual expense of maintaining a superintendent was imposed upon the Government of the United States. Those superintendents of national cemeteries are entitled to quarters and to fuel, and all these things are imposed upon the Government, not by the proposition now before the House, but by the law solemnly enacted a year ago. Then is when these gentlemen ought to have discovered that we did not need a national cemetery down there. I do not think it was a wise law, but it has been enacted, and the law gives a superintendent to this national cemetery and he is entitled to quarters in which to dwell, and we ought now to erect about this cemetery the same kind of a wall erected around all the other national cemeteries. I care nothing for the suggestion that up to date we have only got four Union soldiers buried in this ground. It is dedicated to that purpose, and I for one am not anxious to have Union soldiers die in order to fill this cemetery. I am prepared now to execute the law solemnly enacted a year ago, and fit this property for national cemetery purposes. But I want to expressly repudiate the proposition that the recommendation of this committee is what forces upon the Government the perpetual maintenance of a superintendent of the cemetery, with fuel and quarters at the expense of the Government. We are simply executing the law passed a year by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, on page 138, add:
"For enlargement of national cemetery at Millsprings, Ky., by acquiring land adjoining thereto, and for repairing roadway to Somerset, Ky., $25,000: Provided, That the city of Somerset deed to the United States, free of charge, 4 acres of land for said purposes."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on

Mr. EDWARDS. I will ask the gentleman to reserve his Mr. TAWNEY. I will reserve the point of order, but I desire to state to the gentleman from Kentucky that at the conclusion of his remarks, in five minutes, I shall insist on the point of order so that we may go on.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I am very thankful to the gentleman from Minnesota for the five minutes, and I do not understand why he should give notice that he will insist at the end of the five minutes on the point of order. It certainly can not be because I have been taking the time of the House on this subject. I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee and of the Committee of the Whole to this proposition. ommittee and of the Committee of the Whole to this proposition. Mill Springs National Cemetery, located near the banks of the Cumberland River, in Pulaski County, Ky., has buried within its boundaries more than 700 Union soldiers, many of them from the immediate country round about and many of them from other States north of the Ohio River. The road which runs from the national cemetery to the city of Somerset is not upon Government ground. Therefore I suppose, under the ruling of the Chair and the rules of this committee, it would be subject to a point of order. But while it is not Government ground to-day, Mr. Chairman, in its dark days of 1861 to 1865 it was Government land, devoted to the flag, and was fought over, every inch of it. [Applaux.]

The Congress of the United States has built roads to and from national cemeteries all over this country, except from Mill Springs to Somerset. The State of Kentucky has other national cemeteries, but, fortunately, they are located near railroad stations and do not need roads to make them accessi-A bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and would have passed this House some eight or ten years ago, appropriating $25,000 to build this road, but for the objection of a Member to unanimous consent, and I have a bill now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs asking for this appropriation. But, Mr. Chairman, I am informed by the chairman of this committee that the policy of the House at present and during the last few years is not to build roads except on Government reservations or where the Government owns the land, and I am not criticising that great committee nor its very able chairman, and I am confident if it were not for this fact that my bill would be favorably reported by a unanimous vote of that committee. You have appropriated to-day the sum of $32,000 for completing the construction of the Government roadway to Barrancas, Florida, National Cemetery, near Pensacola, and $17,500 for reconstructing and repairing the Government roadway to Fort Scott, Kans., National Cemetery, and I submit that neither of them is continuously over Government property, but simply have been ceded to the Government for the purposes of a road. I am asking for an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of enlarging and improving Mill Springs Cemetery and completing a roadway to Somerset, which road has never cost the Government one dollar and we guarantee never will, beyond this appropriation, while the roads from Pensacola and Fort Scott to the near-by cemeteries have been heretofore built by the Government at an expense of thousands of dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining that other national cemeteries have been cared for and good roads built by the Government to their nearest railroad stations, but is it just to the memory of the patriotic dead who sleep at Mill Springs or fair to their friends who survive them that they must very often encounter bad roads on their visits there, while the grounds and connecting roads have been made beautiful by a grateful Government at Culpeper, Arlington, Vicksburg, Pensacola, Fort Scott, Knoxville, Springfield, and many other places and almost in every other State of the Union?

I offer in this proposition 4 acres of land free to the Government to enlarge this national cemetery, which is very much needed, and I will also offer the county road, which is a very good dirt road, upon which the Government can build its road, and I am willing to put in that the county of Pulaski will keep up this road in the future. The State of Kentucky has never had a dollar spent by the National Government for the building of roads to her national cemeteries.

I congratulate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Brown-LOW] on his splendid tribute to the loyalty of the people of that great State and to the memory of one of her noblest sons, Andrew Johnson. But, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the question of loyalty, of pure devotion to Government, both now and in the days of secession, southeastern Kentucky and the nineteen counties of the Eleventh district will yield to no other spot under the shining sun, not even to eastern Tennessee. plause. 1

The county of Pulaski, in which Mill Springs Cemetery is situated, has to-day more than 600 Federal soldiers within her borders, more than 250 Spanish-American soldiers, with probably a dozen Mexican war soldiers, and the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812. I challenge any district to show a county with a better record for loyalty than the county of Pulaski.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is how large this cemetery is at this place—how many acres?

Mr. EDWARDS. My recollection is 3 acres.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. How many are buried there

Mr. EDWARDS. Seven hundred and twenty-one is my best recollection, and there is no room to accommodate people when they come from a distance to go there and visit the graves, as it is covered over with graves to a large extent. People gather there from adjoining counties on Decoration Day, and there is not sufficient room and shade for this purpose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. May I ask the gentleman are these 721 buried there veterans of the civil war?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, sir; they are all veterans-Union sol-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. EDWARDS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] I was calling the attention of the House to what I consider, under all the circumstances, the unparalleled loyalty and patriotism of the people of the district which I have the honor to represent. Why, sir, some of these counties furnished more soldiers to the Union Army than there were voters in the county when Fort Sumter was fired upon. A district that has furnished such soldiers as Col. Frank Woolford, Col. Silas Adams, and Col. D. G. Colson, all of whom have represented that great district in this body, and Colonel Colson having resigned a seat in this body to become colonel of the Fourth Kentucky Regiment in the Spanish-American war, will, I have no doubt, make much stronger appeal to the Members in this Chamber on both sides than anything I may say, and if my amendment can come to a vote upon its merits, I have no fears of the result.

At the battle of Mill Springs the great general of the South, General Zollicoffer, was killed. It is a most historic place. As I have said, it is the only national cemetery in that part of the country. It is near the Cumberland River and is in line of Kentucky mountains where the line of battle ranged upward to Cumberland Gap. This battle was fought, I believe, on the 19th day of January, 1862, and was the first decisive battle fought in that memorable war of 1861-65. General Zollicoffer was killed and his forces were driven back into Tennessee, and thereby the Union forces were encouraged and the Confederate forces were demoralized and discouraged. The defeat of the Confederate forces at Wildcat, October, 1861, in Laurel County, Ky., and the decisive battle of Mill Springs the following January, together with the unswerving loyalty of the mountain people, undoubtedly saved Kentucky to the Union and was no small factor in the real turning point in favor of the Union cause in that great struggle.

Kentucky pays more revenue into the National Treasury than any other State of the Union, save two, and yet she receives fewer appropriations, and I can not see why any gentleman who has permitted these appropriations in the past should say that because this bill failed to receive consideration ten years ago, when it was in order, when the policy of this House was to build these roads, because it failed simply by a mere objection and not by a vote on the merits, that it should now be set aside and Mill Springs Cemetery should be left out of the care of the Government. I thank the committee and hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent to speak for two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in confirmation of everything the gentleman from Kentucky has said in regard to the cemetery and the importance of the battle of which he speaks. It is an entirely different case from the one at Monument Hill, in Tennessee. Mill Springs was one of the decisive engagements in the early part of the Mill Springs war, and the men who made that engagement decisive lie buried in Kentucky, and if the cemetery needs to be enlarged I hope it may be. No men ever gave their lives a sacrifice that yielded more in proportion to the number for the preservation of this Government than the men who fought under Thomas and gained this his first great victory at Mill Springs, early in the year 1862. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, that part of the amendment which provides for the construction of a road is clearly out of order and contrary to the precedents of Congress, and I shall have to insist upon my point of order as to that part of the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order,
Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment, if I can, and ask that the language referring to the road be dropped, and that the amount be made $12,500 instead of $25,000, and ask that it be submitted in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, on page 137, add:

"For enlargement of national cemetery and improvement of the same, at Mill Springs, Ky., by acquiring land adjoining thereto, $12,500."

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is not obnoxious to the rule, because the cemetery has been by authority of law. Mr. EDWARDS. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think the proviso ought to go in there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, The city of Somerset deeds to the United States free of arge 4 acres of land for that purpose.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas reserve the point of order?
Mr. MACON. Yes, sir.
Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have it re-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas reserve the point of order?

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the point of order. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two. How much land is it proposed to purchase with this $12,500?

Mr. EDWARDS. We do not propose to purchase any land. It is proposed that that should be donated.

Mr. MACON. Then, what is the purpose of this appropriation?

Mr. EDWARDS. For further improving this land and national cemetery already there.

Mr. MACON. In what way will you have it improved?

Mr. EDWARDS. There will have to be plants, and it will have to be graded and sodded and lotted, and it will have to have a keeper and lodge house-in the same way that national cemeteries are generally improved.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EDWARDS].

The question was taken: and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

National cemetery, Knoxville, Tenn.: For laying sidewalks along the adway leading to the national cemetery, Knoxville, Tenn., $1,500.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reads as follows:

On page 133, in line 10, strike out the words "along the roadway leading to" and Insert in lieu thereof the words "on Holston and Munson streets around."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defenses, and for the purchase of suitable building sites for said barracks and quarters, $1,250,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Taw-NEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 137, after line 25, insert:
"For the reconstruction on land owned by the United States of the military prison in San Francisco Harbor, $50,000; the cost of which, when complete, shall not exceed $250,000; the sum hereby appropriated shall be so expended as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of said institution."

Mr. HULL. Before that is considered I want to recur to the paragraph just read. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] if he does not believe there should be some addition to this provision for the erection of batteries and quarters at seacoast-defense places. In other words, is this not a very large cut from the amount that was requested by the Department for the purpose of caring for what is called the "Coast Artillery." My recollection is that when the artillery bill was passed increasing the force they wanted $1,373,000 for the smaller buildings and some six or seven hundred thousand for the larger buildings. I do not understand that in this provision there is any limitation as to the size of buildings, but that it is intended to cover all the buildings for the Seacoast Artillery, both what has been carried in the Army bill and the sundry civil bill. If that is true, it seems to me the chairman of the committee ought to be willing to increase the amount to at least $1,500,000 in order to cover more nearly the requirements of the Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, in answer to the gentleman, the law, as he well knows, limits the amount to be expended per man up to eighty men in the construction. That is the limita-There is a general limitation in the statute beyond which they can not go in the construction of barracks.

Now, as to the other proposition, as to whether or not this is sufficient to meet the requirements of the service in consequence of the increased number of the Seacoast Artillery audefice of the increased number of the seacoast Arthiery authorized in the recent act, it may be that it is not, and it is not supposed to be sufficient to finally accommodate and to build barracks that will accommodate all the men that are authorized in that act. But it was supposed by the committee that this would give them all the money that could be expended during the next fiscal year and enough to enable them to build all the barracks that they will need to accommodate the additional men which they can enlist into the service during the next fiscal year. That is the reason we do not carry any more at this time. It is not thought by the committee that this will entirely meet the requirements of the service.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman, of course, is familiar with the proposition of the artillery branch of the service to concentrate, as they claim, for better administration, for more economic administration, certain scopes of batteries at one centralized place, where they have to go to the different batteries at different places, in place of having them in the quarters built at the place where the batteries are constructed. I think that the understanding was that they expected to complete the north coast, from Maine down along the Atlantic coast as far as Baltimore, this year.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is contemplated, I will say; but it is conceded that it was not probable that really they would be able to accomplish that during the next fiscal year; and it was for that reason that we gave the amount we did. We gave with the view of giving them all they could expend during the year. We were informed fully as to the purpose of the Department desiring to concentrate the artillery in certain places on the Atlantic coast, but the construction can not all take place at the same time. There will be more or less delay, and we thought, in giving them this amount, that we were giving all that they could expend during the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. I would like to get an understanding of this. Mr. TAWNEY. The recommendation of the committee is based upon the fact that in the judgment of the committee, which is based upon the testimony, this is about all they could expend during the next fiscal year. And I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that, inasmuch as this is a new plan of construction, we thought, inasmuch as Congress would be in session next December, that if more money were needed to carry on the work, the House could take care of it during the remainder of the next fiscal year; that we could then appropriate for it, and appropriate more intelligently, as we would have more accurate knowledge of the actual needs of the Department than we can now. In fact, the evidence before the committee as to the necessities were somewhat hazy, because they were not absolutely certain as to what the cost would be. We thought this lutely certain as to what the cost would be. We thought this would accommodate them until next December, and then we could, when they have worked out their plan more fully, appropriate more intelligently.

Mr. HULL. Now, in one instance you use the language "in the judgment of the Secretary of War," and in the other you leave it out. I understand the only object of inserting that in the first proposition is to overcome the limit of law as to the amount that can be expended in any one building to $20,000, and when you leave it out in the other you limit all other buildings to less than $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; in omitting it in the last we leave the language as it is now in the statute, leaving the other to correspond with the act approved June 6, 1900, which reads as follows:

For the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, and for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with the adopted project for seacoast defense, and for the purchase of suitable building sites for said barracks and quarters, $1,000,000: Provided, That for the erection of barracks and quarters for artillery in connection with the project adopted for seacoast defense there shall not hereafter be expended at any one point more than $1,200 per man for each man required for one relief to man the guns at the post up to eighty-three men, the present permanent strength of a battery, enlisted and commissioned, and for each man required beyond this number $600 per man, from any appropriation made by Congress, unless special authority of Congress be granted for a greater expenditure. expenditure.

Now, that limitation absolutely controls the expendita e of appropriation under the last paragraph, appropriating $1,-

Mr. HULL. They could expend whatever was necessary in the erection of a building.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under this limitation?

Mr. HULL. Suppose they have a camp at Baltimore and they propose to put up barracks and quarters for the men and that carries with it an administration building. cost a great deal more than $20,000. Where there is a large number of batteries it would require a more expensive building than $50,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all covered by the limitation.

Mr. HULL. Your limitation is based on the barracks and quarters, but would it cover the proposition of all buildings at the posts? Is not that limitation this: That all the buildings at the post, including the administration building and quarters, shall not in the aggregate exceed so much?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that if the limitation carried in the sundry civil act approved June 6, 1900, will not operate to limit the amount spent on the administration building, then the other limitation, without this provision, the discretion of the Secretary, would limit the cost to $20,000.

Mr. HULL. Under your provision here they have held that when you say "in the discretion of the Secretary of War" you are giving him entire power over the size of the buildings.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that is the rule.

Mr. HULL. The difference between the Army bill and this bill has been the insertion of those words in your bill and the omission of them in the Army bill. The question is whether the elimination of the words in regard to the artillery does not work so that when you erect the buildings for your men the limitation of so much to a man you might be unable to

Mr. TAWNEY. To build the administration building beyond a cost of $20,000. There was no evidence before the committee as to the necessity or desire of the Department to construct any buildings of that character; therefore the committee thought it wise to allow the limitation which is now fixed by statute to apply

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the gentleman that this scheme will carry with it an administration building.
Mr. TAWNEY. That may be. Mr. HULL.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman is not willing to concede that the amount should be increased?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not. I think they will have enough for the fiscal year.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the Chair have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a new section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 137, line 25, insert: "For the reconstruction on land owned by the United States in the military prison in San Francisco Harbor, $50,000; the cost of which, when completed, shall not exceed $250,000; the sum hereby appropriated shall be so expended as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of said institution. stitution.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. WALDO. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as an addition to the paragraph ending at line 25, on page 137.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 137, after line 25, insert: "For the purchase of a site for the increase of the fortifications and for the enlargement of seacoast defense at New York Harbor, $1,000,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. To that I reserve a point of order. Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that notwithstanding the heavy force that exists in the harbor of New York, the city of New York is practically defenseless against bombardment by a foreign fleet. This is a matter which the Chief of Artillery in the War Department has had under consideration for several years, particularly since the construction of Ambrose Channel has been under way, which increases the danger to the city.

Running from the entrance to the lower bay is a large body of very deep water, leading up to the eastern end of Manhattan Beach, about 5 or 6 miles from the fortifications at Sandy Hook. From this point a fleet would be within a mile of the shore, and could bombard practically all of Brooklyn, and would then be within 10 miles of the lower part of Manhattan, which could be reached at the same time. The only guns of the fortifications that could reach this fleet at all would be these at Sandy Hook, which would be between 5 and 6 miles be those at Sandy Hook, which would be between 5 and 6 miles away, and at night it would be practically impossible to reach effectively any fleet that was in this body of water off Manhattan Beach. The guns of such a fleet would be in the rear of the fortifications at Fort Hamilton, so that those fortifications could be shelled from the rear, and their guns could not reach the fleet in any way. Neither could the great fortifications at Fort Wadsworth reach this fleet effectively. It would be too far away, and more than that, they would have to shoot over Coney Island, and the buildings there would obscure any view of the whereabouts of the vessels.

There is another reason why this ought to be done, and that is that the Ambrose channel, which is now about completed, 35 feet deep and 1,000 feet wide, would be open, and there is no system of fortifications there to protect mine defenses in that channel. The War Department informed me that it would be practically impossible to protect mine defenses in Ambrose channel until the very end of the channel, where it ended at the Narrows. With fortifications at Nortons Point or some point on the south side of Coney Island, such a mine defense could be protected and the entrance of a hostile fleet into the harbor stopped.

Now, I understand that the Appropriations Committee have refused to consider this, and that the War Department has considered that it would be too expensive a project to induce Congress to undertake. The total cost of such a project would be between two and three million dollars. If a foreign fleet should come into these waters, they could, with practical safety to themselves, drop a few shells into Manhattan and Brooklyn and levy a tribute of $50,000,000 or $100,000,000. take them more than a few minutes to do that; and I feel that while the greatest city in America is practically defenseless from such attacks, and is so considered by the military authorities of this country, something ought to be done. I offer this amendment as only a small beginning of what ought to be done at this Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress there was an estimate for additional land at Fort

Mr. WALDO. This has nothing to do with the improvements at Fort Hamilton, but is for a fortification farther down the harbor, on Coney Island, which the military authorities inform me is absolutely necessary for the protection of the city.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Why have they not so informed Cou-gress?

Mr. WALDO. I talked with them about this and they stated that they believed it would cost so much money that there was no use in presenting it to the Appropriations Committee. But I, as a resident and Representative of the great State of New York, believe it ought to be called to the attention of Congress here, even if the Department will not present it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the gentleman will withhold it for a moment. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say about this matter that there has been no estimate for the acquisition of these sites. It is for the acquisition of sites at Nortons Point, in the city of Namy York. I do not know when what the officials in the city of New York. I do not know upon what the officials of the War Department base the statement that it would be futile to submit this question to the Committee on Appropriations because the committee would not consider it on account of the cost. My experience as a member of the committee has been that the committee is ready to appropriate for the defenses of the country whatever sums are required for the defenses that are imperative to protect great cities and the seacoast. If the sites be essential as a part of the country's defenses, then the Department is to be criticised for not performing its duty in submitting the estimates for it. As a member of the subcommittee on fortifications, I wish to say there has been no intimation from the Department that such an appropriation is necessary, and I wish to assure my colleague from New York [Mr. Waldo] that from my experience as a member of that committee, if the Department would submit such an estimate it will be carefully and properly considered. If shown to be essential, the money will readily be appropriated. I desire to say this because, as a member of that committee, in view of what has been said, I might perhaps be subjected to some criticism for not having urged the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For maintenance and repair of improvements, including not exceeding $10,000 which shall be used for the repair and improvement of the east and south roads in the Yellowstone Forest Reserve, $75,000, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War; and to be immediately available.

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

Ing amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "reserve," in line 22, on page 139, insert the following:

"Also not exceeding $1,000, which shall be used for the survey of a wagon road for light vehicles connecting the Mammoth Hot Springs in the Yellowstone National Park to a point on the western boundary of said park where the West Gallatin River crosses the boundary line of said park, and connecting with the wagon road heretofore constructed by Gallatin County, Mont., along the West Gallatin River. The Secretary of War is directed to report from such survey to the next session of Congress estimates of what it would cost to construct such road and upon the advisability and feasibility of such construction."

Mr. DIXON of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in support of the amendment that it merely provides for a limitation on the appropriation for the park, requesting the Secretary of War to cause to be surveyed a line for a road for light vehi-cles from Mammoth Hot Springs to the West Gallatin River. Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand it, this does not create an appropriation, but simply diverts $1,000 for that purpose? Mr. DIXON of Montana. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes; including all necessary expenses for preparing correcting, extending, printing, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels, with a view to their regulation, to be immediately available, $75,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask how many years this survey of the lakes has been continuing?

Mr. TAWNEY. The survey commenced a great many years ago and was partially completed, but since the construction of vessels of greater draft than originally it has become necessary to resurvey the lakes.

Mr. PERKINS. How long is it since the resurvey was started?

Mr. TAWNEY. The resurvey commenced in 1902, and the gentleman in charge of the survey when before the committee was unable to give the committee any definite idea of when the work would be completed. It is the judgment of the committee, however, that it should be nearing completion, and for that reason in the last session of Congress we reduced the appropriation from $100,000 to $75,000. The Department complained very bitterly on account of this reduction, claiming it would be necessary for them to suspend a part of the work and ask for an increase to $125,000 for the next fiscal year; but we gave them only the $75,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Has the gentleman any idea when the work will be done?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no idea when it will be done. not believe there is anybody who can tell. It will be completed whenever in the judgment of Congress the surveys have been sufficiently complete as to the various channels in the lakes. The plan, as I gather from the testimony of the gentlemen who appeared before the committee, contemplates surveying practically the whole lakes, regardless of the usual routes of travel of the vessels on the lakes.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think this survey will ever be completed or will it become a permanent charge on the Government of $75,000 or $100,000 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. It may be that when vessels of greater tonnage than are now constructed and with greater draft are built it may afford an excuse for a resurvey, and thus keep on indefinitely, but without any material change in the draft of vessels now on the Lakes it ought to be completed in a very few years, in my judgment. But that is not the judgment of the men who are in charge of the survey.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think that all this survey is necessary for the purposes of navigation or is a great deal of it unnecessary?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Lake Carriers' Association is very insistent upon the survey being continued, and they claim that there is a great demand for it; that the resurveying has not gone on long enough; that the resurveys in general of channels which have heretofore been traversed by vessels on the Lakes on account of the greater draft of the vessels now make it very essential that the survey should be continued.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no hope of this survey ceasing in the immediate future?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; there is not.

Mr. PERKINS. I am sorry to hear that. Mr. TAWNEY. But I think by reducing the appropriations occasionally we can hurry it up.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope so. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

International Waterways Commission: For continuing the work of investigation and report by the International Waterways Commission, authorized by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, $20,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, upon the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania last evening we passed over all the items beginning at the bottom of page 102, line 22, over to and including line 10, page 106, and I now ask to return to those items.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks to return to items under the head of United States Geological Survey, heretofore passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JAMES. A parliamentary inquiry: Is it necessary to have unanimous consent to return to provisions passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. The items were passed over without prejudice and were subject to the call of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JAMES. I merely wanted to suggest to the gentleman perhaps we might be able to finish this paragraph relating to the Soldiers' Home, and then recur to these paragraphs.

Mr. TAWNEY. I agreed with the gentlemen who are interested in this paragraph that when I reached the item of Soldiers' Homes I would return to this.

Mr. JAMES. How long does the gentleman think it will take upon the proposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it will take very long to dispose of it; an hour probably.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general expenses of the Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and the products of the national domain, and for surveying forest reserves, including the pay of necessary clerical and scientific force and other employees in the field and in the office at Washington, D. C., and all other absolutely necessary expenses, including telegrams, furniture, stationery, telephones, and all other necessary articles required in the field, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, namely.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "domain," line 1, page 104, the following:

To continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, gauging streams, and determining water supply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 104, at the end of line 1, insert the following: "To continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, gauging streams, and determining water supply."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order against both provisions. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania should segregate his amendment. There are two separate and distinct propositions, but I make the point of order against the amendment as offered, but suggest it perhaps ought to be separated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the only point of order the gentleman makes?

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the ground that there is no authority of law for the preparation of a geological map of the United States or for the gauging of

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order made that there is no authority in law?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I think it is exceedingly fortunate that the chair is occupied by the present occupant of the chair, for the reason that the questions involved in these amendments about to be offered—one already offered have already been passed upon by the Chair a year ago, and his ruling at that time was so clear and definite that it is incapable of being misunderstood. I do not exactly agree with the ruling of the Chair with respect to the second part of this amendment of mine, the part that relates to the gauging of streams, etc. As the gentleman from Minnesota has suggested, my amendment is subject, perhaps, to division. So far as the first part of it is concerned the proposition for continuing the work for making a map of the United States is very clearly within the organic act creating the Geological Survey, which reads as follows:

For the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey, which office is hereby established under the Interior Department, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $6,000: Provided, That this officer shall have direction of the Geological Survey, the classification of the public lands, and the examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

· Now, of course, the making of a map is an absolute essential in connection with this Geological Survey. The formulation of conclusions of the Department in making a geological survey in classifying the public lands, and so on, necessarily involves the making of a map, and this is the work that has been in progress and has been provided for and appropriated for year after year for a great many successive years. The language of the amendment that I have suggested is the language of the current sundry civil appropriation bill. So that so far as the first part of the amendment is concerned it is clearly within the purview of the Geological Survey. But aside from that, as I recollect it, the Chair on a previous occasion ruled on this exact question and admitted the provision for the continuation of this map. Now, so far as the second part of the proposition is concerned, the gauging of streams, the Chair has already ruled on that subject, and I will leave it to my friend from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-DELL] to argue that question.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to be heard on the point of order, if the Chair will bear with me while I discuss it along the line of my discussion of a year ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to interrupt the gentleman for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]?

Mr. MONDELL. With pleasure.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman propose to discuss the merits of the proposition with respect to the gauging of streams or the point of order?

ago that he desired to discuss it along the line of the argument of a year ago

Mr. MONDELL. I make that statement to the Chair because do not care to take the time of the House in a second discussion along the lines of the discussion of last year. But I am inclined to think that the Chairman could not have taken into consideration carefully some suggestions made in my argument I hold, Mr. Chairman, that water is a mineral; that the organic act establishing the Geological Survey provided among other things for an examination of the mineral resources of the United States, and I call the Chair's attention to my argument on that point, which appears on page 8487 of the Record of June 14, 1906.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there can be no question but what the Survey has authority to examine the mineral resources of the United States. That must be admitted, because that is the language used in the organic act. It seems to me there can be no question about water being a mineral—one of the most widely diffused and one of the most valuable minerals on earth-and I desire to call the Chair's attention to the fact that it is so defined by every known authority on the subject. There is no higher authority on the subject of minerals than Prof. E. S.

Dana, and in his text-book of mineralogy he says: Mineral species as a rule are limited to solid substances, the only liquids included being metallic mercury and water.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming permit the Chair to interrupt him?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be pleased to.
The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] said:

On page 104, at the end of line 1, insert the following: "To continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, gauging streams, and determining water supply."

The question of mineral resources of the United States is not involved in this amendment, nor is it involved in any part of the paragraph that has been read.

Mr. MONDELL. The gauging of streams, Mr. Chairman, is the measuring of this mineral.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman says they have a right to investigate the mineral resources of the United States, and water being mineral, therefore they have the right to investigate the water and the water supply. that is not involved in this. Does the gentleman from Wyoming contend that because they have a right to investigate the mineral resources of the United States, therefore they have a right to gauge streams?

Mr. MONDELL. I would say it would necessarily follow, Mr. Chairman, because I know of no way in which you may determine the quantity of mineral resources except by measuring them.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question? What is the purpose of gauging the streams?

Mr. MONDELL. The purpose of gauging the streams is to determine the amount of this particular mineral resource and its availability for use by determining its amount and the characteristics of its flow.

The CHAIRMAN. As a mineral?

Mr. MONDELL. As a mineral. Does the Chair desire any further authorities on the question of water being a mineral? If so, I would be very glad to call the Chair's attention to the Century Dictionary, to the Standard Dictionary, to all of the dictionaries of the English language, all of which define water as a mineral.

It seems to me there can be no question on this point.

If the Geological Survey has the right and the authority to make examination of the geological structure and mineral resources of the national domain, it has authority for making these examinations in any way which may be beneficial to the people of the United States, and how can this be done better than by measuring and testing the quantity, the quality, the regularity or the irregularity of the flow, and all those important points which are determined in this investigation and which tend to and do indicate the amount, the method of occurrence, and the utility of this most widely diffused and most valuable of minerals?

I do not care to take up the time of the House or the Chair with a further discussion of this matter, unless there may be some question in the mind of the Chair in regard to the mineral character of water, for it seems to me that that having been determined, there can be no question but what the Survey have the right to measure and examine this mineral as herein proposed.

And, further, if the Chair will bear with me, I would like to call attention to the fact that the gauging of streams and the examination of water supplies is one of the things necessary Mr. MONDELL. The point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman to say a moment for the classification of the public lands of the United States; that it is utterly impossible to determine the character of certain lands without the knowledge of their water resources. Lands are valuable in the arid and semiarid regions depending entirely upon the presence or the absence of a water supply. A region absolutely arid, aye, a region that is a desert, may be made to blossom as the rose if there is a sufficient water supply available for its irrigation. How can the Survey determine and report on the character of these lands of the United States without an examination of the water supply, upon the presence of which the character of the land depends as to whether it is irreclaimable or land which may be reclaimed and made fruitful. There are many regions in which the question as to whether lands may be reclaimed or not, as to whether they may be utilized for pasturage depends entirely upon the depth to water; and in order to classify these lands so as to know whether they are lands which may or may not be irrigated, and may or may not be utilized for pasturage, whether they may or may not be utilized for farming pur-poses, depends very largely, and in many instances entirely, upon the question of the depth to which the herdsman, the farmer, or the ranchman may have to dig to secure water; and on many of the public lands the most important question to be determined in the classification of such lands is the question of water supply.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that whether you view this matter from the standpoint of classification of lands, a work clearly within the jurisdiction of this Bureau, or from the standpoint of the examination of mineral resources of the United States, in either case the Chair must hold, first, that there can be no thorough, definite, purposeful, useful classification without a knowledge of the water supply; second, that there can be no complete examination of the mineral resources of the United States without an examination of that mineral resource, more valuable in the arid regions of the United States, at least, than all the gold and silver and all the mines of copper and iron. So it seems to me the Chair must hold that this amendment, so far as it relates to the gauging of streams, is in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, so far as the point of order relates to the gauging of streams for the purpose of determining the water supply, I do not think it is necessary for me to address the Chair in the light of the very clear, logical, and conclusive decision or opinion rendered upon the same question during last session. The gauging of streams for the purpose of determining water supplies and the gauging of streams for the purpose of determining the extent to which they increase the mineral resources of the country are two entirely different and distinct propositions; and it is not necessary to discuss whether water is a mineral. That we all understand. We also understand that all portions of the earth formation are in some degree mineral, and that does not mean necessarily that mineral land is not agricultural land, although agricultural land may have some mineral in it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the other questionthe continuation of the geological map. The act creating the Bureau of Geological Survey was enacted in 1879. It was enacted, as the Chair will remember, after Congress in the preceding year had passed a resolution calling upon the National Academy of Sciences to report upon an organization of some bureau in which could be united the geological survey and the topographical geological surveys, then being carried on in three separate and distinct branches of the Government.

The language of that act is:

For the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey, which office is hereby established under the Interior Department, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $6,000: Provided, That this officer shall have the direction of the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

The field of the activities of the Geological Survey, by the organic act creating it, is limited to the national domain. In compliance with the report of the committee appointed by the National Academy of Science on this proposition, the language is identical, with the exception that in this act the term used is "national domain" instead of "public domain."

Now, on the question as to whether or not this limits the field of its activities to the national or public domain, or whether that authority carries the Geological Survey into every State in the Union, that question was very fully and elaborately dis-cussed on the point of order in the last session, and this is what the Chair said:

Mr. Dalzell. Am I right in concluding that the groundwork and foundation of the Chairman's ruling is that "national domain" and "public lands" are convertible terms under the act?

The Chairman, Oh, no; "national domain" and "public lands" are not convertible terms; but the Chair believes that the national domain has a well-defined meaning, and does not mean the whole United States. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yesterday argued that the "national domain" means the whole United States and all the States of the United States. The Chair has an entirely different opinion from

Now, how did Congress construe the act creating the Geological Survey and the extent of its jurisdiction? The first appropriation was made in 1879, and it was made for the expense of the Geological Survey and the classifications of the public lands and the examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

Nothing is there said about a geological map of the United States. It was not contemplated. It was not thought that the purview of the act creating the Geological Survey contemplated a geological map of the United States. Follow the appropriations from the time of the creation of this Bureau down to 1883 and you will not find a line in any of the appropriation bills for the Geological Survey authorizing the making of a geological map of the United States. It was not until 1883 that this item first appeared in any appropriation bill appropriating money for the Geological Survey. Since that time it has been carried in connection with other appropriations for the Geological Survey, but it was not included in the organic act creating this Bureau. It was not claimed that it was included at any time until 1883. There is therefore absolutely no law authorizing the making of a geological map of the United States.

How inconsistent it would be to say that this act creating the Geological Survey contemplates a geological map of the United States, when authority is not given in the organic act to make a geological survey of the United States. You can not make a geological map of the United States without first making a topographical geological survey, and authority was not given for that purpose. Therefore it is impossible for any man to argue that authority for making a geological map of the United States is included in the original authority conferred upon or creating the Geological Survey.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. You may. Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Of what value would a geological survey be if it was unaccompanied by a map? Absolutely Absolutely none, I grant you. man, who is a distinguished engineer and a geologist, has made the point more clearly than I can possibly make it. A geological map without a geological survey could not be made at all, and yet nobody pretends to say that this organic act contemplates a geological survey of the United States. Authority is given to make a geological survey of the national domain, which means the unsold lands belonging to the people of the nation, not the land belonging to the States or people of the That is not making a geological survey of the national domain, and that kind of land is not included in the term "national domain," as the Chair clearly indicated a year ago when ruling upon this same question.

therefore, Mr. Chairman, that this act creating maintain, the Geological Survey not giving authority for the making of a geological survey of the United States or a geological map of the United States, and the subsequent Congresses up to 1883 never having recognized that the original act gave that power and authority, there is no law authorizing it, and it is not such a tangible work in progress as the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the distinguished gentleman now presiding over this committee, and many other distinguished Members of the House who have presided over the Committee of the Whole have held to constitute a public work in progress. Such a work must be a tangible work. It must be something that is tangible and not intangible; something more than the gauging of water or measuring of water or surveying indefinite areas of

Mr. SHERLEY. Can there be anything more definite in area than a survey of the national domain or of the territory of the United States?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I doubt if there could be anything more indefinite than the survey of the territory of the United States, because all the territory of the United States has not yet been explored. That would include the territory of the Philippine Islands, the Aleutian Islands, Alaska, and all the other insular possessions of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that that might have something to do with the magnitude of the undertaking, but would have nothing to do with the definiteness of the undertaking.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are parts of the Northwestern States where no civilized man has made an appearance or visited. I therefore contend, Mr. Chairman, that if the point of order is good as to the gauging of streams, it goes to the entire amendment, and I also maintain that the point of order is good as to the entire amendment, because a geological map of the United States is not authorized by law and there is no geological survey authorized by law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a word in connection with the point of order. Without discussing that part of the point of order which relates to the gauging of streams and which the present Chairman a year ago sustained, I desire to call to the attention of the Chair the fact that so far as it relates to that part of the amendment which reads "the making of a geological map of the United States" the point is not well taken. That provision relates to a work in progress, and it is a work with a definite limit to it. The point that the Chair made in his ruling a year ago was that as to the gauging of streams there could be no limitation, that it would be a continuing work never to be completed, and that therefore the precedents that were cited did not apply.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.
Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the making of a topographical and geological survey is never completed. The testimony before the committee of the chief of the division in charge of the duty of making plates informed the committee that they are changing their plates all the time because of the changes that are found to be necessary by the resurvey of the same areas made necessary by the changes of the topographical conditions. This one is as indefinite as the other.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is manifest, of course, that in the completion, in the sense of ultimate determination, of everything to be determined about the topography of land no completion can be had, but in the ordinary common use of the phrase in determining whether the project is capable of being completed it is manifest that the making of a map of the territory of the United States is a work that can be and will be in due course of time completed.

No sort of work undertaken by human hands ever reaches perfection, and if it be an argument that inasmuch as work can be improved by being done over, therefore it will never be finished, the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota would seem to be of force, but without that very extreme view it can not apply to the present case. I submit in all common sense that the making of a geological map of the United States is to the mind of any man a work capable of being definitely

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy much time, and I shall confine myself to an attempt to answer the argument of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the matter of maps. It is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, to go back into the history of the Geological Survey for the purpose of making the point I desire to submit. It may be well to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the early history of this country we had in the War Department topographical engineers, whose business it was to make maps essential to be used in the War Department.

That was discontinued a number of years ago, and when the Geological Survey was organized the War Department was obliged to rely upon the Geological Department for all its interior maps and the maps made by their surveys. I undertake to say now that all the maps which will be found in the office of the Engineer's Department of the War Department, except some additions or references made thereto as to streams, crossings, roads, etc., are maps that came from and were made by the Geological Survey.

But, enough of that history. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney], chairman of the committee, says that there is no authority of law for the making of these maps. We made a law in the last sundry civil appropriation bill, and I now read from that a clause or two. Under the heading of "For general expenses of the Geological Survey," we find this:

For the Geological Survey and the classification of the public lands and the examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and the products of the national domain, to continue the preparation of the geological map of the United States, etc.

Not to complete it, but to continue the work of making it. Now, we come to the rule that shows that it is in order to make appropriations as to work that is being continued. Under the act that applies to the present fiscal year we appropriated money only to continue it, and it is therefore clearly to be pre--conclusively to be presumed-that that is being continued now. But before going to that, I wish to answer what the gentleman from Minnesota says about there being no authority to make geological surveys, when he says that if there is not that authority, then there is no possibility of continuing the making of maps. Turning and reading again from the same law of last year, we find, under the same heading, this appropriation:

For topographical surveys in various portions of the United States, $350,000, to be immediately available.

That is for topographical surveys, not of the public domain, but of various portions of the United States, and further we find this:

For geological surveys in various portions of the United States, $200,000, to be immediately available.

It is not a question of the survey of the public domain. there a doubt about what that means? There is no doubt about the language used in the paragraphs of the act under which we are now proceeding in this fiscal year. Now, if I have made the point, I am about through. I shall now call the attention of the Chair to Rule XXI, paragraph 2, which is as follows:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

We appropriated, as I have already stated, in the last sundry civil appropriation bill for the continuance of the preparation of maps, and it is now being continued, and hence the amendment is in order as it only provides for the continuance of a public work or object already in progress, and plainly within

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the Chair if the Chair is ready to rule, but I am very much interested in this matter and I would like to submit some authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, following up what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] has said, calling attention to the fact that an appropriation for the continuation of a public work would be in order upon this bill, I want to call to the attention of the Chair several other authorities in the Digest and Manual. Doubtless the Chair has the authorities before him. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] contended that the work must be a tangible work in progress. I find a number of authorities holding certain works, certainly not more tangible than the preparation of a geological map, to be continuation of public works in progress.

For instance, I find that the continuation of a topographical survey has been held to be the continuation of a public work in progress and therefore in order on an appropriation bill. It is held that the distribution of the card indexes by the Library of Congress is the continuation of a public work in progress. Also that an appropriation for the completion of a list of claims is the continuation of a public work. I contend that the completion of a geological map, as provided for in the last sundry civil appropriation bill, is just as much the continuation of a public work in progress as any of the works mentioned in these authorities to which I call the attention of the Chair.

Therefore I think the Chair should overrule the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania reads as follows:

Page 104, at the end of line 1, insert the following:
"To continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, gauging streams, and determining water supplies."

A year ago, it will be remembered by those who took an interest in it at that time, that all of these questions were presented elaborately in an argument covering two days in this House, The present occupant of the chair was then sitting as the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and in an elaborate opinion settled these questions at that time.

Therefore, the Chair at this time does not think it necessary to go fully and completely into these cases. The Chair therefore desires to say that he thinks that the point of order should be sustained to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania for two reasons. To continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States is one thing; gauging streams and determining water supply is another thing, and the Chair thinks that that portion of the amendment which has reference to the gauging of streams and the determining of the water supply is subject to the point of order for two reasons, First, because the gentleman does not limit it to the national domain, and clearly, if the holdings of the Chair a year ago are to be sustained and followed here, it must be at all events and under all circumstances confined to the national domain, unless it can be shown to be a continuing work in progress, which the Chair holds is not the case with gauging streams and determining water supply. Therefore, inasmuch as a portion of this amendment is obnoxious to the rule, the Chair thinks it is all obnoxious to the rule, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, of course I accept the ruling of the Chair, and now I offer the first half of that amendment as relates to the making of the geological map.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 104, at the end of line 1, insert "to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no law authorizing a geological survey of the United States or a map of the United States.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania The CHAIRMAN.

desire to be heard? Mr. DALZELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. the point of order was made on a clause contained in the sundry civil bill at that time providing for the preparation of a geological map. Afterwards, when the whole thing had been carefully debated on the floor, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] withdrew the point of order, so that precise question was not presented to the Chair at that time, but the point of order against the making of a topographical map was presented to the Chair at that time, and the Chair thinks that the preparation of a geological map is on all fours with the case presented then of the preparation of a topographical map. The Chair at that time, in a decision of some length, held that, while there had been no statutory authorization for the preparation of topographical maps, yet, inasmuch as that work had been carried in successive appropriation bills, it became within the meaning of the rules of this House a continuing work in progress, and held it in order. Therefore the Chair overrules at this time that point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "United States" and substitute the words "national do-

I move that as an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the amendment the words "United States" and in-rt "national domain," so as to read "to continue the preparation of geological map of the national domain."

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard. I am aware of the fact members of the committee are anxious to proceed, but not more so than I am, with the consideration this bill, but I want to present to the committee some facts with regard to the work of the Geological Survey in connection with the making of a geological survey of the United States. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I say it without any fear of successful contradiction, that there is not a man upon this floor who does not know and is not satisfied in his own mind that every dollar of money that is appropriated from the Federal Treasury for the making of a geological or topographical map of his city or of his State is unauthorized by law or by Constitution of the United States. The work of making geological surveys and topographical surveys that devolves upon the Federal Government to-day must of necessity be confined to the territory which belongs to the United States. work of making a geological and topographical survey of your State, and of my State, and of the State of Pennsylvania, and of the State of New York devolves upon the people in that State to make and defray the expense of making. No man upon this floor can justify the appropriation or the expenditure of one dollar of money from the Federal Treasury to make a topographical or geological survey of his State, his county, his dis-

Now, this expenditure is not made by the Federal officials alone. Here we have in the hearings partnership between the head of the Geological Survey and the heads of the various bureaus under State governments. Think Here is a written contract for the doing of that which belongs exclusively to the States to do, whereby the Federal Government, in so far as an official of the Government, unauthorized by law, can bind the Government, agrees to do certain things in connection with the making of a geological survey of that State, included in this contract. The geologist of the State of Illinois, who has come on to Washington for the purpose of laying the necessity for this authority and appropriation before the members of the Illinois delegation, or at least some of them, admitted to one of the members of that delegation last night that with the $17,000 that he obtained from the Federal Government for the purpose of aiding his State in making a geological survey of his State he was able to get a larger appropriation from the State legislature for that purpose than he otherwise could. The money of the Federal Government is therefore not only used for the doing of that which belongs to the State to do, but it is being used for the purpose of bribing State legislatures or influencing them—I care not what you may call it—in making larger appropriations for this purpose than otherwise these officials say they could obtain.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.
Mr. KEIFER. I simply want to inquire for information whether it is true that the State of Illinois was given by the Geological Survey $17,000 out of our appropriations to carry on their State work, or whether it is only true that the Geological Survey made an arrangement by which the General Government aided in the matter of its geological survey?

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say to the gentleman from Ohio that if he will take the hearings and read them, the contract between the Director of the Geological Survey and the head of two bureaus, he will ascertain exactly what the terms of that unlawful contract are, entered into without authority of law by the Director of the Geological Survey of the United States. will say more specifically in answering his question that that money, by the act of the Director of the Geological Survey, and not by the act of Congress, is apportioned to the State of Illinois to aid the State of Illinois in making a survey it ought to make, and a survey which the Federal Government has no right or power to make, or can not make, without the consent of the State of Illinois.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman misunderstood my question. I wanted to know whether there was given, as he stated in the earlier part of his speech, to the State of Illinois, I believe, $17,000 to aid the State in making its geological survey, or whether the arrangement was not simply that the State might assist the General Government in the matter of making its geological survey, thereby saving expense to the General Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government can not make a geological survey of the State of Illinois without the authority and consent of that State. That of itself shows conclusively that the Congress of the United States never contemplated the making of a geological map of the United States. Why, the present Director of the Geological Survey came to my own State-Minnesota-some years ago to make a geological survey of that State. The geologist, Professor Winchell, denied him the right, and he did not make it. And he is to-day seeking to undermine State geologists in other States of the Union in order that he may add them to his power and influence in the matter of increasing his appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes more.

CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, the point, gentlemen, I make is, that it is not and never has been contemplated that a geological map of the United States should be made by the Federal Government, and that is proven by the fact that the Federal Government has not the power nor the authority to make it except by and with the consent of the State. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a more serious side to this question. Is the Congress of the United States willing to further surrender its right to a bureau officer to obligate our Government to aid in the doing of that which there is no statutory authority to do? Are we going to permit a bureau officer to formulate the policy of our Government with respect to cooperation with the State government in the doing of that which is not a part of the business of the Federal Government, but which belongs, as I said before, exclusively to the States to do?

I maintain, sir, that if it is wise for us to do this, then we should enact a law authorizing it. We should enact a law specifically designating the terms and conditions upon which this cooperation should be carried on without leaving it to the discretion of any bureau chief to determine what should be our policy. And above all, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that it is morally wrong for the Congress of the United States, in the face of the testimony it now has, to further appropriate money that may be used by our Geological Survey or by the State geologists to coerce the legislative bodies of the States into making appropriations for these surveys which they otherwise could not obtain.

Now, another fact, Mr. Chairman. None of the money which we appropriate for this purpose is expended in any State except upon the condition that that State contributes a like amount. Think of it! Our appropriations are taken, made as they are in lump sums, and are distributed how? It is not done impartially; but they are distributed only to the States that will contribute a like amount of money for the doing of that which it is best for the State to do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of these facts, I think it is high time that the Congress of the United States should exercise its functions and either say by law, and not by appropriation, whether it will or will not further countenance and acquiesce in this policy of copartnership between the State and the Federal Government in the matter of making geological surveys, and which the Federal Government is powerless to make without the consent of the States themselves. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman, Is not this question in the same line as the agricultural stations, for which the Government contributes? Is that not in partnership with the States of the Union?

Mr. TAWNEY. It may be in line, but it is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. One is authorized by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. One is authorized by law, and one is not authorized by law. The one is done by authority of Congress, and the other is not.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there can not be a more extravagant waste of time than to discuss in this House at this time the proposition that the national domain and the United States are not analogous terms. That whole subject was discussed, as the Chairman has already said, extending over a period of two days last year, and the decision of the Chair, clear and explicit, so clear and explicit that no man can doubt, is a matter of record.

Will the gentleman permit one interruption? Mr. TAWNEY. Has he decided that the words "national domain" and "the United States" are one and the same?

Mr. DALZELL. He has not. Now, with this other question, the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota, anticipating something that is yet to be reached in this bill, is that the United States of America is powerless to make a topographical map of the United States of America and is dependent upon the exercise or the nonexercise of power by the legislatures of forty-five different States and the legislatures of our Territories and Commissioners in our colonial possessions. Why, there is not a civilized country on the face of the earth that has not a complete map, a topographical map, geological map, charts of its bays and its harbors; and yet it is said that in the case of the United States the making of such map is not a great national project. Why, for twenty-five years the United States has been exercising this authority; and it never entered the mind of any man until it entered the economic mind of the gentleman on my left [Mr. TAWNEY] that the United States could not accept from the various States the aid that they were willing to give toward the making of a map of the United States—topographical, geographical, geological—a great national project, impossible to be made except under a single head, by direction of a single bureau. When the State of Pennsylvania comes up and says "We will contribute to this great work" and the State of Illinois says "We will con-tribute to this great work," the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota is that it is an unholy partnership into which the United States can not enter!

Now, it seems to me that it is not necessary to say anything more than that this, on its face, is a great national, necessary project, for which the National Government is bound to appropriate money, and that it is within the power of the National Government to accept such contributions as the States are willing to make toward that great national object. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota will be

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word in reply in regard to the distribution of this money. You take the geological map thus far completed and you will find that 90 per cent of that money that has been appropriated for that pur-pose has been expended in the Eastern States that are eminently qualified financially and from the standpoint of intellectual ability to make their own geological survey, but notwithstanding that, the money of the Government of the United States has been spent in the State of Pennsylvania, one of the richest States of the Union; in Massachusetts, and the State of New York and other Eastern States that were willing to enter into a partnership with the Director of the Geological Survey in order that the Government might make a survey for them that they wanted and which they were not willing to pay for entirely themselves.

The Western States have not received their proportion of this money. Even the national domain has not received it. Scarcely any part of the national domain has been topographically or geologically surveyed, notwithstanding that they have for more than sixteen years been appropriating money for this purpose and for the benefit of the Eastern States, whose surveys are practically completed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, some of the statements made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations are rather startling, and if they would stand the test of analysis might warrant this committee in destroying the Geological Survey, because that seems to be the desire of the Committee on Appropriations. But fortunately for that Survey the facts do not warrant some of the extreme arguments made by the distinguished chairman. He charges the Geological Survey with bribing the State legislatures. He does not mean that. He is simply dealing in extravagance of language brought about by a good zeal in the line of economy. What he means is that the Government is appropriating certain moneys, and the States, by appropriating certain money to cooperate, can get the work done quicker, and the American people being sensible people, when work is to be done they want it done as rapidly as possible, and therefore are appropriating the money through the State legislatures. [Applause.]

The gentleman will not stand here and say for an instant that a dollar of the money appropriated by the National Congress has been wrongfully used in bribing any individual in any

State of the Union.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not make the statement that it was used to bribe individuals or States.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Minnesota was not conscious of the force of his own language, and when I undertook to interrupt him to save him from extravagance he was too busy to yield. What he did say was that appropriations are being made and being used for the purpose of bribing the States to make appropriations, and the RECORD will bear that

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is it not a policy pursued by the Geological Department to give surveys to those States that appropriate money and to withhold it from those States that do not contribute?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not, and in answer to that proposition I state now that there are fifteen States that are cooperating, and that there is geological work being done in forty-seven States and Territories [applause], and I challenge the accuracy of that statement.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention of the gentleman from Missouri, who just asked whether or not surveys were not being made only where there were contributions by the State, to the fact that in his own State of Missouri not a dollar has been contributed by the State, while $14,400 have been paid by the Federal Government for topographical survey in his State in one year.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that was a topographical survey of the city of St. Louis.

If the gentleman will yield me one minute Mr. DALZELL. more, the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota, that money has been expended in the East and not in the West, is incorrect. I call his attention to the expenditure of money in Idaho, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Wyoming, and California. So that the gentleman from Minnesota is far adrift in the facts when he undertakes to make that statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. Chairman, I am indebted to the com-Mr. SHERLEY. mittee, and in order to show my appreciation I will agree not to take all of the five minutes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] largely covered some of the facts I was going to speak to. He pointed out the inaccuracy of the statements made by the gentleman from Minnesota. The fact is that cooperation has been growing between the various States The fact is. and the National Government, and the reason for it is most plain and sensible. It simply enables the work to be done twice as rapidly as it could be done otherwise, and the States are awakening to a realization of the value of this work done under Government supervision, and in order to accelerate it are willing to contribute. There seems to be in the mind of the gentleman from Minnesota an idea that there is some vice in the fact that the States are helping to defray this expense. The gentleman argues that the State should defray all the expense, but that if it only defrays half, then it is guilty of a great crime. It is at least doing half of what the gentleman himself wanted, and to that extent should not be subjected to criticism.

But the fact is that whether this should originally have been a matter for the States is no longer an open question. It has ceased to be a matter for State work. It has become a great national undertaking, and the only question for this committee to consider is whether we want to cripple and destroy it. The gentleman complains of the large authority exercised by the Director of the Geological Survey. How would be regulate it? By passing any act of Congress prescribing his duties and limiting his powers? No. He would take the method of destroying fig his powers? No. He would take the method of destroying it or limiting it to such a narrow territory that the work of the Survey would no longer be valuable. If he is so anxious to curb authority erroneously exercised in the Department, let him bring in proper remedial legislation, and let him not ask the committee to follow him in destructive legislation against one of the best works and one of the best bureaus of the Gov-ernment. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRUMPACKER, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24537) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Scott, Mr. Hemenway, and Mr. Blackburn as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8316. An act for the establishment of a park on the northern portion of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in Idaho.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12858. An act permitting the county of Taos, in the Territory of New Mexico, to refund its indebtedness at a lower rate of interest; and

H. R. 25601. An act to repeal the act approved January 22, 1903, granting a pension to Minerva Robinson.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2011) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda L. McCorkle.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7840) granting an increase of pension to Lewis A. Towne, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McCumber, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11040) to authorize the receivers of public moneys for land districts to deposit with the Treasurer of the United States certain sums embraced in their accounts of unearned fees and unofficial moneys, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Hansbrough, Mr. Nelson, and Mr. McLaurin as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. Debate is proceeding under unanimous The Chair is about to recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan], but the Chair desires to state to the members of the committee that the way in which to cut off debate is not by crying "Vote!" "Vote!" but by objecting when request is made for unanimous consent. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I was struck with the remarkable unanimity with which the House applauded the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] when he objected to the extravagance of language of the gentleman from Minnesota. I wish that the House would applaud with equal vigor the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota when he objects to extravagance in appropriations; but it is my judgment that the House is far more unanimous in condemning extravagance of language than it is in condemning extravagance in appropriations. [Applause.] There has been some suggestion here that cooperation between the National Government and the State governments is good; that it serves a useful purpose. I merely wish to point out that the great mining States of the West, which need topographical and geological surveys more than the States of the East, are compelled to wait because of their lack of financial resources, in order that the older and richer States of the East may first be served. I want simply to point out that that is one of the evil results of the system of cooperation.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, if it is not true that one-third of these appropriations annually go to the Western States, instead of all the money going to the States of the East? Is not that a fact?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I assume that it is a fact, and my only objection to that is that two-thirds should go to the West rather than to the East, if the purpose of the original law were observed.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There is ten times as much work to be done in the West.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. They get one-third, anyhow.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I know that the Geological Survey has great influence with this body. I have been told—I do not know whether it is true or not—that Members are reminded that unless these appropriations are given, and unless they struggle for them, the mapping in their own districts can not go on. Now that may be the proper way to influence the action of a Member of Congress or not. It is for each individual Member to decide that question for himself. But I want to point out, in answer to one of the suggestions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], that there are many of the projects which are being executed by the Geological Survey which are not in any sense of the word national in their character.

For example, the Geological Survey frequently makes topographical surveys for cities in order to aid them in determining how best to construct waterworks and sewer works, and I would respectfully ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dal-ZELL ] whether a topographic map in aid of a city that is about to construct waterworks is in any sense of the word a national project?

Mr. DALZELL. A part of the national project; yes. Mr. SULLIVAN. Let me ask the gentleman what part? Mr. DALZELL. It would depend very largely on the size of the city in relation to the whole territory.

Mr. SULLIVAN. What relation, I will ask the gentleman, does the city bear to the National Government? Perhaps this may be a useful lesson in political economy.

Mr. DALZELL. It is a part of the national territory.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Is it any part of the national territory in a sense which justifies the National Government in making appropriations for municipal work? I would like a fair answer to that question.

Mr. DALZELL. Not for municipal work. The National Government makes no appropriations outside of the national domain, but a city is a part of the geographical territory of the United States that some day or other will be all mapped.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; if the gentleman has his way.

Mr. DALZELL. Just as much as a farm or a village or a State, except that it is not so large.

Mr. SULLIVAN. It is true that every city in the United States is incorporated within the geographical limits of the territory of the United States, but it is not true that any city of the United States is any part of the Government of the United

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman has answered his own question. He has stated that the National Government has no right to make appropriations for municipal purposes, but I respectfully submit that when the National Government expends this money for the making of a topographical map in aid of a sewer project of a city, that that is, in its practical effect, a national appropriation for municipal purposes, and to that extent is a violation of the theory of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from K The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts ask it?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I prefer not to, but I am willing to submit. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman does not ask it, I shall object. If the gentleman wants it, I shall not.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Oh, well, then I join in the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], because I believe he has the right to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent has been asked by both the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts for five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has asked a series of questions. The Chair will recognize the gentleman tions based upon a hypothetical condition. Will he state, upon his own authority and knowledge, the name of a single city in the United States where topographical work has been done at the expense of the United States for the benefit of a sewer com-

Mr. SULLIVAN. There have been cases, I will state to the gentleman. I do not recall the name of any city at pres-

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Was not St. Louis surveyed within the last few years?

Mr. TAWNEY. If my colleague will permit, I shall be very glad to name them.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. And I shall state it on the authority of the Geological Survey. Both the city of St. Paul and the city of Minneapolis were topographically surveyed for the benefit of the municipalities and also for the benefit of the interurban railway companies.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will again ask the gentleman from Massachusetts-and he can transfer the question again, if he chooseswhether he believes that any of these surveys made in the city have been made upon any other scale than those that have been made out in the country at large, in order to accommo-date the survey to the needs of either a railway system or a sewerage system or anything else, and at the expense of the National Government?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman I can not give of my own knowledge the name of any city that has procured a topographical survey to be made by the National Government; but it has been frequently stated to me, so frequently that I have not taken pains to record the statements, and I assumed that it was a settled practice that when cities through their Representatives asked that the Geological Survey should make a map for any local purpose, that request would be granted by the Geological Survey.

I did not believe until now that a single Member of the House would even question the statement. I am quite certain, if it is worth while, that within the course of a day or two I can give the gentleman from Kentucky information upon the ques-Mr. SHERLEY. I will be glad if the gentleman will do it, so that in the future we would not have to depend upon statements unbacked by detailed information.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has answered the gentleman from Kentucky that topographical surveys were made of the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis in aid of a local railway project. I submit to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is no more right for topographical surveys to be made in aid of a local railway project than to be made in aid of a sewer or water works.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, unquestionably not. Mr. SULLIVAN. Now I yield to the gentleman from Arkan-

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts simply a question. If I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts, his objection to this is because the Government has no right to go out and make appropriations to carry on that work that properly belongs to the States. Is that correct?

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is true; and in that connection—
Mr. BRUNDIDGE. And the gentleman—
Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman must not dictate the form of my answer. I trust the gentleman will allow me to make my answer.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. But I had not finished my question. Mr. SULLIVAN. Then let the gentleman reconstruct his

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. If that be true— Mr. SULLIVAN. I have not answered; you must not assume anything is true until I have finished my answer.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Is there not in this very bill appropriations carried that are just as much subject to the same objection, and more so, than this item?

Mr. SULLIVAN. There are, Mr. Chairman; and that brings up the question whether having begun on a course of error it is the express duty of Representatives of the people to persist in it until the end. [Applause.] Of course there are in this bill items that are obnoxious to the reasons I have stated upon this point, but I did not suppose until now that any gentleman would insist that because there was a wrong in one part of the bill that we were justified in perpetrating other wrongs in other parts of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes directly on this amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes on the proposition. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Georgia. I object. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask, as a member of the committee, that I be allowed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that debate on this matter has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted upon the pending amendment, and the committee has been proceeding for some time only by unanimous consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAWNEY, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word, which is in order; and after that, the Chair will state, a man will be entitled to the floor for five minutes in opposition.
Mr. OLMSTED.

I would like to be that man, Mr. Chairman. Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered an amendment and the gentleman from Minnesota offered an amendment to his amendment, so there are two amendments pending, an amendment to an

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands corrected, because he had forgotten temporarily the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the amendment offered by the gentle-man from Pennsylvania. Therefore debate has been closed, and the motion of the gentleman is not in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment

The question was taken; and the Chair reported that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Tawney and Mr. Sullivan) the committee divided; and there were-ayes 53, noes 112.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-DELL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 104, after the word "resources," insert "including water."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. If water is a mineral, it is included in the original authority. If it is not, it is not, and that is all. If water is mineral, there is no occasion for specifying the word in this act, but if it is proposed by a subterfuge to get into this bill that which has already been ruled out as not belonging to it, it is not entitled to any consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, unless the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] desires to be heard. Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming does not care to take the time of the House further than to refer to the care to take the time of the House further than to refer to the fact that all the standard dictionaries and all the standard authorities classify water as a mineral. And the object of my amendment is to simply, clearly, and definitely include this mineral among the other minerals which are to be examined. It certainly would be germane to insert the word "iron" or the word "copper" or "coal" or "silver" at this point. I implyed specifically this one mineral which on a level of the include specifically this one mineral, which on a large portion of the public domain is the most valuable of all minerals.

or the public domain is the most valuable or all minerals.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word on this point of order. The argument made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] in support of the point of order made by him is that the word is unnecessary, as it is already included under the words "mineral resources." I submit, Mr. Chairman, that may be an argument against the advisability. Chairman, that may be an argument against the advisability of including those words in the bill and entitled to consideration by the Members in voting on the amendment, but it is not an argument in support of the point of order. All that is involved in determining the point of order is the single proposition of whether or not water is a mineral, and upon that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] has made an extended argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming is as follows:

In line 1, page 104, after the word "resources," insert the words "including water."

The Chair thinks this is obnoxious to the rule, and that the point of order should be sustained. When the statute creating the office of the Geological Survey was passed, it had this lan-guage, and the Chair assumes if the Geological Survey of the United States has any power it was conferred upon it by the express language of the statute which created the Geological Survey, and that aside from it, it has no power. This is the

Provided, That this officer shall have the direction of the Geological Survey, the classification of the public lands, and the examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain.

Now, it occurs to the Chair that the word "water" is included in the term "mineral resources," and if water is not a mineral, in its relation to agriculture, therefore it is not included in the term "mineral resources," and can not be included in the term "mineral resources," and can not be included. in any of the powers conferred by statute upon the Geological Survey

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the Chair allow me one question?
The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.
Mr. BONYNGE. If water be a mineral and it is included under "mineral resources," then upon what ground can the Chairman sustain the point of order? How would it be observed to the rule prohibiting a change of law in an analysis. noxious to the rule prohibiting a change of law in an appropriation bill if water be a mineral and the Geological Survey has the right now to make an investigation of mineral resources? It may be unnecessary to put those words "including water" in, but how would the inclusion of those words be contrary to the rule or in extension of authority conferred upon the Geological Survey by existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Colorado to the language of the bill which is pending and which the gentleman seeks to amend by his proposition.

Now, the gentleman from Colorado will observe, and other members of the committee will see, that the committee in for-mulating this bill has followed precisely the language of the statute, which the Chair has just read, creating the Geological Classification of the public lands, the examination of the geological structure and the mineral resources and products of the national domain, etc.

Now, the Chair calls the attention of Members to the fact that the committee specifically follow the language of the statute. The Chair supposes that the gentleman from Wyoming is seeking to change that language, because if he were not seeking to change it it is already included in the bill; and if he is seeking to change it, it is a change of existing law, entirely outside of the authority conferred on the Geological Survey by that statute, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to offer another amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

other amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 1, page 104, insert the words "water resources and products of the national domain."

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. MONDELL. I would like to be heard on the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no desire to cut the gentleman off from being heard. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MONDELL. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that my amendment contains language that was not contained in the former amendment, and that there are added reasons why this amendment is germane to the bill. The Geological Survey has authority

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that the Chair has already ruled, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. The Chairman has not ruled. I ask the Chair to give me at least two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to give the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that my amendment proposes an investigation of the water resources and products of the national domain. It is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Geological Survey to examine into the mineral resources and products of the public domain. There is no product of the public domain so important, at least west of the Missouri River, no product of any such great value as water, and if this valuable product can not be investigated, what product of the public domain may be investigated? I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that while my former amendment was ruled against, it seems to me that had the amendment used the word "iron" instead of "water" it would not have been subject to the point of order, and surely water is a mineral as much as iron. This amendment also proposes an investigation of this valuable product of the national domain, and I submit it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again calls attention to the fact that in the language of the bill pending the committee in formulating the bill have followed precisely the language of the statute, and all the powers conveyed on the Geological Survey are conferred by that statute. Now, if the examination of those things suggested by this amendment now rests with the Geological Survey, then the appropriation is provided in the bill; if it is not, then it is in contravention of the statute and is therefore new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order. It is clearly obnoxious to the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees, $20,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 104, insert:
"For the continuation of the investigation of structural materials belonging to the United States, such as stone, clay, cement, etc., under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, to be immediately available, $100,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. On the ground that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NORRIS. I do, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the Chair that the amendment which I have offered, and which the Chair now has in his possession, is identically the same amendment that I offered one year ago when we were considering this identical bill, when the same point of order was made and the Chair overruled the point of order. I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to take up the time of the Chair or the House in going over again the discussion on the point of order. Thus far the Chair has ruled the same as he did one year ago, and while I would not the Chair has any idea that his other ruling was erroneous, still at the same time I would not care to be heard unless the Chair has had a change of heart. This was found on page 8496 of the Congressional Record, dated June 14, 1906.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I should like to know if the amendment is the same amendment that was offered a year ago after the Chair had ruled that the original proposition was not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; because it has reference to materials of that character belonging to the United States, which the Chair held must be those materials belonging to the United States on the national domain, and limiting the scope of the appropria-

The Chair thinks it is clearly in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word, then, in opposition to the amendment. The Committee on Appropriations did not report this provision, for two reasons. In the first place, it is a duplication of work. In the second place, this service was placed in the Geological Survey in connection with the exhibit at St. Louis. It was intended to be temporary In its character. The men who had it in charge said to the Committee on Appropriations two years ago that if they would give them the appropriation for the next fiscal year the work would be completed by July 1, 1906, and the Committee on Appropriations wrote that into the law

Now, I trust that the Members of this House will not, simply because of their friendship for the Geological Survey, allow that friendship, either for the personnel employed in that Bureau or for the work of that Bureau in connection with geology, to sway their judgments in respect to a matter of this kind. have at the Watertown Arsenal, in the State of Massachusetts, the best testing plant in the world. It is unequaled by any other, and if any gentleman will take the trouble to read the hearings he will find that that testing plant is testing building material of all kinds for people in every State in the Union, including reenforced concrete, which was the principal object of giving to the Geological Survey the opportunity of making tests of building material at the St. Louis Exposition.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should also like to ask the gentleman whether or not it is true that the laboratory in the Supervising

Architect's office is also testing structural material?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is true, and in addition to that we have the Bureau of Standards, created here in the city of Washington, for that very purpose.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And is it not also true that the Chemical Bureau in the Department of Agriculture, with their laboratory, have been testing the coals used by the Government at a very small expense?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are testing coals, and not only that, but they are testing building material. All wood taken from the forests, from the Government forest reserves, is tested in the Forestry Bureau of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You stated just now that the Bureau of Standards was also testing this material, arguing that it was unnecessary for this appropriation to be made for that reason. I should like to ask how many hundred thousands of dollars or how many million dollars we have spent in establishing that Bureau of Standards?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to answer the question of the gentleman, but I know that the Bureau of Standards is testing the building material that is going into the House office building that is costing the Government $3,000,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have spent thousands and thousands of dollars to establish that Bureau of Standards.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And that is one of the businesses that it carries on.

Mr. TAWNEY. I fully understand the object of the gentleman from Nebraska in offering this as the representative of the Geological Survey, as he did in the last session of Congress. It goes to the Senate and there is broadened so as to include testing of building material not upon the public domain, but building material for the benefit of private interests. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Watertown Arsenal testing plant tests for everybody, but the Government is reimbursed for those tests made there to the extent of the cost of those tests, and in the Bureau of Standards, when testing is done for outside parties, these parties must also pay for the cost of the tests. The Geo-logical Survey makes its tests for nothing, wholly at the expense of the Government of the United States. It has more tests to make, because, forsooth, these tests can be made at the expense of the Government or as a gratuity to the person who wants the test made.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to interrupt the gentleman right there, and to say that these tests are not made for private individuals at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows very well that the testing that is being done under the authority of the appropriation of the last session of Congress is made for people outside or material outside of the material taken from the public domain.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows nothing of the kind.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not informed. Now, Mr. Chairman, I insist that we have two testing plants, one at Watertown and one at Washington. If the testing plant at Watertown, which is unequaled by any in the world and is now engaged to make tests of building material all over the United States, there is absolutely no use or justification of our continuing to appropriate money for the purpose of carrying on the same tests in the Geological Survey, which work is inconsistent with the purpose for which the Geological Survey was created.

WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska by striking out the words "one hundred" and inserting the words "one hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, that the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the words "one hundred," the word "fifty;" so that it will read "$150,000."

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in the outset that I have been struggling for three days with the physical grippe and also the grip of the Appropriation Committee, waiting to get in this amendment. Of the two grips, I prefer the former. I have received in that time this bundle of letters from engineers all over the United States, all urging that this appropriation should not be diverted. I want to say right here that the gentleman from Minnesota is absolutely in error as to his statement about the Watertown Arsenal. It can not at present test a reenforced concrete beam, for it is a horizontal testing machine. It has never tested one and never will test one until certain changes are made in their machinery, which will cost more than the $35,000 which is in the appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, General Crozier stated to the committee, and I think his word is worthy of consideration, that they were testing reenforced concrete and testing all kinds of reenforced concrete, and because of the increased work that is now going on in the testing plant at the Watertown Arsenal the estimate of General Crozier, who has charge of the plant, there was an increase of $20,000 in the appropriation for that work, so as to extend it to carry on the work, and the Committee on Appropriations has recommended and the House has approved of that increased appropriation.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, all that has been gaid about the Watertown testing machine is quite true, but the main fact has not been touched on at all. I stated to the House that it was a horizontal machine. Any tests involving tensile strength it can carry on perfectly well, nor is there any trouble about testing for compressive strength; but in regard to testing for vertical strains, it is not equipped for that. Of course it can be equipped for it, but the St. Louis machine is already equipped for it. And when the gentleman speaks of duplication of work, that is exactly what he is doing. He is duplicating work that is now being satisfactorily done, in the opinion of the leading engineers of the United States, by putting up apparatus to do this work at Watertown.

Mr. TAWNEY. Who is doing the work—
Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. I can not be interrupted by anybody unless he is bigger than I am. [Laughter.] The location of St. Louis is almost in the exact center of this country, and on account of this central location the saving in transportation of material to be tested exceeds $20,000 per annum. However, I have not time to make a speech, but I am going to read two or three letters here from men distinguished in their profession, and I am going to read their names. Here is a telegram which reached me this morning:

NEW YORK, February 23, 1907.

Hon. William Wiley,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

It is of the utmost importance to public interests that the investigation of structural materials, particularly with reference to reenforced concrete now being carried on at St. Louis by the Geological Survey, should be continued by the same agency and on an adequate scale. The appropriation should not be less than $100,000. The investigation is now being carried on by the most competent experts in the country, and would lose a great part of its value if placed in other hands.

ALFRED NOBLE.

I will also quote the following. Capt. John S. Sewell, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, stated in the hearings for 1907 (p. 686) before the Appropriations Committee on the sundry civil bill as follows:

There was a good deal of discussion a while ago about the testing station in Watertown. I think the main purpose of that testing machine is for the test of metals used for the production of ordnance material, and they have no facilities there for making the transverse tests—that is, taking a beam and breaking it.

Mr. Bernard B. Green, superintendent of the Library of Congress building, stated in the same volume of the hearings (p. 686) in speaking of the Watertown testing machine for testing ordnance materials:

I do not think anything has been built equal or superior to it. But it is a machine, nevertheless, that is limited in capacity and in range of efficiency. It is a horizontal machine and so not a good machine to test columns with. A vertical machine is needed for that.

Also the following letters referring to the Watertown testing machine:

Also the following letters referring to the watertown testing machine:

University of Pennsylvania,
Philadelphia, Pa., May 10, 1905.

My Dear Sir: I sincerely hope that the committee will see fit to make a favorable recommendation in the matter of an adequate appropriation for the continuation of the work initiated at St. Louis. That the need of such investigations carried on on an adequate scale, under proper auspices, is great is unanimously conceded in well-informed circles, and there are probably few who will consider it feasible, for reasons on which I need not enlarge, to conduct such under other auspices than those of the National Government.

As to the possibility of conducting such investigations on a scale in any way commensurate with their importance at the Watertown Arsenal, as at present equipped and under existing conditions of pressure on its limited facilities, it is, I feel sure, out of the question. Moreover, the principal machine at that laboratory, namely, the horizontal Emory machine, is not well adapted to bending tests on large reenforced concrete beams. I should suppose that an adequate enlargement of the existing facilities at Watertown would entail practically as large an outlay as would be required for the enlargement of your facilities at St. Louis. The latter location is geographically a central one, and, for that reason, offers advantages that will become increasingly important as the work develops.

I can not otherwise than think that the committee will recognize the validity of the representations in support of the proposition made by those who stand personally in a wholly disinterested attitude toward this matter.

Very sincerely, yours,

Edgar Marsburg,

Professor of Civil Engineering, University of Pennsylvania;

Professor of Civil Engineering, University of Pennsylvania;
Secretary of American Society for Testing Materials.

Boston, Mass., May 25, 1896.
I approve statement of Professor Marsburg. G. F. Swain,
Professor of Civil Engineering,
Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill., May 24, 1906.

Dean Sir: I agree with your estimate of the importance and value of the proposed investigation of structural materials. I am also of the opinion that a separate organization along the lines proposed for making this investigation will be much more efficient and productive of better results than would be obtained by putting the work in the hands of an organization which is engaged in doing other work.

Concerning testing machines there seems to be no question that a horizontal testing machine (like that at Watertown Arsenal) is not adapted for work with concrete specimens and that vertical machines should be used. It is also true that to conduct experiments of any magnitude a number of these machines must be available.

I hope the appropriation will be made. It is for a good cause. I am ready to assist in the furtherance of such work.

Yours, truly,

A. N. Talbot,

A. N. Talbot,
Professor of Municipal and Sanitary Engineering, in charge of Theoretical and Applied Machines.

FRICK BUILDING, Pittsburg, May 22, 1906.

MY DEAR SIR:

The principal work done at the Watertown Arsenal laboratory in the past has been on iron and steel, both in small members and in full-size members, such as beams and columns, and quite valuable and extensive work has been done in that line * * * with the horizontal testing machine. * * * Such a machine is not suitable for testing concrete beams, as that takes a vertical machine. * * * In my judgment the work planned for the laboratory at St. Louis is a distinct field by itself, and it in no way interferes with the chosen field of the Watertown Arsenal laboratory. * * * * EMIL SWENSSON.

University of Wisconsin,

College of Mechanics and Engineering,
Madison, May 23, 1996.

Dear Sir: I note the suggestion that the concrete work might be done at the Watertown Arsenal. I have no doubt it is possible to do the work anywhere with the proper equipment and attention, but that it would be done at Watertown within any reasonable time is not to be hoped for. It seems to me to carry the work on satisfactorily it is absolutely necessary to have two or more machines of about 200,000 pounds capacity especially adapted for beam work. For column work a capacity of at least 1,000,000 is very desirable, and for the most satisfactory operation a vertical machine is preferable. In my judgment it is a physical impossibility to carry on the work with reasonable speed with the single Watertown machine.

Trusting you will succeed in convincing the committee of the desirability of a special appropriation for this work, I am,
Very truly, yours,

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

the gentleman from New Jersey may proceed for five minutes

Mr. UNDERWOOD. J demand the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I yield. I supposed that the gentleman from New Jersey had concluded his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unaulmous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

Mr. SULLIVAN rose

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, if I make a motion to strike out the last word, will I not be recognized for five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman will be recognized.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is an amendment to the amendment already pending, and it is not subject to another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had overlooked that fact.

gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Willey] is an expert in this matter, and I only wish that his testimony had been given so that we upon this side of the House could have heard it. I judge, however, from the few stray words I got, that he said there was some test which was not made at the Watertown Arsenal. I do not know what kind of a test that is, but I desire to read, for the information of the House, the kind of tests that are made there. There is the compression test, the test of tensile strength, an impact test, called a dynamic test, by the dropping of weights, an alternating stress test, where power is applied to a revolving bar or axle, a test under the influence of heat, a test under the influence of cold. Then there is what they call a transverse test.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Will the gentleman please explain the transverse test that they have on that machine?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes; and I shall yield a part of my time to the gentleman. All of these tests, so far as the committee knows, which are necessary to be made are being made at the Watertown Arsenal. It is a splendidly equipped plant for this The machine there is the best in the world. It was installed in 1879, and there is no other in the world to equal it. In order to give the House some idea of the apparatus at that arsenal for the making of tests, and also of the character of materials which are tested, I will ask the Clerk to read from the hearings the marked parts on pages 473 and 474, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass., May 12, 1906.

Watertown, Mass., May 12, 1906.

The Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.

Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor, in complying with your instructions of the 2d instant, to submit the following data upon the Watertown Arsenal testing laboratory:

(1) Apparatus:

Eight hundred thousand pounds emery testing machine, for tension and compression, loads on members up to 25 feet in length.

One hundred thousand pounds emery testing machine, tension and compression loads, samples 5 feet long.

Impact testing machine, 20 feet per second striking velocity, 60,004 pounds, chabotte and hase.

Repeated stress machine, 4 spindles at 500 rotations per minute, 1 high-speed spindle of 600 rotations per second.

Ball-bearing machine, thrust shafts.

Comparator, end standard and line standard measurements, 100-inch capachy, differential and microscopic movements.

Metallographic outfit, microscopic lenses and accessories.

Extensometers, dial, arc, and screw micrometer, with electric confact.

Micrometers for interior and exterior diameters.

Excensometers, dual, arc, and seteral fact.

Micrometers for interior and exterior diameters.

Micrometer for determination of internal strains in steels.

Astronomical level and micrometer beam.

Pyrometers, thermoelectric and mercurial thermometers.

Electric and gas furnaces.

Air compressor.

Electric traveling crane, for handling full-size test pieces.

Machine shop, equipped for micrometer work and preparation of test samples.

samples.

Mixing beds and tanks for cement and concrete investigations.

Fixtures for long-continued and endurance tests of concretes, plain and reenforced.

Chemical laboratory, fully equipped.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Now, I will ask the Clerk to read also those parts marked on page 474 of the hearings, which gives a list of the materials tested by this apparatus.

The Clerk read as follows:

ern Atlantic States, the Middle States, and the States of the Pacific slope.

Bridge columns—latticed, box, web plates, and angies.

Steels at different temperatures, zero to 1,600° F.

Cordage—hemp, manila, sisal, cotton, and steel wire.

Building stones, bricks, and clay products; brick plets.

Steel, heat and rechanical treatment of, ingots and forgings.

Cements, mortars, and concretes, plain and reenferced.

Respecting the industrial tests now under investigation—ingot steel and forgings therefrom, cements and concretes—special mention will be made of the latter group.

Comprehensive cement and concrete tests have been in progress during the past six years. The importance of cement construction to the industrial resources of the country was recognized, and this important series of investigative tests inaugurated in consequence thereof. Original lines of inquiry have been pursued on fundamental questions pertaining to the physics of cements. At the present time the tests have reached the subject of concrete columns, plain and reenforced. All types of modern concrete column construction are included, much of the special reenforcing material having been furnished by the engineering firms engaged as specialists in this work, who are cooperating with this laboratory in advancing the work.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, just a single word in con-

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, just a single word in conclusion as to these tests by an expert of the highest order. The late Professor Johnson, of Washington University, St. Louis, in his book, The Materials of Construction, says:

There are to-day a few exceptionally fertile sources of exact information on subjects pertaining to materials of construction, prominent among which may be named the annual publication of the results of tests made at the United States Arsenal, Watertown, Mass., beginning in 1882.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask unanimous consent for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object, inasmuch as I objected to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey be given five minutes in which to conclude his remarks. He was interrupted and rather disconcerted. He is a practical man, I think, and I think he can give us some information.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will ask unanimous consent that the limit of debate on this paragraph may be ten minutes, divided between the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, I should have to object to that.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like just one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] offered an amendment. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Wiley] offered an amendment to that amendment. The Chair recognitions of the control of the co nized the gentleman from New Jersey in favor of his amendment and the gentleman from Massachusetts in opposition to it. Debate on the amendment to the amendment can not proceed now except by unanimous consent, but it will be in order after the amendment to the amendment has been disposed of. Then there will be five minutes' debate on either side on the original proposition, and, of course, the gentleman from Nebraska, who offered the amendment, will be entitled to be heard in support The gentleman from Tennessee now asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall object unless debate on this paragraph is limited. If limitation can be secured, I will not object, but if it can not I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed in fifteen minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the chairman of the committee after he has been heard-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not catch the motion. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in fifteen minutes

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WILEY] be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Jersey for five minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is that to come out of the fifteen minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want five minutes myself.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the Chair had in mind giving the gentleman from New Jersey five minutes, the gentleman from Missouri five minutes, and the gentleman from Nebraska five minutes.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I will give the committee an object lesson of the reason why the Watertown machines can not test a reenforced beam. The Watertown machine is a hydraulic machine with hydraulic power, and the power is applied at the ends, developing tensile or compressive strains, whereas to test a reenforced concrete beam for vertical pressure it is placed in the position in which the beam would be when in its place in the building under construction and tested for the strains it would be subjected to in such position. When a concrete beam is tested at the Watertown Arsenal for vertical strains it must be laid on its side and hydraulic pressure applied at the ends. The weight of such beam then becomes a factor in the result, but in the St. Louis plant this weight does not apply, since the beam is in its normal position. Now, there is an objection to the hydraulic pressure, which I The Watertown machine when it was made will state later. thirty years ago was a very perfect piece of apparatus, but it is now out of date.

The testing plant at St. Louis is thoroughly equipped and will test beams of 30 feet in length. They test them for any strain they desire. The beam is supported at the ends or in the middle, or supported at intermediate points, as may be desired, simulating the existing conditions under which the beam will rest when in position in the building, and then the desired pressure is applied by screws. There is a great difference be-tween the application of hydraulic pressure and that of screw. pressure in that when the screws are set and the desired pressure has been applied they will remain set, and the pressure is a constant factor, thus determining the strength of the beam under what is called a "fixed load," which again simulates the strains it would be subjected to when in its position in the building. Of course, if strains under variable load are desiredand this is the problem many engineers most desire to see solved-the pressure may be varied or changed from point to point and these additional strains thus developed determined. This can not be done under hydraulic pressure, for, in addition to the fact that the beam can not be tested in its proper position, as already stated, hydraulic pressure is not a uniform quantity. The reason for this is there is always a chance for leakage, which would change its entire character, and this is not the case where pressure is obtained by means of screws.

I have a great number of letters

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman permit a question? For whom are these various vertical tests performed?

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. I do not know for whom they are performed. I know they are aids to the engineering knowledge of this country and abroad. However, I know nothing about the details of the testing at St. Louis.

Mr. TAWNEY. How are we going to expend $100,000? Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. We could spend $150,000. Mr. Noble says it ought not to be less than $100,000. The last time this bill was up I had an amendment to allow private firms to have tests made by paying the expense of such tests, but the gentleman from Minnesota would not allow it to go into the bill. Mr. WEEKS. Do you think if the Fuller Construction Company wanted beams tested the Government ought to test them? Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. I am not going to answer any such question as that. I do not know what the Government ought to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. That is just what I thought would happen. I would like to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has already been given unanimous consent to extend his remarks

Mr. WILEY of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, one difference between a statesman and a politician is that the former takes a broad view in legislation regarding its effects on the whole country, while the latter views it simply from its probable effect in his own district and whether it will help or hinder his chances for reelection. Therefore I hope and, indeed, believe there are more statesmen than politicians in this House, for it is only by a broad view that one can realize the scope and the accomplishments of the Geological Survey.

Just why there should be any hostility, seeming or real, toward the Geological Survey in the House is a matter I can not understand, nor why there is a disposition to cut down their appropriation or to delegate their tests to another Department. Any withdrawal of funds at the present time is not only to be deplored, but will prove most disastrous and expensive, much more so than the amount withdrawn represents.

A series of experiments and tests have been undertaken and are partly completed. The amounts required for this purpose have been carefully computed and given to the committee; the forces of skilled men have been assembled and the work committed to their charge; and to cut down the estimate would mean to abandon a number of investigations whose completion is not only sought for by the engineering profession of the country, but is needed by the United States Government itself, since all tests are at present confined to Government materials. Take, for instance, the tests on material needed for the dams and locks on the Panama Canal, representing $40,000,000, and also bearing in mind the United States Government spends on building and construction work $25,000,000 per annum. It has been estimated by the Supervising Architect that the tests already made have saved the Government 10 per cent at least, so that the saving already exceeds by far the estimated appropria-tion of $100,000 to continue this work. The investigations at St. Louis, although under the management of the Geological Survey, are conducted by a board on which are representatives of the Navy Department, War Department, Treasury Department, and the Reclamation Service. The following list shows some of the material investigated:

(1) An examination of the cements, cement materials, sands, gravel, stone, clays and clay products, and other materials available for use in Government building and construction work in different parts of the country. (2) Examination and testing of concrete, reenforced concrete, etc., made of these various materials obtained in different parts of the country. (3) Steel rods and beams of different sizes and types used in reenforced concrete construction work. (4) The fireproofing and fire-resisting qualities of materials needed for use in Government building and construction work obtainable in different parts of the country. All of these investigations are intimately and inseparably associated with the building-material resources of the country, and hence are properly a part of the work of the Geological Survey.

On June 2, 1906, Gen. O. H. Ernst, of the Panama Canal Commission, and Mr. Taylor, Supervising Architect, and other members of the supervising board sent a letter to the President of the United States, from which the following extract is made:

When it is remembered that the yearly losses from fire in the United States aggregate $2.30 per capita, as compared to 33 cents per capita in European countries; that the fire losses in the United States during the past ten years have aggregated not less than $1.250,000,000 that the people expend annually in building and construction work $1,000,000,000, and that this Government litesif expends annually for such purposes more than $20,000,000, it is apparent that this whole subject deserves the most serious consideration by the Government.

This committee furthermore begs to express the opinion that a thorough investigation of the properties of the materials of construction and fireproofing and the resulting increased economies in our systems of construction may be expected to save annually from 5 to more than 10 per cent of these total expenditures, which would mean an annual saving to the Government alone on its present expenditures of from one to two million dollars and to the people of this country a saving of many millions each year.

The plant itself covers about 2 acres of ground at St. Louis, on which are three buildings, containing five large testing machines and some smaller ones. There are sixty experts and ten laborers, all specially trained for this work. The location ten laborers, all specially trained for this work. The location at St. Louis is advantageous as being about in the industrial center of the country. Moreover, the southern and western railroads transport this material, aggregating 100 carloads, without charge, while to carry the same material East would involve from $15,000 to $20,000.

A distinguished engineer, Mr. George S. Webster, chief engineer of Philadelphia, wrote me, under date of February 13, as follows:

Dear Sir: As a member of the committee on concrete and reenforced concrete, I am very much interested in the continuance of the appropriation of $100,000 for carrying on the investigations of concrete and reenforced concrete at the United States Geological Survey laboratories at St. Louis, the appropriation to continue the work to be available until June 30, 1908.

The various laboratories in the country have not the requisite equipment for the carrying on of investigations on such a scale as will secure information as to the properties of cement in a reasonable time. The equipment of the laboratories at St. Louis is superior to those of any other laboratory in this country and possibly abroad. The work is well organized, and it would be a serious mistake to discontinue or reduce the present appropriation of $100,000.

The only other Government laboratory was equipped for testing other materials, principally steed, and its horizontal machines are not adapted for testing beams, columns, and test pieces of concrete.

I sincerely trust, therefore, that the present Congress will make adequate provision for the continuance of the work at St. Louis, so that the work which is being done there in investigating structural materials may be completed.

I make in this connection an extract from a letter of February

I make in this connection an extract from a letter of February 13 from another eminent engineer, as follows:

For ten years I was connected with the building authorities of the city of New York, the latter five years of that time as the chief engineer of the bureau in the borough of Manhattan. During that time I was in a position to fully realize the importance of the investigations that are being made at St. Louis. The inquiries concerning reenforced concrete during that time from all parts of the country, especially from the building bureaus of the various cities, were numerous, showing a great want of knowledge and a desire for information on this subject. The work at St. Louis is what is needed to supply this want.

You understand fully the important position that building construction occupies among the industries of this country. And when we remember the danger to life from bad construction due to incomplete and inaccurate information concerning structural material, it is easily seen that the work of the laboratory at St. Louis is for the common welfare and not for a particular class. It seems to me, therefore, a very necessary as well as entirely proper function of the Government. The only other governmental institution in any way fitted for investigations of this kind is the laboratory at the Watertown Arsenal. But that laboratory is equipped especially for tests on ordnance materials, and other tests are therefore only incidental and can be made only when they do not interfere with the regular work of the laboratory. The tests that are made on concrete lack the systematic character so necessary to secure comparable results. They consequently do not have the value of those made in accordance with a prearranged plan, such as is possible in a laboratory devoted to the one purpose. In my official capacity I visited the Watertown Arsenal to inform myself on the work along the line of structural material, and the lack of facilities for systematic research struck me at that time. Do not think for a moment that I would discredit in any way the work that is being done or has been done at Watertown, for I have full confidence in its reliability, but for satisfactory results the tests must be the main object of a laboratory and not an incident.

A distinguished member of the Appropriations Committee suggested these tests pro

Now, aside from the manifest detriment of transferring from Department already equipped and engaged in the work to one not equipped at all, it may be stated the Bureau of Standards was never designed for any such investigations. Its function is to determine what is the standard of length or of capacity, but in no way to deal with matters affecting geology. It is not enough to determine the characteristics of certain rocks suited for making cement or concrete or any other materials used in construction, but the character of other rocks near by, underlying or superimposed upon the cement rock, must be studied and their effect on the probable thickness or extent of the vein determined. This is one of many other geological aspects which ought to be known to reach a satisfacory result.

Besides, both the Bureau of Standards and the Watertown Arsenal are engaged in making routine tests required for use by the Government. It has never been found practicable to carry on work of this character in conjunction with investigations of the properties of structural materials, and it is well known that in carrying on such investigations men must devote their entire time to the work, as it is not practical to drop it temporarily and resume it again, as is done in routine tests. In other words, testing materials must be a continuous performance. This would necessarily mean the maintenance of two separate squads, and there would be more or less interference with both the regular and routine work and that of the investigations. It is therefore immeasurably better to have the work carried on under such conditions that are not interfered with by routine work, such as prevail at St. Louis under the direction of the United States Geological Survey, where the men devote their entire time to the one subject, viz, the investigation of the properties of these materials

Finally, to obtain any such results as are desired through the medium of the Bureau of Standards would imply thorough equipment, which must be a duplication of that at St. Louis which is already in operation, and a force of trained men, who could only be efficient after an experience of several years; hence, the results would be delayed during such time.

As to the Reclamation Service, if may be said that the determination, through these tests, of material suited for construction located near the points where it was to be used have already saved the Government nearly $1,000,000, much of which was represented by the diminution of the transportation charges.

In this connection, one item alone affords proof of this statement. Two hundred and fifty thousand barrels of cement will be required in the construction of the Roosevelt Dam at the Tonto Basin. The contractor's price for this originally was over $9 per barrel. By locating material at the site and equally suitable for the purpose this price was reduced at once by the contractor to $4.81 per barrel, but the Government itself is obtaining cement for about $1.75, which includes cost of transportation.

The Watertown Arsenal equipment was installed primarily for testing steel. The present machine was installed about thirty years ago, and is not regarded as a modern type of machine, and is not adapted for the character of work which is being done at St. Louis, for the reason that in testing columns the column has to be placed in the machine in a horizontal position, and it is necessary to apply counterweights in order to re-lieve the bending strains, due to the weight of the column itself and its preservation in a true horizontal position. This introduces an error which can not be accurately determined.

Moreover, the Watertown machine, I understand, has never been calibrated since its installation in 1879, which, of itself, would throw doubt on any results obtained by its use, and it is also a hydraulic machine, which is not, in current practice, regarded as the best type for accurate work in contrast with the St. Louis machines, which are screw machines. Being a hydraulic machine, it is impossible to carry a constant load on the test piece for any length of time, due to leakages around the packing, while the St. Louis machines, being screw ones, can maintain indefinitely the pressure applied.

Furthermore, the different laboratories, to possess the requisite equipment, would have to secure it and install it, which would take considerable time, so that it would probably not be less than six months before they can begin investigations. is necessary, in cement tests, to have the sample stored under uniform conditions. Such storage places are already provided in St. Louis and are in constant use.

It has been presumed by some who have combated this view that the tests at St. Louis are practically completed. That this is an error may be seen from the following considerations: Many of the beams under test have been arranged to have the test continued without intermission for upward of twelve months, and only a small portion of this time has elapsed. To cut down this appropriation at present would mean that all the conclusions which are to be drawn from these facts would have to be abandoned, inasmuch as the time covered by the appropriation would expire before the tests had been completed, and it is, therefore, evident that the several hun-dred test pieces which have been prepared to meet these conditions have not been in storage sufficient time to prepare them for the tests designed, and the results of the work in preparing these test pieces would be lost. Reenforced concrete beams are prepared and stored for various periods, from one month to twelve or eighteen months, before testing. The conditions under which they are stored must be uniform or the test is of no value. They are then tested at the proper time and the strains determined—the effect of the concrete on the steel reenforce and of the steel on the concrete. The buildings at St. Louis contain many such pieces stored till the proper time for testing shall elapse.

Furthermore, in testing beams, there are no appliances at the Watertown Arsenal which are suitable, and to test beams in a horizontal machine of this character would be applying crude methods, to say the least. The reason why this horizontal machine is not adapted at all for making tests of concrete beams lies in the fact that a beam would necessarily have to be placed in on its side, which would produce a flexure in the opposite direction for which the beam would be designed. Besides, the weight of the beam, which would ordinarily be a factor in its strength, would come on the side of the beam instead of in its usual position, and this would introduce two variables which would make such determinations practically worthless.

Even were this machine adapted for these tests, it would be impossible to make on one machine tests with sufficient rapidity to furnish the required information except after a long series of years. It would be necessary, therefore, to add additional equipment to the Watertown Arsenal in order that they might undertake these tests on a scale commensurate with their importance, and that they might be executed within a reasonable time, and such additions would involve an expense much greater than the entire appropriation which is proposed.

The force at the Watertown Arsenal would be utterly inadequate for carrying on these additional tests, and it would be necessary to secure additional assistants, which must necessarily be trained before they can be efficient, thereby delaying the securing of results. Also, it is necessary to have storage facilities, machines for mixing, and other appliances in order to carry on the tests in a satisfactory manner, and this equipment does not exist at the Watertown Arsenal to-day. St. Louis laboratory has the equipment, has the organization, and is carrying on the tests, and there is every logical reason why the work should not be checked, but should continue, and, above all means, avoid a duplication of this work by increasing the equipment at the Watertown Arsenal or any other Government laboratory, which at the present time possess no equipment for the work.

One gentleman on the Appropriations Committee stated to me that an expert had told him reenforced concrete was known for a hundred years and all information respecting it had been obtained that engineers desired some years ago. I was unable to obtain from him the so-called "expert's" name, but I told him if this gentleman existed he had put himself against the united wisdom of both the engineers and architects of the present time, and reminded me very much of the intelligent contraband who used to come "from the front" in war times and tell all in the minds of the general respecting engagements which were past and the ones they were determining for the future. As a matter of record, the first concrete beam was made in 1889 on the Pacific coast, and the first house in which the walls were reenforced by concrete was built in 1875, being the residence of Mr. W. E. Ward, of New York City. I would simply add in this connection the remark of Huckleberry Finn, to the effect, "It is better not to know so many things than to know a lot of things that aren't so." There has been more misinformation and erroneous so-called "expert testimony" given on the floor of the House during this debate than in any similar period in my experience as a Member.

Surely all these reasons ought to be convincing to this House that any attempt to reduce this appropriation is not only undesirable, but also criminal—not a crime, but a blunder.

The difficulty in the minds of some of the Appropriations Committee is due to the fact that the Geological Survey deals in exact methods and carries out this practice even to preparing its estimates. They are the exact amounts needed to prosecute its work, and surely there is no Member of this House competent to pass on this question, which has been settled after long and frequent conferences with the heads of the various departments of the Geological Survey. Any variation in the interest of a so-called "economy" will prove to be the greatest extrava-gance and involve a loss to the Government that can hardly be estimated, as well as a loss to science.

I will finish these remarks by quotations from letters from the various persons interested whom I was able to reach during the last three days. Some of these gentlemen have expressed their opinion to the Senators and Representatives from their State, and I give extracts from their letters bearing on both structural materials and fuel tests, which were in response to a circular letter I sent out, which I give below:

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES, Washington, D. C., February 20, 1907.

Washington, D. C., February 20, 1907.

My Dear Sir: You have doubtless noticed from the press dispatches that in the sundry civil bill just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, no appropriation is recommended for the continuance of fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years, and in which the members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers have been greatly interested. Last year Congress appropriated $200,000 for this work, and this year $250,000. Another appropriation of $250,000 is asked for continuing this work during the next year.

In view of the importance of this work and the fact that a number of new investigations have only been begun recently under the supervision of members of the society, the discontinuance of these investigations at the present time would be little short of a misfortune to the country.

I know that every member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers realizes the importance of this work and wishes to have it continued until a number of important fuel and combustion problems can be definitely solved, and I feel certain that you will take pleasure in helping to accomplish this result. If such is the case you can best do this by immediately telegraphing and writing to one or more Members of Congress and the Senators from your State, calling their attention to the importance of this subject, and asking for their cooperation in securing the full appropriation estimated ($250,000) in the sundry civil bill for the continuance of these investigations during the next fiscal year. The matter will probably be voted on in the House of Representatives during the latter part of this week and in the Senate a few days later.

fiscal year. The matter will atter part of this week and in Representatives during the latter part of this week and in a few days later.

You will doubtless be glad to know that in addition to the three-volume report on these fuel investigations which was published last year, four special reports, embracing the accumulated results of the investigations during the past two years, are now about ready for the printer, and will be published at an early date.

Please mail me copies of such telegrams and letters as you may send on this subject in order that I may act advisedly in endeavoring to carry out the well-known wish of the members of the society that ample provision be made for continuing these important investigations.

Yours, very truly,

WM. H. WILEY, M. C.,

DEPARTMENT OF CIVIL ENGINEERING, MASSACHUSETTS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY, Boston, Mass, February 15, 1907.

Hon. W. H. Wiley,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Wiley: I am much interested in the work which the United States Geological Survey is doing at the testing station in St. Louis, and I sincerely hope, that the Government will renew the appropriation of $100,000 which was made last year. I do not think I need to urge upon you the desirability of tests for the cements and concretes and other materials which are the products of our mines and quarries. I understand that the equipment of the structural-materials laboratory at St. Louis is as complete as anything of the kind in the country and the work well organized. In this case it would be a great pity to curtail or discontinue it.

The laboratory at the Watertown Arsenal is equipped particularly for tests of steel, and, I understand, kept quite busy doing work of this kind. They have also made some tests of concrete and are now testing some concrete columns. The work at St. Louis, however, is much more extensive in the testing of cement materials, and I earnestly hope that Congress will not curtail it in any way.

With sincere regards, believe me, very truly, yours,

GEO. F. SWAIN.

Maj. WILLIAM H. WILEY,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I am sorry to hear, from your communication of the 14th, that the Appropriation Committee intends not only to cut down the appropriation for the work at St. Louis from one hundred thousand to fifty thousand, but also to divide this smaller amount between the St. Louis laboratory and the Watertown Arsenal. That seems to me to be a grievous mistake. The results of the investigations will fail to be the most satisfactory unless the work is done under uniform conditions, which, in my opinion, is not likely when the work is divided as proposed.

which, in my opinion, is not likely when the work is divided as proposed.

I have not had an opportunity to examine the equipment of the St. Louis laboratory and can only rely on what information has been given by those connected with the work and by the technical press. You are probably better informed in that matter than I. But I am sure that the apparatus of the St. Louis laboratory is more modern and better suited to the work.

Not only do I deplore the intention of dividing the appropriation, but I think it is false economy to cut the appropriation from one hundred thousand to fifty thousand, as proposed. The smaller the funds available to the laboratory the longer must the result of the investigation be delayed.

I sincerely hope that you may succeed not only in preventing the splitting of the appropriation, but also in securing the original amount. Yours, truly,

DEAR SIR: Replying to your circular letter, I am handing you copy of a letter which I have written to Hon. John Lamb.

Yours, very truly,

Dear Sir: As a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers I am very much interested in the fuel investigations which have been undertaken by the Geological Survey, and I would respectfully ask that you would give the sundry civil appropriation bill, of $250,000 for continuing this work, your support.

The results of the investigations so far have proven of material assistance to not only mechanical men, but manufacturing industries, inasmuch as it can be used as a basis for ascertaining the actual fuel value of the different coals.

Thanking you in advance for anything which you may consistently do in this connection, I am,

Yours, very truly,

PARKER BOILER COMPANY, Philadelphia, Pa., February 21, 1907.

Hon. WILLIAM H. WILEY, M. C..

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I sincerely hope that an appropriation will be made for continuing the fuel investigations and tests at St. Louis. We have been using the data already published, and if the work is continued the results will be very valuable; otherwise the work already done will be largely wasted.

At present only the largest power users and boiler builders can afford to make the expensive tests required to determine the best method for burning fuels, and we find that even they are not in accord and know relatively little. This is due to lack of cooperation and to the heavy expense which makes the problem one that only the General Government is competent to cope with.

As a comparative newcomer in the field of fuel utilization—five years on gas engines, ten years on boilers—I am astonished to find how little has been done toward securing consistent and useful data as a standard for reference. I find the biggest and greatest engineers more or less at sea on the subject. There is no agreement, no consistency, no proper cooperation.

for reference. I find the biggest and greatest engineers more or less at sea on the subject. There is no agreement, no consistency, no proper cooperation.

The writer has recently been at work on this very problem and has been developing a power-house chart, a copy of which is inclosed. In attempting to fill this chart in we have found that there is no data in existence that can be relied on. This has led to the design of a coal-test chart, a copy of which is also inclosed, for purpose of coordinating various tests of the same coal; but we find this impossible because the tests have been run at different times under different conditions, which make the results appear to be contradictory when brought together. The records are also full of tests by persons whose main object is to exploit some particular type of apparatus, and such tests are apt to be misleading.

We have been trying to get some of the big companies to cooperate to secure at least a few standard results, but find them loath to spend money for the benefit of the general public. The writer believes, however, that they could be got to cooperate by making tests in their own plants under the supervision of the Government test experts. This would add great value to the St. Louis work. What is particularly needed is a series of tests designed to determine the best rate of combustion for each grade of coal. These tests would be greatly to the advantage of the small fuel users, who are now largely at the mercy of all sorts of fakes and deceptions, which are only possible on account of the absence of accurate information.

We are writing all Members of Congress from this State, and California also, where coal is high.

Yours, very truly,

J. C. Parkee.

the structural-B regials investigations, I beg to inclose herewith copy of a letter I have written to each of the following Congressmen: Hon. J. B. FORAKER, Hon. FRANK C. WACHTER, Hon. SIDNEY MUDD, HON. B. G. DAWES, HON. J. A. BEIDLER, HON. PINKNEY WHYTE, HON. C. H. GROSVENOR.

Hon. B. G. Dawes,

Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Honorable Sir: I understand that the sundry civil bill provides for an appropriation of $100,000 to continue the structural-materials investigations by the Geological Survey at St. Louis, Mo.

The geographical location of St. Louis seems to me to be the best adapted for this station, and the work being done is of such vital importance to the structural work carried on in the United States, that I feel the importance of continuing this station, and take the liberty of arging upon you a careful consideration of any transfer or change in the station at this time, and would strongly recommend that it be continued.

As a member of both the American Society of Civil Engineers and the American Railway Engineering and Maintenance of Way Association, I am sure that I voice the sentiments of all the members.

Yours, very truly,

My Dear Mr. Dunwell: As Representative from my district, I write you on behalf of an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the continuance of the fuel investigations which the Goyernment has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

This matter is of immense importance to the engineers of the country. Congress has already appropriated $450,000, and the work has reached a point where it is practically complete, but it will be of no service unless completed and published.

There is an item of $250,000 in the pending appropriation for the coming fiscal year. I believe this has been reported adversely, and I am of the opinion that it is a great mistake. I hope that you will feel at liberty to speak in favor of the appropriation and save the work already done.

Very truly, yours,

Dear Senator: In the sundry civil bill just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, no appropriation appears to have been recommended for the continuance of the fuel tests and investigations which the Geological Survey has been conducting at St. Louis for the last two or three years. This work is, I feel, of great importance to the country at large, and especially to Pennsylvania, and I would ask your cooperation in securing an appropriation for the continuance of the same. The work is being carried out under the direction of members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and is being conducted along lines which will ultimately develop a mass of invaluable information to all fuel producers and users.

Butler, who represents the district of Chester and Delaware counties, in which district I am a resident, and I am acquainted with Mr. Butler intimately, he having been a schoolmate of mine.

I took similar action last year in regard to this same matter, and I trust that the appropriation may be carried through this year, as the mechanical engineers of the country ask comparatively little of Congress in the way of appropriations for investigation when compared with some other interests of the country.

With my best personal regards to yourself, I am,

Dear Sir: My attention has been called to what I consider a very important matter, namely, the omission of appropriation to continue investigations of fuel and problems of combustion at St. Louis, which were carried on and have been continued under the auspices of the Government since the St. Louis Exposition.

The results of these tests are of immense value to the mechanical and electrical engineers throughout the country, and also of immense importance to the public in the development of more efficient methods in the use of our natural fuel supplies and developing processes for handling the poor fuel supplies which are now utterly useless or being wasted.

handling the pool has septembered.

The report which was published last year of the work done in 1904–5 is an exceedingly valuable contribution to the subject as far as it goes, and I am looking in eager anticipation for the reports, which are now about in the printers' hands, of the continuation of these tests. These books would be extremely valuable to me if I could have them here at the present time, as I have an important matter coming up or Saturday of this week and could use them to advantage. Of course they will be of advantage when they are published, and I trust that you may consider this matter of vital interest to your constituents and see that an appropriation is made to continue this valuable investigation work at St. Louis.

Dear Sir: From the press dispatches I notice that in the sundry civil bill, just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, no appropriation is recommended for the continuance of fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

It would be extremely unfortunate if these investigations should be halted before they are completed, and I trust that you may feel justified in supporting the effort which I understand is being made to secure an appropriation of $250,000.

The relative value of our fuels is a question of moment to all interested in the material development of the country, and the determination of these appears to me to be a work which the General Government can with propriety undertake.

I beg to state that I consider the reports of investigations made during the exposition at St. Louis to be among the most valuable literature published by this Government, and should think that, for the benefit of the engineering fraternity in general as well as for the public at large, an appropriation at least as large as that made in previous years should be made for carrying on the work.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: May I ask your consideration that the full appropriation of $100,000 be made in the sundry civil bill for continuing the structural materials laboratory investigations by the Geological Survey at St. Louis? I am informed that there is some danger of the money being appropriated for other purposes.

The work that is proposed is one of the most useful to the engineering profession that has ever been undertaken by the Federal Government. It is specially useful in the line of all cement products, and will increase the output of all our mills in this great industry when more is known about its structural properties combined with steel.

I trust that you will be able to use your influence in obtaining this appropriation.
Yours, truly,

SAMUEL T. WAGNER,
Assistant Engineer Philadelphia and Reading Railway.

DEAR SIR: May I bring to your serious attention an appropriation of $100,000 in the sundry civil bill for continuing structural materials investigations by the Geological Survey at St. Louis?

I am informed that there is some danger of this amount being used

I am informed that there is some danger of this amount tening used for other purposes.

The whole engineering profession is intensely interested in the work that is going on at St. Louis and upon the results which are there being investigated will depend data upon what is now known as "reenforced concrete," a compound material which, when more is known about it, will prove one of the most valuable building materials known.

I trust that you will be able to help us get this appropriation.

Yours, truly,

Dear Sir: We understand that the sundry civil bill reported by the Appropriation Committee of the United States House of Representatives has eliminated from same the appropriation for the continuance of fuel investigation by the Government. We consider this investigation one of the most important ones for the benefit of the country at large, and therefore urgently plead with you to use all efforts to see that the appropriation which was made for previous years is continued.

Hoping that you can conscientiously carry this out, it being money well expended, we remain,

Dear Sir: I am advised that there is pending before Congress a bill asking for an appropriation of $250,000 to assist the fuel-investigation work which has been carried on during the last two and a half years at St. Louis, and which, I consider, has resulted in great good for all users of fuel.

This work is in the hands of a very competent set of engineers, and they are working out results which have been needed for a long time by the various engineers and manufacturers of this country, and I trust that you will see your duty clear to support the measure when it comes before you.

Yours, very truly,

Hon. M. E. Driscoll, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: My attention has been called to a bill before your honorable body to appropriate money for the continuance of investigation as to the value of certain fuels. I think the amount appropriated last year was about $250,000 and that the same is asked for this year. To my mind, this is a very important item and will bring good results and benefit eventually every manufacturer in the United States and perhaps some other countries. I have read the reports of the committee for the time it has been in existence, and they are very interesting and instructive, and I know of no way by which the work can be so well done as by our Government. A private individual or corporation could not undertake it. But it will benefit every person in the United States eventually. I ask that you give this bill your support.

Yours, truly,

E. P. Bates.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 20th instant relative to further appropriation for fuel investigations received last evening, and I at once wired Col. Henry Du Pont, our Senator, and Hon. Hiram Burton, our Congressman, in accordance with your suggestion, and have written them this morning. Copies of letters and telegrams are inclosed herewith

I trust sincerely that the appropriation in question will go through,

Col. H. A. Du Pont,
Senate Annex, Washington, D. C.:
Would appreciate it if you can consistently lend your support to sundry civil bill for full appropriation relative fuel investigation.

EGBERT MOXHAM.

Col. H. A. Du Pont,

Senate Annex, Washington, D. C.:

Dear Colonel Du Pont: Last night I wired you that I would appreciate greatly if you could consistently lend your support to the sundry civil bill for the full appropriation relative to fuel investigation.

As you no doubt know, last year Congress appropriated the sum of $200,000 for the carrying on of investigations which the Government had been conducting at St. Louis relative to fuel values. I understand a further appropriation of $250,000 has been asked for to continue this work during the next year.

As an engineer, I have been greatly interested in the work of this investigation and believe it has brought to light a great deal of knowledge that will be of material benefit to the country in general. I therefore felt that the bill was a worthy one, and, understanding that it was to be voted on the last part of this week, I wired, trusting to bring the matter to your favorable attention. I trust you will not feel that I have imposed upon your kindness, and accept my best thanks for whatever attention you could give the matter.

Yours, very sincerely,

CINCINNATI, OHIO, February 22, 1907

Hon. Thomas W. Bradley, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The good work which has been done in the past by the appropriation for the sundry civil bill merits that this appropriation should again be allowed and the bill passed. Everyone recognizes the fact that good construction in public buildings is now demanded, and it can not be brought about without a thorough investigation of materials which go to make that construction.

I hope that Congress will see its way clear to make this appropriation again.

tion again. Yours, respectfully,

My Dear Sir: Believing that the investigation of structural materials that the Government has been carrying on at St. Louis for the past two and a half years is of very great value to the engineering profession and to the community at large, I venture to ask you to use your influence toward the obtaining of an appropriation of $100,000 needed to continue this work at St. Louis under the direction of the United States Geological Survey.

Very respectfully,

W. H. Moore.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., February 22, 1907. Hon. Joseph T. Johnson, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Johnson: I note that no appropriation is recommended this year by the Appropriations Committee for the continuance of the investigation of structural materials which the Government has been conducting for the past two and a half years at St. Louis, Mo. An effort will certainly be made to secure sufficient funds to continue this most important work, and I do trust when the time comes you will do all you can to help.

It is difficult for one not actually engaged in construction to appreciate fully the importance of knowing all about the material which must be used in any work, and I shall only ask you to take my word for it that the engineering profession generally is very much at sea when it comes to knowing just how some of the most ordinary materials will behave under given conditions, and only so because the magnitude of the investigations necessary to illuminate these matters precludes their being undertaken by private enterprise.

Ultimately, I have no doubt, the Government will be liberal in such matters, and it would seem a pity, now the work has been begun, that it should be halted for lack of funds.

I think $100,000 was appropriated last year for this work, and I hope you will see your way clearly toward advocating a similar appropriation this year.

Yours, sincerely,

Dear Sir: Being a mechanical engineer and very much interested in all kinds of engineering work, I beg to call your kind attention to the appropriation of $250,000 included in the sundry civil bill for continuance of fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis for the past two years. This research has proven a most valuable one to the engineering profession, and I feel certain if discontinued will deprive not only the engineers but the entire country of data and information of great technical and practical value which can hardly be practically obtained elsewhere. I trust you will use your best endeavor in favor of this for its full amount, as mentioned, and greatly oblige, greatly oblige, Yours, very truly,

Toledo, Ohio, February 22, 1907.

Dear Sir: You are undoubtedly aware of the fact that the fuel supply of the world is somewhat limited and that the present method of utilizing fuel where it is to be converted into work is exceedingly wasteful. The experiments which have been carried on in the Government fuel-testing plant in St. Louis have been of enormous benefit to the entire country, in that they have shown the possibilities of using cheap fuels, which have hitherto been considered comparatively worthless, and have indicated means whereby the higher-grade fuels could be used to much better advantage. This work is of such great importance that it should be continued. It is a measure that does not affect any particular section of the country, and should receive the careful consideration and support of every legislator.

If you will give this matter your careful attention, you will undoubtedly conclude that funds should be provided as required for carrying on this work.

Thanking you in advance for your valued consideration, I am,

Dear Sir: I respectfully ask you to cooperate in securing an appropriation of $250,000 in the sundry civil bill for the continuation of the fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting in St. Louis for the past two and a half years. The results obtained in the past investigation are so valuable and the subject is of such importance that it seems extremely desirable that these investigations be continued until full knowledge has been obtained of the best and most economical manner of utilizing the fuels of this country. It is a subject not only of importance from engineering and scientific standpoints, but also a question of economics of the very highest order.

Yours, very truly,

DEAR SIR: I am this day in receipt of your circular letter relative to appropriation for continuing investigations into structural material at St. Louis. Your letter did not reach me in time to telegraph to my Representative, and I have therefore written to him and to one of my Senators, which will probably reach them as soon as a telegram now could. I trust your efforts to have reinserted an appropriation for the purpose named may be successful, but unfortunately the caliber and disposition of the Representatives of this State and this district in Congress are not such as to warrant any great hopes of exertion on their part in this matter.

Yours, truly,

CHARLES F. STOWELL.

ALBANY, N. Y., February 22, 1907.

Hon. George N. Southwick, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I am informed that the sundry civil bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee has cut out an appropriation of $100,000 asked for for continuing investigations of structural material, which has been in progress for some time at St. Louis.

The work which has heretofore been carried on by the Government in the above line is of the utmost importance and of incalculable value to the engineering profession and to the building trades. The subject has as yet by no means been exhausted, and the results of investigations still to be made promise even more important and valuable results than those already completed. This work is of such a character and magnitude that no private parties could perform it with anything like the completeness that has heretofore characterized it, and as a member of the profession most directly interested in this work i beg to protest against its discontinuance and to ask that you will use your influence to have inserted in the above bill an appropriation as asked for for the continuance of this work in the same manner and by the same force which has performed this work up to the present time.

This matter is of immense pecuniary interest to every part of the country, and the work that is being done is of great importance to all manufacturing and steam-power interests. I hope to see the item restored and that you will use your powerful interest to that end," etc.

New York, February 22, 1907.

My Dear Sir: The writer is presuming upon our acquaintance to ask your attention to a matter now pending before the House of Congress that is of great importance to the members of the mechanical engineering profession, namely, the question as to an appropriation for the continuance of fuel investigation that the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

It seems that there may be some opposition to the passing of this appropriation, and I want to express to you that it is the opinion of all mechanical engineers with whom I am in contact, and my fellow-members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, that it would be a great loss to the public in general to have this important and valuable investigation interrupted by a failure to give them sufficient money at this time to proceed.

Pray pardon me for calling your attention to this, but I am confident that it needs only to have your attention called to it for you to see the importance of the matter in question.

Very truly, yours,

CHAMBERSBURG, PA., February 22, 1907.

FEBRUARY 22, 1907.

DEAR SIE: You may be aware of the fact that the Government has been conducting fuel investigations at St. Louis for the past two years or more. The results of these investigations have been eagerly sought for by the engineering fraternities of this country; and when these investigations are completed, their results and deductions will be of inestimable value to the manufacturing industries of this country.

I note that the sundry civil bill, as it came out of the Appropriation Committee of the House, contained no provision for the continuance of these investigations. I carnestly entreat you to see that the appropriation for this work is made this year, because from the reports made to the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, of which the writer happens to be a member, the investigations are at a stage where it is essential that they should continue, or else lose the result of a great deal of work and time.

I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours,

SCRANTON, PA., February 22, 1907.

Dear Sir: For the past two and one-half years there has been conducted in St. Louis an investigation of structural materials under an appropriation of $100,000 from Congress. The work is not finished, and engineers, realizing its importance, wish to see it continued; so they ask Congress to include $100,000 for this purpose in the sundry civil bill now before Congress. I write you both as a civil engineer and a friend to do what you consistently can to help this good work. W. H. WILEY, M. C., is an old friend of mine and much interested in this matter; so if you fall into our notions, you can confer with him.

My Dear Mr. Wiley: I have noticed in the press dispatches that in the sundry civil bill, just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, no appropriation is recommended for the continuance of fuel investigations, which were taken up at the St. Louis exposition and have been carried on for the past two and one-half years.

As a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, I am deeply interested in these investigations, and I am sure that nothing has been done by the Government for a long time that has as much practical value as this work, and I consider that it has been conducted in the most economical manner. The appropriation is comparatively small compared to the great good it can do the manufacturing interests of the country. There is so much money spent, I regret to say, by our Government for things that are really of very little good, it does seem too bad to see an appropriation for a work of real value curtailed. I hope, therefore, that you will use your influence to try and have this appropriation go through.

The work is of such nature that it is not likely it will be undertaken by any private firm or individual.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I have followed with great interest the fuel-investigation work which the Government conducted at St. Louis, and I note with great concern the failure to appropriate more money to continue this important and most valuable work. I feel that this can only be due to an oversight on the part of the Appropriations Committee, as the value of this work must be patent to anyone.

I feel that you will be especially interested in having these investigations continued because of their direct value to this State. The great heaps of now useless refuse piled up at our coal mines will become immense sources of stored-up energy, available by being converted into producer of gas and power. How great and widespread the results the future may bring we can little guess.

Maryland, with her immense coal fields and rapidly increasing manufacturing interests, will be greatly benefited.

For these reasons I would urge you to use your influence in having the needed appropriation of $250,000 for the ensuing year included in the sundry civil bill.

Very truly, yours,

Dear Sir: I duly received your favor of February 20, with regard to the failure of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives to include a recommended appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the continuance of fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis within the past two and one-half years. I immediately wired the Hon. George A. Pearre, House of Representatives, and Hon. Isidor Rayner, United States Senate, and confirmed same by letter, as per copies herewith inclosed.

Personally and as a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers I am greatly interested in this work and would greatly regret the failure of our National Congress to make suitable provision and appropriation for continuing the work during the next year.

Further, I would like to be in a position to follow up more closely the results of these tests than I have been able to do in the past, and if you can supply me with copies of such reports as have been made thus far or can give me such information as would enable me to secure such data, I would greatly appreciate same. As I have stated in the inclosed, I am very much interested in this work and believe that its results, if continued, will be highly beneficial.

My Dear Major Wiley: Replying to your favor of February 20, I will say that I have already written each of our Senators, as also each member of our delegation in Congress, concerning the desirability of restoring the appropriations to last year's basis for the United States Geological Survey, and have received answers from all of them that they will cooperate heartily in any such movement. Hence you can feel free to enlist all of our five Representatives—Davis, Dovener, Gaines, Hughes, and Woodnard; and should the effort fall in the House, I have assurances from both Senators Elkins and Scott that they will do all possible in the Senate. Hence our West Virginia delegation in both Houses is solid for restoring the items for the Geological Survey to the basis of last year's appropriations.

State Geologist.

FEBRUARY 22, 1907.

Hon. P. C. Knox,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: In the public press I notice that the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives has reported the sundry civil bill without it containing the requested $100,000 item for the continuance of the investigation of structural materials which the Government has been conducting at the St. Louis laboratory during the past two and a half years on this and kindred subjects. Last year Congress appropriated a similar sum for this work, and another appropriation of $100,000 has been asked for to continue this work during 1907.

Congress appropriated a similar sum for this work, and another appropriation of $100,000 has been asked for to continue this work during 1907.

In view of the importance of this work and the fact that a number of new investigations, especially relative to concrete and reenforced concrete, have only begun recently, under the supervision of committees of engineers representing the isthmian canal, the Reclamation Service, the American Society of Civil Engineers, American Society for Testing Materials, and other similar societies, a discontinuance of the work at the laboratory, especially at this time, would amount to a calamity to the country, inasmuch as an enormous amount of concrete and reenforced concrete construction is now going on in the country, much of which is recklessly designed and constructed, as frequent failures, reported in the daily press, bear witness.

This is a subject of so much importance to the people and humanity that the European governments have and are spending large fixed sums on its investigation and with the view to laying down scientific laws and rules for its use in construction. Especially is that the case in Germany and France.

Taking a keen interest in this matter, so important to the profession of which I have the honor to be a member. I venture to address you personally, requesting your kind consideration of the matter, and, if possible, to have this item included in the sundry civil bill, which bill, I understand, is liable to come before the Senate in a few days.

It may be of interest to you to know that I have also taken the liberty to communicate with Congressmen John Dalzell, James F. Burre, and Andrew P. Barchfeld, but, owing to the urgency of the case, it was necessary for me to wire them, which, of course, did not permit extensive remarks on the subject. I would, therefore, in addition to thanking you in advance for your courtesy in this matter, should you have an opportunity to do so, when meeting any of the above gentlemen in the next few days.

With much respect, I

Hon. John Lame,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.

Dear Sir: I to-day telegraphed you as per inclosed confirmation, having just heard that no appropriation is recommended for the purpose. These investigations conducted by the Government are of enormous value to the engineering profession, and mean not only great economy in building in the future, but bear very direct and tangible relation to the avoidance of accidents and loss of life and property. I hope you will give this matter your careful thought.

Yours, very truly,

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., February 22, 1967.

Dear Sir: As an engineer I am much interested in seeing the Government continue the investigation of structural materials it has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

Considering the value and importance of the results of this work, not only to the engineering profession, but directly and indirectly to the whole people, I trust you will feel that an appropriation for this work should be included in the sundry civil bill and, in accordance, vote that such an appropriation be made.

Thanking you for your attention to this matter, I am,

My Dear Senator: My attention has been called to the fact that Congress is likely to cut out for this coming year an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the continuance of fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

I wish to enter my protest against such a course on the part of Con-

My Dear Senator: I write to call your attention to the great importance of having inserted in the sundry civil bill the $100,000 appropriation for continuing the tests of structural materials at St. Louis, which highly valuable and important work the Government is already engaged in.

This testing has, I believe, been going on for some two or three years past, to the great benefit of engineering science and the public in general. Few subjects can be of more importance than ascertaining the strengths and other qualities of the materials used in constructive work that their efficiency and safety may be insured.

With kind regards I am,
Faithfully, yours,

Hon. Isidor Rayner,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: My attention has been called to the fact that in the sundry civil bill just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives no provision has been recommended to further the fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

As this is a matter of vast importance, I would most respectfully request that you use your influence, if you can consistently, to secure the appropriation asked for—$250,000—to continue these tests during the next fiscal year.

FEBRUARY 22, 1907.

My Dear Senator: I am writing you to-day to urge that the full appropriation of $100,000 be made in the sundry civil bill to continue structural-materials investigations by the Geographical Survey at St. Louis, and to protest against the transference of this work to the Army arsenal near Boston.

Having been connected for many years with the developement of the cement industry and the introduction of concrete work in buildings, bridges, etc., I have been associated with the various engineering committees in the preparation of standards for concrete and reenforced concrete. The Government, through the Geological Survey and the advisory board of fuels and structural materials, of which I am a member, appropriated last year $100,000 for the work of the most satisfactory and uniform character in the way of experiments with cements, concretes, concrete beams, etc., which are to be acted upon by the joint committees of the engineering societies in the preparation of specifications. This work has gone so far and is so important and has been done in such a way that to change the location of this work from the present laboratory to the Army arsenal near Boston, as proposed, would involve a total loss of the especifications a year backward. For this reason I urge the retention of the appropriation of $100,000 in the sundry civil bill for the laboratory at St. Louis, believing that the work when completed there will be most material to the welfare of solid and fireproof construction in the United States.

Dear Sir: For the past two years experiments have been carried on by the Government for the purpose of investigating coals in the country, giving attention principally to the coals of the West and Southwest, all of which was proper, as these coals need to be studied in order that they may be brought to the attention of consumers and their value made use of.

I am going to ask you to use your influence with the New Jersey Congressmen to see that the appropriation is continued for the present year.

Congressmen to see that the appropriate year.

We can grow wheat each year, so that economy in consumption is but a small matter when compared with the consumption of coal, which can never be replaced.

Therefore, as this subject needs great attention, the small appropriation which the Government has given to it is most amply justified. Hence I am going to ask you to speak to the Jersey Senators on the question, so as to be certain that they fully understand it.

Yours, truly,

FEBRUARY 22, 1907.

George D. McCreary,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: There has been carried on by the Government a most interesting work in connection with the investigation of the different coals in the United States.

I see that the appropriation for that purpose is likely to be discontinued. This will certainly be such a great misfortune that I trust you can make it clear to the Philadelphia and other Congressmen that anything that can be done to help the work of investigating coals will be a great thing for the State.

All Pennsylvanians should take great interest in the subject.
I do not know who has the matter in charge, but it certainly should not be lost sight of and the work allowed to cease.

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Sir: I understand that no appropriation has been made this year for carrying on the investigations which are being made by the Government to determine the strength of structural materials.

This is a line of investigation which is of vital importance to engineers, and to railroad men especially, and it seems to me that it is entirely proper for the Government to undertake the investigation so as to avoid the duplication which would follow if the investigation is made by individual companies and at the same time will guarantee a more thorough dissemination of the knowledge gained.

I hope that you can see your way to support any movement which may be made to appropriate funds for carrying on this most important work.

Dear Sir: I thank you for your letter of the 20th instant, calling attention to the fact that the sundry civil bill, just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, does not include any appropriation for the continuance of the investigation of structural materials which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

In this connection I beg to transmit herewith copies of a letter that I have addressed to the Hon. John W. Daniel, the Hon. Carter Glass, and the Hon. Henry Bannon on this subject.

Dear Sir: My attention is called to the fact that the sundry civil bill, just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, does not include any appropriation for the continuance of the investigation of structural materials which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and a half years, and in which members of the American Society of Civil Engineers and the members of the American Railway Engineering and Maintenance of Way Association are very much interested.

Last year Congress appropriated $100,000 for this work, and I understand that another $100,000 is necessary for continuing this work during the year beginning July 1, 1907. This is a class of work that can be carried on satisfactorily and in a conclusive manner only under the auspices of the United States Government. I trust, therefore, you will try and secure the appropriation necessary for continuing the work.

Dear Sir: We have noted by press dispatches that the sundry civil bill, recently reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, does not recommend an appropriation for the continuance of the fuel investigation which the Government has been conducting for the past two or three years at St. Louis. The writer has a copy of these reports so far as they have been published, and knows personally that these investigations are of very great benefit.

I understand that $250,000 was appropriated for this work during this year, and a like amount should be appropriated for this next fiscal

Hon. PHILANDER C. KNOX, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It has recently come to my attention that Congress is apparently intending to omit from the sundry civil bill the appropriation of $100,000 for continuing the investigations of structural materials which have been carried on for the past few years in St. Louis.

In view of the importance of these investigations, especially those relative to concrete and reenforced concrete, I would respectfully urge upon you the importance, to the engineering profession in particular and the public in general, of having these investigations continued. Investigations of this character, in order to be of value, must cover a wide field and extend over a period of time and consequently involve an outlay beyond that possible for any individual engineer. It would, therefore, seem fitting that the Government should continue such a work as this, and as one member of the engineering profession I hope that this omission from the bill may be remedled.

I also have noticed in some of the papers that the work which has been carried on by the hydrographic division of the United States Geological Survey for some years past in investigating the water resources and compiling statistics of stream flow in the different parts of the United States is in danger of curtailment for lack of funds. Investigations of this character, to be of value, must be continuous over a series of years, and the discontinuance of operations at any river station for a few years, even if the work were later resumed, would seriously vitiate the value of the work was a whole. The reason for this statement is that a series of exceptionally dry or exceptionally wet years might occur during the time that work was discontinued, which would consequently fall to appear in the records, and which would, nevertheless, be of importance in designing either for water-power or water-supply improvements.

The water resources of Pennsylvania are a valuable source of wealth which has been developed to a very limited degree, and such investigations as the Government has been making are necessary if they are to be developed to any such extent as is desirable.

In comparison with our mineral resources the value of our water power has been very largely overlooked, but the value exists and is capable of development nevertheless, and I trust that this

Dear Sir: When the sundry civil bill was reported by the Appropriation Committee of the House of Representatives, the desired appropriation for continuing the fuel investigations which the Government started at the St. Louis exhibition was conspicuous by its absence.

As a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, this is a matter of vital interest to me and to thousands of engineers to a greater or less degree. We Americans have a tendency which is entirely too practical, and it is a matter of serious regret that more information of the nature of this which is being sought by the fuel investigations is not available to the American engineering profession, and it would be a great calamity if these investigations were allowed to be dropped. I therefore take the liberty to beg of you, as Representative from this district, to give the matter urgent attention and endeavor to have the required appropriation inserted in this bill.

My Dear Senator: I understand from press dispatches that the sundry civil bill just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives makes no provision for the continuance of the investigation of structural materials, which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two years.

The continuance of this investigation as started is of the greatest importance to owners of buildings, engineers, and contractors, particularly as it embraces the question of reenforced concrete construction, which recently has come into prominence and is being used as a substitution for steel construction.

Everyone who has had experience with reenforced concrete construction realizes that its use is still in its infancy, and that there is a great deal still to be learned which can only be reported through physical tests on completed work.

I wish to urge upon you the desirability, and almost necessity, of appropriating the full amount of $100,000 for this purpose, and that the investigation should be continued under the Geological Survey at St. Louis, where it was started.

With the sincere hope that you will interest yourself in this matter and aid to secure the passage of the above measure, I beg to remain Yours, truly,

Having been connected for many years with the development of the cement industry and the introduction of concrete work for buildings, bridges, etc., I have been associated with the various engineering committees in the preparation of standards for concrete and reenforced concrete. The Government, through the Geological Survey and the Advisory Board on Fuels and Structural Materials, of which I am a member, appropriated $100,000 last year for the work of the laboratory at St. Louis. House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen: I address you appealing for your favorable consideration of an appropriation for $100,000 to continue the work of investigation of structural materials now being conducted by the Government at St. Louis. A great industry is now being developed in this country. There are no fixed laws upon the subject, neither is there any official data. Municipalities throughout the country are legislating upon the subject, but each one is acting independent of the other because no uniform standards have been arrived at. It is therefore of the utmost importance for the promotion of uniform and wise legislation for the work begun at St. Louis to continue to completion. I appeal to you on behalf of the association indicated by this letterhead, as well as personally. I am interested in the business of reenforced concrete and have been for the past twelve years. The greatest drawback to this business is lack of official and scientific data. This can only be acquired by such a means as is now being employed at St. Louis. Continue the good work!

Very truly, yours,

MERRILL WATSON.

MY DEAR MR. COOPER: Our attention has just been called to the fact that in the sundry civil bill reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives no appropriation was recommended for the continuance of the fuel investigation which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-ment has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and obehalf years.

I believe it would be very much to the advantage of the public generally, especially those people living in the coal-mining districts of Pennsylvania, to have these investigations continued, and we are therefore writing you requesting that you use your influence to the end of securing an appropriation of at least $250,000 in the sundry civil bill to continue these investigations on the fuel problem.

Thanking you in advance for anything you can do toward this end,
Yours, very truly,

Dear Sir: I have just received your valued favor of the 20th, and most heartily approve your efforts to have the appropriation for the continuance of fuel investigations included in the sundry civil bill. I inclose herewith a copy of the letter which I am sending to Senator Elkins, and I have also written a similar letter to our Representative for this district, Congressman Thomas B. Davis.

Dear Sir: I have learned from press dispatches and other sources that no appropriation has been recommended for the continuance of the fuel investigation in the sundry civil bill, which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis for the past two or three years. This work I consider of the highest importance to West Virginia, and as our legislature makes no provision for the testing of our coals, either as boiler fuels or for their gas-making properties, every possible effort should be made to have the work continued by the National Government. The work already done at St. Louis has aroused the interest of the engineers all over the country to this long-neglected field of investigation, and while much good has already resulted, a number of investigations have only really been begun, and their discontinuance at this time would certainly be a misfortune to our State.

The published results have included some of the most helpful data that our literature affords in bringing before our classes at this institution the great engineering problems which our students, especially those locating in West Virginia, will have to face.

In view of the importance of this appropriation, I trust you will use your influence to have it continued.

Very truly, yours,

C. R. Jones,

Dear Sir: Your letter of yesterday was duly received, and in compliance with your request I have written to Mr. Burton and to Senator Dick in regard to the fuel-testing plant.

I inclose copy of letter to Senator Dick; the other letter was practically identical with this. I thank you for calling my attention to the matter and for giving me an opportunity to speak a word in favor of the testing plant.

Hon. Charles Dick, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: If press reports are to be deleved, the sundry civil bill as reported to the House does not contain any provision for the continuance of the work at the fuel-testing plant at St. Louis.

I have been familiar with the work which has been carried on there the past two years and know the men who are in charge and I should consider it a serious blow to scientific inquiry and to economic investigation if the work should now be discontinued. The problems of fuel supply and consumption are becoming every year more important, and the experiments which are now under way at the testing plant will help in a large measure to solve these problems. The investigations now being made in regard to gas producers and to the use of alcohol for power purposes are instances in point. I trust you may find means to further the introduction and support of an amendment providing for the continuance of this important work.

Dear Sin: I wish to call your attention to my interest as an engineer in the continuation of the work that the Geological Survey has been carrying on at St. Louis, Mo., during the last two or three years in the way of testing fuel. Appropriations have been made from time to time to cover the expense of this work, and noting that it is about time for action to again be taken regarding the matter I trust you will appreciate its importance and be led to do what you can to continue this original and highly important line of investigation.

Dear Sir: As a soda fiber manufacturer and, since 1885, a member of the Society of Mechanical Engineers, I realize the great importance of continuing the fuel investigation the Government has been conducting for two and a half years.

New investigations have been begun and not finished. The combustion of coal is not as well understood as it ought to be, and any improvement will be readily adopted and result in great saving. We are working too much in the dark. No individual or firm can afford to make exhaustive experiments to know all there is to be known.

I hope you will feel like urging and voting for the $250,000 appropriation asked for for this purpose.

Yours, truly,

Dear Sir: As engineers and members of the American Society of Civil Engineers we desire to call your attention to the importance of appropriating $100,000 in the sundry civil bill to continue the investigation of structural materials which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years.

This work, especially in regard to reenforced concrete, is of great importance to the country at the present time on account of the lack of exact information on this class of structural material, as exemplified by the partial failure of many such structures each month.

We believe that this work should be continued at St. Louis and not transfered to the Army arsenal near Boston and respectfully request that you use your influence for that end.

Thanking you for your consideration of this matter, we are,

These have been invaluable to the industrial interests of this country, and I would like to bear testimony to its personal value to the writer not only in his engineering work, but more particularly in his teaching. He has been enabled to place a larger amount and more reliable information, obtained from these reports, in the hands of his students.

Dear Sir: I note from press dispatches that in the sundry civil bill, just reported by the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, there is not any appropriation recommended for the continuance of the investigation of the structural materials which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two years. If you have not had time to look into the matter, may I respectfully ask if you will do so, as the work at St. Louis has been of great benefit to the engineers of this country, and at this time, when reenforced concrete construction is being so extensively used, not only in the country, but all over the world, and there is so much practical information that should be learned regarding the subject, it will be most unfortunate, I think, if this appropriation is not made, not only for the engineering profession, but for the building interests and the general public.

Dear Sir: I write to ask your assistance to have passed an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for continuing structural materials investigation by the Geological Survey at St. Louis, Mo. The amount asked is $100,000. The investigations are of such an enormous importance in their results to the whole nation—both in money and in life protection—that they ought to be continued and completed where they have so well been begun.

We civil engineers do not ask for many favors, so I hope that, too, will be a reason to assist us in this humble and unselfish request as here presented to your valuable consideration and action.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The American Society of Mechanical Engineers, who represent, as you are aware, one of the most important lines of business so far as the material advancement of this country goes, have very strongly advocated the continuation of the investigations which were begun at St. Louis two and a half years ago for the purpose of investigation of the fuel propositions.

No more important subject, so far as the welfare of this country goes, is before Congress, and yet I note that in the last sundry civil bill the appropriations for the continuation of this work have been left out.

The recent remarks made by Admiral Evans indicates the desirability of the conservation of the coal which we have available at the present time. The result of these investigations, when properly known, will undoubtedly save more coal in our power plants than would be required by the United States fleets when needed for the conditions certified by Admiral Evans.

Speaking for myself, and, I believe, for very many others of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, I hope that you will do what you can to see that appropriations are made for the continuation of these investigations.

I would say that, if you are not possessed of the information, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers is composed of 3,000 of the mechanical heads or managing heads of the principal manufacturing organizations of this country.

Dear Sir: I understand that the sundry civil bill has been reported with no appropriation for the continuance of the tests of structural materials, and I have just wired you as per confirmation of telegram inclosed.

It is very essential for the restaurance of the structural materials.

inclosed.

It is very essential for the safety of reenforced concrete construction that definite rules for computation be recommended at the earliest possible moment. This can not be done without tests, and these tests can not be made by private parties; in the first place, because of the expense, and in the second place, because it would be almost inevitable that the conclusions would be biased, or at least that the public would not place faith in them.

The tests are now well under way at St. Louis, but from the nature of the material it is impossible to obtain final results in a few months' time.

time.

The joint committee of the National Engineering Societies has been holding frequent meetings during the past year, with no remuneration, the members paying their own expenses to the place of meeting. In addition the committee has consumed a great deal of valuable time in analyzing the results of tests already made, so as to eliminate all unnecessary work by the Government For example, I, as chairman of the committee on aggregates, have presented a forty-five-page report on the present status of this branch of the subject.

I trust that you will appreciate the importance of doing anything in your power which will further the insertion of this appropriation of $100,000 for structural materials investigation.

The suggestion has been made that these tests be transferred to the Watertown Arsenal. In my opinion the arsenal might well handle a portion of the tests, especially the column tests; but the men at St. Louis are organized for the work of making and breaking beams, and it seems to me that it would be unwise to change the present organization.

"Kindly use influence to have full appropriation, $100,000, in sundry civil bill for investigation structural materials at St. Louis passed."

As you are perhaps aware, this investigation has been in progress for the past two or three years, and I consider it a matter of vital importance, not only to us engineers, but also to every one interested in the economical and safe construction of buildings and structures of all kinds, that this important work should not be held up at this time for lack of a small appropriation. And I would urge that this work be continued, as at present, at St. Louis, as I believe that better results will be obtained there than by making the proposed change to the Army arsenal near Boston.

My Dear Mr. Burron: If I read the reports in the newspapers aright, I gather that in the sundry civil bill no funds are provided for continuing the fuel investigations the Government has been carrying on at St. Louis during the past two or more years.

As a manufacturer and mechanical engineer, I trust the announcement is incorrect, for I am sure that the results already accomplished along this line of investigation is of great importance to the industrial and domestic departments of our country. I have read with interest the reports already published and the valuable information given relative to heat units of the various coals, to say nothing of the many other characteristics mentioned appertaining to our coal measures, which I consider of inestimable value to the people.

I hope you are in favor of having the Government go on with this work and can lend your influence, if need be, toward securing funds to proceed with the investigations. I believe in this as much as I did in granite for our post-office.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I note in the daily papers that in the sundry civil bill no appropriation is recommended for the continuance of fuel investigations which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two and one-half years, and which the interests which I represent believe have been and will be of very great value to the metal-lurgical industries and to the country at large, provided they can be carried through to the logical and proper conclusion. Congress has appropriated a good deal of money in past years to this work and much of this money will be lost, or only of partial value, unless the work that has been undertaken is carried to a finish.

I trust that you will see your way clear to do what you can to insure the recommendation of suitable appropriation for the continuance of this work, which I understand has been estimated at $250,000, the same amount as appropriated last year. If there is any down on your part as to the wisdom of the expenditure, I trust that an inquiry will be made among those naturally interested in the results of the work before the bill is permitted to go through without an appropriation for this cause, the true value of which is just beginning to be fully realized by the users of fuel for industrial and metallurgical purposes in this country.

relative to the appropriation for investigations upon structural material by the United States Geological Survey. I have this morning both telegraphed and written to the Hons. Julius Cæsar Burrows, William Alden Smith, Charles E. Townsend, Joseph W. Fordner, and Edwin Denby regarding the matter, and inclose you a sample letter which will give you all necessary information.

Very truly, yours,

FEBRUARY 23, 1907.

Hon. William Alden Smith,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Having learned that the sundry civil bill includes no appropriation for continuing the very valuable investigations of the United States Geological Survey upon structural materials, I took the liberty this morning of wiring you as follows:

"Very important to engineering profession that sundry civil bill provide funds for continuance of structural-material investigations by Geological Survey at St. Louis. Hope you can assist in this matter."

The work at St. Louis is just coming to a stage where the results obtained promise to be of exceptional value, not only to the engineering profession at large, but particularly to those engaged in the construction of the Panama Canal. It is unnecessary for me to call to your attention the wonderful utilization of reenforced concrete in building structures of all kinds and the interest of the State of Michigan in this material, nor should it be necessary for me to more than refer to the numerous instances of failure of such constructions to demonstrate to your mind the necessity of prompt and carefully conducted investigations upon this material.

I sincerely hope, as do a very large number of your constituents who are members of my profession or closely allied with it, that you may see your way clear to assist in the continuance of this work under the present management with an ample appropriation.

Very truly, yours,

Professor of Civil Engineering,

Professor of Civil Engineering, University of Michigan.

TOLEDO; OHIO, February 23, 1907.

Hon. WILLIAM H. WILEY, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: As requested in yours of February 20, I inclose copy of letter mailed to-day to Hon. J. H. Southard, Member of Congress from this district.

Yours, truly,

C. Buxton,

Member American Society of Civil Engineers.

Toledo, Ohio, February 23, 1907.

Hon. J. H. Southard, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: You no doubt are familiar with the fact that the Government has for the past two and one-half years been conducting an investigation of structural materials at St. Louis, for which an appropriation of $100,000 was granted last year. This fund has been nearly exhausted, and unless another appropriation is made the work must cease, which would be unfortunate in the extreme. The American Society of Civil Engineers, realizing the importance of this work, is very desirous of having it continued at least until a number of problems, and especially those relating to concrete and reenforced concrete, which at this time is attracting so much attention throughout the country, can be definitely solved. In view of this situation, I would respectfully ask you to use your influence to have incorporated in the sundry civil bill an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of continuing these investigations.

Yours, very truly,

Member American Society of Civil Engineers.

AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY, February 23, 1907.

Hon. Jas. H. SOUTHARD, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I have been very much interested in the work which has been carried on at St. Louis during the past two or three years covering investigation of structural materials. This seems to me to be a work which can not well be carried on to good advantage by private parties, and one which, it seems to me, the Government can well afford to keep up.

to keep up.

An appropriation of $100,000 for this work is wanted for the year beginning July 1, 1907. Some good work has been done in this connection, which will have to be stopped unless this appropriation is made. I would urge that this appropriation be included in the sundry civil bill now before your body.

Recent investigation relative to concrete and reenforced concrete have only been begun, and it is important that if anything is to come of the money already spent that it be kept up until these investigations are finished. The sum wanted is so small and the results of the investigation so important and useful to all the people that it seems unwise to stop the work now for failure to appropriate the necessary

Trusting that you will investigate this matter carefully and aid what you can to keep up this appropriation for this worthy purpose, I am,

Yours, respectfully, M. J. RIGGS, Member American Association Civil Engineers.

WILLIAM H. WILEY, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 20th instant is at hand. I saw Mr. Warrington, chief engineer of our Cincinnati Southern, who sent dispatches to both Mr. Longworth and Senator Foraker, and I have written to each of them. I inclose copy of the letter to Mr. Longworth, the one to Senator Foraker being a copy, except as to the address and the closing paragraph. All of these papers will be in Washington by Monday next, and I hope will help in securing the appropriation.

Thus far I have seen little that has been published regarding the work which has been done at St. Louis, but the investigations are being made in a field in which every practicing engineer feels that he needs basic facts, and if this investigation produces none, then it should not be continued.

Very truly, yours,

M. D. Burke.

NICHOLAS LONGWOETH, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: At the St. Louis Exposition the American Society of Civil Engineers conducted a "world's congress of engineering." At the close of the exposition it was decided to ultilize the laboratories and machinery there assembled for testing and studying the physical properties of certain materials of construction about which further knowledge is desired. The United States Government made an appropriation for the purpose, and last year Congress appropriated $100,000 for continuing the work during the year ending July 1, 1907. Very interesting results have been obtained. Only recently investigations have been commenced regarding concrete and reenforced concrete by engineers representing the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Isthmian Canal Commission, and the Reclamation Service, which studies can not be completed by the coming July. It was sought to secure an appropriation of $100,000 in the sundry civil bill, providing for the continuance of the work for another year. I notice that this item has not been included in the sundry civil bill, and I take the liberty of writing to urge you to endeavor to have the appropriation included, as the stopping of the work at this time would be very wasteful and highly detrimental to all building industries.

It is plain that the physical properties of materials of construction and their combinations must be known before they can be either intelligently, economically, or safely used, and, with the laboratories and testing machines now installed at St. Louis, knowledge of great value can be added to that which now exists in this comparatively new field, where it is so much needed.

Our Government is not so liberal in these investigations as is that of either France or Germany, but we can not appropriate their work because of the difference in material and the time which must elapse before their results are available.

I think that Mr. Goebell will be glad to aid. I will also write Senator Fora

Dear Sir: My attention has just been called to the fact that no appropriation has been recommended in the sundry civil bill for continuance of investigations of structural materials which the Government has been conducting at St. Louis during the past two years or so.

The investigations which the Government are carrying on are of the greatest importance, and I would urge you to support an appropriation of not less than $100,000 for the continuance of this work for the year beginning July 1, 1907.

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been much interested in the investigation of structural material which the Government has been testing for the past two years at St. Louis, and as an engineer and a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers I hope Congress will authorize a continuation of this work for the year beginning July 1, 1907, as a discontinuance of these investigations would seem like throwing away a great deal of the work done.

Anything you can do in this matter will be appreciated by the undersigned, a resident of Cincinnati.

Dear Sir: Replying to your favor of the 20th, we have written to our Representative in Congress, Mr. George M. Southwick, urging him to work for an appropriation for the continuation of fuel investigations at St. Louis.

The writer would be greatly interested in getting a copy of the report of these fuel investigations already published and have his name placed on the mailing list for any new reports to be issued, and trust you can arrange this.

you can arrange this. Yours, truly,

My Dear Mr. Wiley: Yours of the 20th did not reach me until yesterday morning. I had to write the two letters myself Sunday, one to John Dalzell, of the House, and one to Senator P. C. Knox, of the Senate. They are both, practically speaking, a copy of the inclosed. If I had more time, could have given them a stronger letter. You will please excuse the pencil, but the fact is my den is so cold to-day that it is very difficult for me to write with a pen. Hoping what I have done will be of service to the cause, as ever,

Yours, sincerely,

[Copy of the letter sent to KNOX and DALZELL.]

I have noticed in the press dispatches that the sundry civil bill just reported to the House contains no appropriation for continuance of the investigation of structural material or for fuel investigation, which the Government has been making. In regard to the former, it is of the utmost importance to the civil engineers that it should be continued, at least until the most important problems have been solved, and they are many. In regard to the latter, it is as important to the mechanical engineer as the former is to the civil. In fact, every engineer that has to do with coal, iron, or steel, whether he is a civil, mechanical, mining, or electrical, are most vitally interested in both problems, and beyond this the people of the whole country should be equally interested with the engineer. A want of proper knowledge of material may cause failure, consequently loss of life and untold misery, which we have almost daily evidence of, and I ask that you will do all you can to have the experiments continued for the welfare of the people.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As a member of the Convent.

As a member of the Committee on Public Mr. BARTHOLDT. Buildings and Grounds, I have become deeply impressed with the importance of the tests of structural material. I have been reliably informed by officers of the Government, not of the Geological Survey, that these tests will result in great economy to the Government; that in connection with the erection of the new public buildings there is in the last bill passed by this House about $1,000,000 that can be saved to the Government as a result of the work already accomplished by these tests, especially with regard to reenforced concrete, and I believe that if this investigation is continued the Government will save more than a million dollars every year, not for private parties, but for itself, in construction work, especially since we are now undertaking the construction of the Panama Canal, and large works of construction are being constantly carried on.

Mr. MADDEN. How would it affect the work in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal?

Mr. LITTAUER. I would like to know where this million dollars is saved that has already been indicated.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It will be saved in securing better buildings for the Government for less money.

Mr. LITTAUER. What particular building? If this million dollars is to be saved, and this estimate has been made, what matching building is to have a certain amount of saving in it?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is very simple. In other words, if we appropriate $100,000 for a new post-office building, the Government will secure for that amount of money a better building than it would secure if these tests had not been made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can not that test be made at the Watertown Arsenal?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir. I will answer the question by saying that the tests at the Watertown Arsenal are tests of ordnance material, mainly metals.

The gentleman does not want to make a mis-Mr. TAWNEY. statement of facts here. I want to correct him. The report

Respecting the industrial tests now under investigation—ingot steel and forgings therefrom, cement, and concrete—special mention will be made of the latter group.

Then he goes on to enumerate the number of tests-2,702 public tests that he made in the last year, outside of the ordnance of the War Department.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. My information, which is reliable, is to the effect that the machines at Watertown are not adapted for tests of structural material at all, but adapted to tests of metals or ordnance material, as I said before. As to the work being done in the laboratory of the Supervising Architect, that office has not the necessary appliances. In other words, if you vote down this amendment you simply discontinue all these im-portant and most valuable tests. They will not be made at Watertown and they will not be made by the Supervising Architect.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman tell me whether they will be made at St. Louis or at the Jamestown Exposition?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. They will be made at St. Louis, if I have anything to do with it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman knows very well that it is to be moved to Jamestown.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Chairman, to run my chances as to whether they are to be made in St. Louis or not. Even if that plant were temporarily to be moved from St. Louis to Jamestown, I would still be in favor of this investigation being continued. [Applause.]
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from St. Louis yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If he will be brief.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, will this additional appropriation elaborate the possibility of this machinery doing this, that, or the other-something that it is doing now?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of increasing the appropriation to $150,000. I am for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is it that the machinery does not do that the gentleman wants done?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. All the machinery for these tests has already been acquired. That plant occupies three buildings at St. Louis, and it occupies an acre and a half of ground, and they are ready to make all kinds of tests with the machinery now on and. This will not cost any additional amount of money. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have all kinds of machinery at Watertown for testing cement, mortars, and concrete, plain and reenforced, and building material of all sorts.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to impress upon the minds of the Members the advantage to the Government itself in having these tests continued.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for the last five minutes

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there are two objections only that I have heard made to this appropriation. They were made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. that there is a duplication of work, and the other is that the work is done for private individuals. I want to say that neither one of these statements is in accordance with what are really the facts. There is no duplication of work. I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman, that I am not complaining or finding fault with the experiments that are performed at the Watertown station. They do a class of work there that is highly beneficial, wherein the money expended in behalf of the United States is well and economically expended.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. By whom?

Mr. NORRIS. But this particular item is for a different purpose entirely. This work has been under the charge of an advisory board, in which there is one engineer from the Isthmian Canal Commission, two from the War Department, two from the Navy Department, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and the chief engineer of the Reclamation Service. They are experimenting with the actual conditions as they are found to exist in different parts of the country in the struction of buildings and dams in which the Government is interested.

Now, then, at Watertown they perform a different kind of operiments. But this appropriation is for the purpose of enexperiments. abling the Geological Department to go out into the field where we are going to build buildings, construct dams, etc., to make examination of the sands, stone, gravels, clays, and other materials for cement, etc., found in the vicinity of such governmental undertaking in order that such work may be performed economically and in such a way that it will last and be permanent and substantial.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment. I only have a short time. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. NORRIS. Not at the present time.

In the next place, we are experimenting in the cement work in connection with the Panama Canal, where it is estimated we are going to build locks and dams that will cost $40,000,000. We want to build for all time. This board has been experimenting and will continue to experiment as to the best materials and the proper proportion in which they should be used. There is some material that is to be used that will be exposed to the atmosphere, some to fresh water, and others to salt water. takes time to experiment; and they are taking the time and experimenting with it and trying it under all conditions.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now will the gentleman allow me? Mr. NORRIS. Just a moment. I want to answer the other objection the gentleman has made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated it is done for private parties only. I want to say that the Government of the United States is the greatest builder in this country. It is constructing more buildings and more improvements than any individual.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?
Mr. NORRIS. After a while, if I have time.
Mr. TAWNEY. I want to correct a statement made by the

Mr. NORRIS. I want to finish what I have to say. If I have time, I will yield later.

They go on experimenting in different kinds of building materials. Incidentally the public gets the benefit of any experiments they perform. While the Government is making experiments in its own materials, to be used upon its own buildings, its own dams and improvements, everybody gets the benefit of the experiment, and the people generally receive the benefit that the Government has brought about in the experiments with its own property under the provisions of this law. We not only get better Government work on public undertakings, but all the people can take advantage of the improvements made possible by the governmental experiments. Now, the gentleman says this is done for private individuals. Why, the law, this very amendment, provides that it can not be done for private individuals. This very amendment provides that the experiments will be made upon property belonging to the United States.

This supervising board that I have referred to on June 2, 1906, made a report to the President in reference to the work that is being done by this Department, in which they say:

that is being done by this Department, in which they say:

When it is remembered that the yearly losses from fire in the United States aggregate $2.30 per capita, as compared to 33 cents per capita in European countries; that the fire losses in the United States during the past ten years have aggregated not less that $1,250,000,000; that the people expend annually in building and construction work $1,000,000,000, and that this Government itself expends annually for such purposes more than $20,000,000, it is apparent that this whole subject deserves the most serious consideration by the Government.

This committee furthermore begs to express the opinion that a thorough investigation of the properties of the materials of construction and fireproofing, and the resulting increased economies in our systems of construction, may be expected to save annually from 5 to more than 10 per cent of these total expenditures, which would mean an annual saving to the Government alone on its present expenditures of from one to two millon dollars, and to the people of this country a saving of many millions each year.

On December 5, 1906, the President, in a letter to the chief

On December 5, 1906, the President, in a letter to the chief engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, spoke in the highest terms of the work done by this Department, and called attention to the value of these experiments in structural materials in connection with the construction of the Panama Canal and other Government work.

There is no appropriation made by Congress that will be of more value to the people of the United States than this particular one. Its result will mean cheaper and better buildings, not only for the Government, but for all our people. It will save millions in the construction of the Panama Canal and in the Reclamation Service of the great West, and besides make those great undertakings more substantial and less liable to destruction and decay.

Mr. TAWNEY. Right there, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-ment, to follow the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Following the amendment just agreed to, add the following:

"For the continuation of the analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, and other minerals and fuel substances belonging to the United States, in order to determine their fuel value, and so forth, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, to be immediately available, $250,000: Provided, That in examinations, hereby authorized, of fuel materials for the use of the Government of the United States, or for the purpose of increasing the general efficiency or available supply of the fuel resources in the United States, the Director of the Geological Survey may have the necessary materials collected from any part of the United States where they represent extensive deposits; and it shall be the duty of the Director of the Geological Survey to have examined, without charge, the fuels required for use by the Government of the United States, and to give these examinations preference over other work: Provided further, That in publishing the results of these investigations the materials examined shall not be credited to any private party or corporation, but shall be collected and described as representing such extensive deposits."

Mr. TAWNEY. Against that amendment I make the point of

Mr. TAWNEY. Against that amendment I make the point of order that it is not in order and not authorized by law.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, so far as that part of the amendment that I have offered is concerned, which follows the words making the appropriation, I think that portion is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why don't you make the appropriation larger?

Mr. DALZELL. But up to that point the amendment is identical with one passed upon by the Chair one year ago. I call the attention of the Chair to page 8500 of the Congressional Record of the last session. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROOKS] offered an amendment.

For the continuation of the analyzing and testing of the coals, lignites, and other minerals and fuel substances belonging to the United States, in order to determine their fuel value, etc, under the supervision of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, to be immediately available, $100,000.

That was subsequently raised to $250,000, the same amount as is incorporated in my amendment. To that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] made the point of order, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole said:

The organic act, which has already been referred to and quoted, provides for the examination of the geological structure and mineral resources and products of the national domain. It seems to the present occupant of the chair that that language is broad enough to cover fuel substances belonging to the United States. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

As I say, subsequently the amount was changed to $250,000. Now, assuming, of course, that the Chair will follow his previous rulings, as I have no doubt he will, the first part of that amendment is in order; and it seems to me that if that be so, the gentleman might be very willing to withdraw his point of order so far as the remainder is concerned, because it is in the interest of good legislation. I am willing that the Chair should

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. DALZELL. I withdraw the portion that is subject to the point of order, if the gentleman insists on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. The request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to withdraw that portion of it which was subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But he can only withdraw it as a whole and then reoffer such portion of it as he desires.

Mr. DALZELL. I withdraw it as a whole, and now I offer the first part of it, the part that the Chair has already ruled

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment that the Clerk will report,

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following:

"For the continuation of the analysis and testing of the coal, lignite, and other mineral fuel substances belonging to the United States, in order to determine their fuel value, etc., under the supervision of the Director of the Geological Survey, to be immediately available, $250.000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in opposition to the amendment. Under the language of this amendment the Geological Survey has not only $250,000 appropriated for this fiscal year available for the purpose, but $250,000 carried by this amendment would be likewise available for expenditures this fiscal year.

I want to say that statements were made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] a moment ago that the test of building material was not made for the benefit of private interests and that the material tested was all taken from the lands of the United States.

I made the statement that that was not the fact, and the basis of my statement is the fact that last fall a representative of the Geological Survey called me up by telephone in my home city. I went to the hotel to see him, and I learned from him that he had been sent there by the Geological Survey for the purpose of getting limestone rock from a local quarry situated back of the city of Winona to ship to the city of St. Louis to be tested. Now, that land was not owned by the Government of the United States; that land was owned by a private individual when the gentleman made the statement.

When I stated that these tests were made for individuals and that the material was not the material taken from the land owned by the Government, I was stating the truth. The gentlemen challenged the statement, and I wanted simply to make that statement of my own personal knowledge as to what they were doing and what this man had been sent there into my district to do. The purpose was so evident that I could not help noticing it, remembering it very distinctly and the purpose as expressed by the gentleman who represented the Geological Survey. I wanted the House to know that this law is not being observed.

Now, I want to say, in respect to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I am informed by one of the best consulting engineers in the city of St. Louis that samples of coal taken from all of the principal coal deposits of the United States have been tested, and that there is no longer any necessity for the continuation of these coal tests, and this man is one who was employed as the chief engineer of the gas-producing tests until the 1st of December, when he voluntarily separated himself from that service. I am informed by the Representatives on this floor from the city of St. Louis that he is not only one of the most reliable men in the city of St. Louis, but one of the ablest consulting engineers in that city, and he was speaking from personal knowledge. Read the statement of Mr. Holmes here, and you will see that these fuel tests have got down to the point now of testing the relative merits of the equipment for the production of gas and for the consumption of coal.

Now, I maintain that when the Government of the United States enters upon the domain of determining the relative merits of the equipments intended for the use of consuming coal for the purpose of producing steam or gas or for any other purpose, we are getting outside the domain of the Government, and we are making it possible for the representatives of the Government to crush out the manufacturers of one machine for the purpose of building up manufacturers of another in its place.

Now, what has taken place? Read the testimony of Mr. Holmes in the hearings—I read it very carefully to-day—and you will see that one of the things they are now experimenting with is the kind of grate that shall be used in the consumption of coal for the production of steam; whether the grate should be manufactured so as not to admit of so much coal dropping through and being consumed and burnt up there.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And for the purpose of consuming

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; for the consumption of smoke. Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney], speaking to my amendment, which has relation to a coal test, goes back again to the subject of tests of structural material for the purpose of showing, as he thinks, the individual as contradistinguished from the national character of that work. I want to call the attention of the committee to some facts. This work was directed by a supervising board, on which was an engineer of the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, an engineer of the Reclamation Service, two representatives from the War Department, and two from the Navy Department, as these Bureaus and Departments are engaged in building and construction work. It was organized in this manner in order to avoid duplication and to increase its value, furnishing immediate information needed in the Government building and construction work, now costing about twenty-five millions a year, and in connection with the Isthmian Canal locks and dams, costing about forty millions.

In addition to that I have here a copy of a letter written by the President of the United States and addressed to John F. Stevens, chief engineer Isthmian Canal Commission, in which the President says:

The United States Government, through the Geological Survey and the Forest Service, is engaged in investigating the properties and best methods of use of the building materials and fuels of the United States. These investigations are so intimately connected with the industries and welfare of the nation that they should be carried forward as rapidly as possible and should have the advantage of the best service and cooperation which it is possible to secure.

The experts in charge of the examination of structural materials under the advice of this board are making an exhaustive investigation of American cements, concrete, and other structural materials; and I am anxious that these investigations should be such as to make them of a special value in connection with the construction work of the isthmian canal and other Government work.

So much for the testimony as to the national character of this

So much for the testimony as to the national character of this work. With respect to these fuel tests, if the committee will turn to page 572 of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations of last year, 1906, it will find outlined in those hearings a complete programme for these fuel investigations, and the statement made that the completion of this programme would require several years. After that testimony was submitted to the committee an appropriation was made for $250,000, and immediately after the passage of the appropriation a new equipment, estimated for, was purchased, the necessary additional experts were employed, and the investigations, necessarily modified in accordance with the wording of the appropriation act, were inaugurated.

Mr. Chairman, I might, if I saw fit to occupy the attention of the committee at any length, point out how this is a great national work that devolves especially upon the United States. The interests of the United States are such that this work can be carried on by no other parties so successfully and efficiently as by the Government. Let me call attention now to one or two reasons assigned. The Government is a large user of coal, and must necessarily use a great variety of fuels in its public buildings in different parts of the country, in its light-houses, in its ships, and it purchased coal to the extent last year of $3,500,000. The Government is a large owner of fuel. It still owns about 60,000,000 acres of coal, oil, and gas lands. The fuel problem is, in a large sense, a national problem, considered as the basis of heat, light, and power. The fuel problem is one which affects the whole people of the country. Furthermore, it is of immense importance in connection with naval practice. investigations that are being made, showing the quality of fuel, the variety of it, the capacity of it, and the method of its use, are of very great service, not only to the public in general, not only to the United States as a user of coal and the owner of property, but to the naval service that used last year, as I am told, 200,000 tons of coal. I trust there may be no hesitation in indorsing this amendment, as the House indorsed it a year

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I wish to ask one question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the Supervising Architect's bureau has a laboratory or bureau or division whose duty it is to investigate structural materials? been so advised by the Supervising Architect, and it seemed to me that the scope of that bureau is precisely like this in many respects. Is the gentleman familiar with that?

Mr. DALZELL. I am familiar with it, and I would say to the gentleman that the Supervising Architect jointed in a report made upon the subject to the effect that he has no such equipment as is necessary to efficiently make these tests.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What the gentleman from Minnesota said about the character and standing of the St. Louis engineer who wrote the letter about fuel tests is true-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will come to that, Mr. Chairman. Chairman, I move to strike out $50,000 from the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending offered by the gentleman, and that is to strike out the last word.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I withdraw the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I think I can proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may attempt it. [Laughter. ]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can show why the last word should be stricken out; why it is necessary that I should be heard in order that the House may see the necessity of striking it out. Upon the receipt of the letter

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the last word?
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I am coming to it. I will have the last word this time. Mr. Chairman, upon the receipt of that letter I wired to the Engineers' Club at St. Louis, asking their opinion on the value and the continued necessity of these investigations. In answer to my question I received a telegram from the president of that club, which reads as follows:

ST. Louis, Mo., February 22, 1907.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, Washington, D. C .:

Engineers' Club of St. Louis heartily indorses work done by Geological Survey fuel-testing plant, and favors continued maintenance of same here or elsewhere. Abandoning work now would be a great mistake.

E. R. Fish, President.

I shall be guided in my vote on this amendment by the opinion of the St. Louis engineers, who as experts undoubtedly know more about the value of this work than we as laymen do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amend-The gentleman from Missouri will confine his remarks to the subject-matter of the amendment or to the amendment to which his amendment is an amendment.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I propose to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to amend by striking out the words "immediately available."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object to the unanimous consent of the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw his pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the pro forma amendmen offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language in the amendment making the $250,000 appropriated immediately available, which is in effect giving them $500,000 for this fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the proposed amendment the words "to be immedi-ely available."

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were-ayes 45, noes 45. Mr. TAWNEY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dalzell, will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 52, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move now to reduce the appropriation to $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment the word "fifty;" so it will read "$200,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do that upon the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that out of the current appropriation of $250,000 the Geological Survey has bought very expensive machinery for carrying on these tests. It is therefore manifest that they will not need $250,000 for the service if the service is continued during the next fiscal year, and again, up until the beginning of the fiscal year they never had in any one year for this service of testing fuel and coal deposits in the States of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and other States more than $37,500.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, on the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota I accept the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "two hundred" and insert the words "one hundred."

Mr. DALZELL. That is not in order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows: Strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one;" so as to read "one hundred thousand."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that we have already voted upon the subject in question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not on the subject of $100,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, yes; we have.
Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the vote was taken on my amendment. It was not taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment on which the vote was taken was, as the Chair understands it, to strike out the words "to be immediately available." That was carried, and there was a motion to strike out the words "two hundred and fifty" and make the amount $200,000, and that was carried. Therefore the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not in order.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended. The question was taken; and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographical surveys in various portions of the national domain, $250,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 104, line 12, strike out "national domain" and insert "United States."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman,

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The point of order is that this is not authorized in the United States, but in the national domain. The CHAIRMAN [Mr. SHERMAN]. Following the decision of the occupant of the chair, whose place the present occupant but temporarily occupies, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the Chair to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa against the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overruled the point of order following the rule of the occupant of the chair, whose place he but temporarily took

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, the ruling of the Chair was just the opposite. The ruling of the gentleman in the chair preceding the gentleman now occupying the chair was just opposite the ruling the Chair has now made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is in error. The Chair anticipated this point being raised, and before temporarily taking the place of the former occupant of the chair asked him as to his ruling, and the Chair is simply following what would have been the ruling of the regular occupant of the chair had he been here.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] was to change the words "national domain" to "United States" in the body of this act?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.
Mr. TAWNEY. So that hereafter the law governing the power and jurisdiction of the Geological Survey is extended to the United States as contradistinguished from the national domain, as heretofore. I would ask the Chair if that is not a change of existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the permanent occupant of the chair held this proposition to be in order upon the theory that it was a continuance of the work in progress

Mr. OLMSTED. It was so held one year ago.
The CHAIRMAN. The permanent occupant of the chair, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Watson], so held last year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the Chair kindly have the amendment reported as to where it belongs in this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk, without objection, will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the bill in its present form uses the words "national domain." In my judgment there is not a particle of difference between the meaning of that term, so far as it relates to territory, and the use of the term "United States." I think "United States" and "national domain" mean the same thing. But I have offered my amendment so that there can be no possible doubt of it. I should hardly think there could be any doubt, except that there seems to be a doubt in the mind of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawnex], who holds that "national domain" means only the land acwho holds that inational domain means only the land actually owned by the Government. Now, I find that the dictionaries define "domain" as meaning—and I find this language in Worcester: "Territory under the jurisdiction of a sovereign; demesne, dominion, empire." Therefore, when we use the term "national domain" it means any portion of the territory over which the United States has dominion as a sovereign, over which it has jurisdiction. "National domain," indeed, is a broader term than the "United States," as it might be held to include the Philippines.

But, in order that there may be no mistake, in order that there may be no such construction put upon it as the gentleman from Iowa thinks might be put upon that language, so as to confine these topographical surveys to land absolutely owned by the Government, I have offered this amendment, changing the words "national domain" to "United States." I have also sent another amendment to the Clerk's desk increasing the amount for topographical surveys.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the language covered or used in carrying this appropriation is identically the language used in the organic act creating the Geological Survey; and I assume that we have no authority to appropriate under the first ruling of the prior occupant of the chair—no authority to appropriate money for any purpose other than within the purview and scope of the powers conferred upon the Geological Survey when that Survey was created. That is the reason why that language is used for the topographical surveys in various portions of the national domain. That is the language of the organic act creating the Geological Survey.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.
Mr. OLMSTED. How does the gentleman construe the term "national domain," and what does he think is the meaning of the words "United States?"

I construe it as the former occupant of the Mr. TAWNEY. chair construed that word at the last session of this Congress, when he made a diametrically opposite ruling from the ruling which he left on the desk of the chair when he retired and the present occupant took the chair.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question? Mr. TAWNEY. Just one moment.

That definition was that the national domain and public lands are not convertible terms. That the Chair believes that the national domain has a well-defined meaning and does not mean the United States. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yesterday argued that the term "national domain" are not all the United States. The Chair is of an entirely different opinion from that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Have we not been appropriating under the phraseology, using the words "United States" since 1883?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have since 1883 been appropriating in the language that is contained in the organic act creating the Geological Survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Division!
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. I now offer the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 104, line 12, strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert four hundred."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, for two years past we have appropriated $350,000 for this purpose annually. tee this year has cut it down to $250,000. While I have great respect for the chairman and the members of this Appropriation Committee, and great admiration for their work in almost every item of this bill, I feel that as to this particular item just economy requires us to increase rather than diminish the amount. The Director of the Geological Survey in his last report says:

The plans approved for the fiscal years 1906 and 1907 are more than half a million dollars short on work urgently called for.

He says that the demands for these topographical surveys come from the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, as well as from Members of Congress and from State authorities. There is a great demand for a continuance of this work is a demand for double the amount that my amendment calls for.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been urged that these appropriations are made for the benefit of private parties-for sewage systems of cities, street railways, and all that sort of thing. Why, these topographical surveys were commenced in the first instance by the War Department. They are absolutely necessary for the operations of the War Department. You can not locate a military camp without a topographical survey or locate the roads or streams or water supply. It is of great advantage and absolutely necessary to military encampments.

Now, it has been stated, and erroneously stated, that these moneys are expended most largely in the Eastern States, in the larger and wealthier States, and particularly in those States which contribute to the expense. I want to call attention to a statement beginning on page 353 of the hearings on this bill, a statement submitted by the Director of the Geological Survey, in which he gives the approximate amount expended in each State and Territory to June 30, 1906, for topographical mapping. I call attention to the fact that there has been two or three times as much expended in the Western States as in the Eastern or larger States.

Four hundred and fifty-one thousand two hundred dollars expended in Arizona, $28,400 in the Eastern State of Connecticut, $532,600 in the Western State of California, and $150,000 in the Middle State of Pennsylvania, which has contributed that much additional to carry on the work. And so I might go through this list. If there be no objection, I will put the list in the Rec-ORD, and not take time to read it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman compare the areas of the States-for instance, Arizona and Connecticut?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am putting in all the States, whether their areas are great or small. I am denying the statement that this money is expended in the East instead of in the West. I have no objection to its being expended in the West. simply correcting that statement that it is expended in larger proportion in the East. This is the whole statement as submitted by the Director of the United States Geological Survey:

Approximate amounts expended in each State or Territory to June 30, 1906, for topographic mapping.

It is impossible to give the exact amounts expended in each State for topographic work for the reason that until the last few years no account of the cost of work was kept by States.

In the following table are included allotments from the general appropriation for the Geological Survey used for topographic mapping in the first years after the Survey was established and before topographic mapping was separately appropriated for; appropriations for topographic surveys; for topographic surveys in forest reserves; allotments from the irrigation funds for topographic mapping (1889-90); also proportionate cost of special appropriations for work in the Indian Territory.

set aside last year, and the State contributed $15,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. This is a great work, which this House has so often sustained by its vote as to show that it meets with its approval. More than a million copies of these maps and topographical surveys have been sold by the Government and the money turned into the United States Treasury. There is no work that the Government does the results of which are so much sought after as these topographical surveys, locating every road, public and private, and every stream in the United States. It is a work in progress. Now, Mr. Chairman, I see my time is nearly up-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to state, before the vote is taken, that you are even more liberal to the Geological Survey in taking money out of the Federal Treasury to be expended in the States, to do that which belongs to the States, than the Geological Survey itself demands. The total estimate for this service for the next fiscal year is $350,000. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whose State is not yet completely surveyed topographically, proposes to give them $50,000 more than they are asking for. When the Geological Survey fails to ask for all that it wants, or that it can use, I think it is safe for Members of Congress, even though they have been buttonholed by members of the Geological Survey on other branches of the service, to accept their estimates and not to vote $50,000 more for this service than the Survey itself estimates it can expend in the next fiscal year. I want to say that there has been no greater exhibition of extravagance in the consideration of the appropriation for this service than that which has been exhibited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I merely want to call his attention to the fact—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota surrender the floor?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. OLMSTED. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he must be mistaken, because the Director of the Geological Survey, on page 9 of his report, says these demands have been growing with such urgency that it is no longer possible to ignore them, and it is therefore recommended that the appropriation of $400,000 for such surveys be requested for the fiscal year 1907-8.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have the Book of Estimates here, in which he estimates $350,000 for this service.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. There are some more Pennsylvania quadrangles that have not been surveyed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will pardon me, I think this committee ought to adjourn for a few minutes, to let us go to lunch. The chairman of this committee [Mr. Tawney] has been here since 11 o'clock. He is a very important factor in this debate. He can not go and get lunch as long as the House sits. He has stayed here in this way for several days, and we hardly have a quorum here. I have been urging the gentlemen to remain, but it is difficult to keep them here.

TAWNEY. I move to reduce this appropriation to $300,000, believing that it can be safely reduced to that amount. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have made the motion to amend the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman from Minnesota will make it $350,000 I will agree, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota if $300,000 is the amount estimated?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is $50,000 below the estimate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor. The gentleman has yielded to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman going to let us take a recess for a short while for dinner?

Mr. TAWNEY. Let us dispose of that amendment. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You said that before. There is hardly a quorum here and everyone is hungry.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that up to the fiscal year 1905 [laughter] the amount was never above $300,000. Let me, for laughter] the amount was never above $300,000. Let me, for the information of the committee, give you the appropriations for a series of years. In 1899 they had $199,000. It was then raised to $200,500; then it was $240,000; then it dropped to $200,000. Then in 1895 it was cut to $150,000; in 1896, $150,000; in 1897, $175,000. In 1900 was the first time they got up to $240,000 again. Then it ran at $240,000 for three years. Then it was raised to $300,000, and continued at that figure until the fiscal year 1906, when it was increased to $350,000 on the floor, which was above the estimates of the Department, as it is now proposed to increase it above the estimates of the Department. I think that $300,000 is ample for this service.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will not go wild over this amendment and vote it in as it is offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think it ought to be amended as proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the committee, to $300,000, as that sum ought to be ample for this service. And I say this, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I am informed by a gentleman on the committee that in the fiscal year 1905-6, the year that closed last June, the State of New York got $8,000 out of this appropriation for the survey of the State of New York, but the State itself expended $208,000.

In other words, we could use a good deal more in our Stateyes, twenty times more-than we get from the United States Government, and still I think my colleagues from the State of New York are inclined to be reasonable about this appropriation; and for one, representing in part the State of New York, I say that we ought not to increase this beyond $300,000. I do not know as I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota wholly in regard to the deficit coming in 1908, and yet the appropriations are mounting up high, and it is time for us to stop to consider whether we want to make them any higher. is a good place to commence and put this at $300,000, $50,000 above what was recommended by the committee and within $50,000 of the amount estimated, and I hope the amendment recommended by the gentleman from Minnesota will be agreed

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to debate the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota?

The CHAIRMAN. It is; and it has been debated.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Has debate been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment. I am aware that the hour is late, and I shall not detain the committee long. There seem to be constant charges made upon the floor that those interested in the work of the Geological Survey and favoring appropriations therefor are under the influence of the officials of the Geological Survey. I want to repudiate that charge, and I believe in repudiating that charge as to myself I can do so for others.

Mr. Chairman, I am not so familiar with other branches of the work of the Geological Survey, but I regard the work of making topographical maps as of inestimable value to the agricultural interests of the country, and independently of any suggestion from anybody connected with the Geological Survey, I am heartily in favor of the appropriation for topographical maps.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I have only five minutes. Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have been examining during the last three or four weeks the Department of Agriculture, and there are all kinds of maps being made by that Department for the benefit of agriculture. I had a curiosity to know how these particular maps are going to benefit agriculture.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The maps made by the Agricultural Department are not topographical maps. I do not know how many maps are made by the Department of Agriculture. I know some of them are very valuable, the soil survey maps especially, showing the agricultural resources and advantages of the country. I am discussing the amendment increasing the appropriation for topographical maps. I believe these maps also to be exceedingly valuable. Three hundred and fifty thousand or $400,000 distributed by the National Government in cooperation with the States, or without cooperation with the States, is a small amount to distribute to forty-five States. I would like to see the amount made sufficient to do a great deal more topographical surveying. like to see $400,000 appropriated. But I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania agrees to accept an amendment to his amendment making the amount the same as in the last sundry civil appropriation bill-namely $350,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will consent to that.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, if not four hundred thousand the amount should be at least $350,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have received to-day a letter from a gentleman of the highest character, Mr. Joseph Hyde Pratt, the State geologist of North Carolina. It might be charged that he, too, was under the influence of the Geological Survey. I do not know whether he is or not, but I have confidence in him because he is a gentleman of culture, of scientific attainments, and highly esteemed. He is a professor at the University of North Carolina as well as State geologist. I will quote his letter:

NORTH CAROLINA GEOLOGICAL AND ECONOMIC SURVEY, Chapel Hill, N. C., February 21, 1907.

North Carolina Geological and Economic Survey, Chapel Hill, N. C., February 21, 1907.

Hon. C. R. Thomas,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Thomas: I have just heard regarding the report of the Committee on Appropriations regarding the appropriation for the United States Geological Survey, and notice that there is a decided reduction in the amount asked for topographic and water-supply work and also for the work of the coal and structural material testing plant, this latter being under the direction of Prof. J. A. Holmes, our former State geologist.

North Carolina is very much interested in the topographic work. As you know, we have dozens of requests in North Carolina for further topographic work. These maps are being appreciated more and more each year and their value is being realized so that all classes of people now desire these maps. With any decided reduction in the appropriation for topographic work, it will mean less work can be done in North Carolina as well as other States and especially any cooperative work which we hope to take up on a larger scale this year. I am already preparing a bill for our State legislature for an appropriation of $10,000 for cooperative work with the United States Geological Survey in the preparation of topographic maps.

I do not know what chance there is of putting back this appropriation to the original figure, but I wish to call your attention to the fact that we are in North Carolina trying to obtain a good deal more work on our topographic maps and do not want to see our chances diminished for obtaining this work.

With best wishes, I beg to remain,
Cordially, yours,

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman Mr. Chairman is not sneak-

JOSEPH HYDE PRATT, State Geologist.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman, Mr. Chairman, is not speaking to the amendment. There is no appropriation here for geological maps.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I said topographical maps and was referring to topographical maps. Topographical maps are referred to in the letter. The gentleman did not catch the meaning of the letter.

It is from North Carolina's State geologist, and refers to topographical maps, the paragraph of the bill now under discussion. Now, Mr. Chairman, continuing my discussion of the bill and this paragraph.

The last sundry civil bill carried an appropriation for topographical surveys of $350,000, "in various portions of the United States." The committee has, in this bill, reduced the appropriation to $250,000. This is $100,000 less than the current appropriation, and $150,000 less than the estimate of the Director of the Geological Survey.

We are spending millions of money for our national defense and a great Navy, and we also make liberal appropriations for such internal improvements as rivers and harbors. Certainly this is not the time to call a halt in making appropriations for such other internal improvements as the investigation of the agricultural and mineral resources of the whole United States.

The appropriation for the whole work of the Geological Survey has been reduced in the present bill from $1,463,000 to $870,000. The appropriations for hydrographic surveys, fuel tests, and for tests of building materials have been omitted entirely, and the appropriations for topographical and geological surveys and maps largely reduced, so as to materially cripple and retard the work, if not destroy it in some instances. There are many reasons why the appropriations should be increased rather than reduced. I am especially interested that there should be no halt in the work of topographical surveys. This part of the work of the Geological Survey benefits all agricultural interests of the country as well as prospective immigrants and home

It is insisted by some that the States should do this work, but we all understand how impossible it would be for the States so thoroughly and so well to do the work. The reports do not have the same weight, and, furthermore, the work is national in its scope and importance. The States have been doing their part. In the hearings before the committee it will be seen that the States have appropriated altogether up to June 30, 1906, over three-quarters of a million dollars for cooperative work on topographical surveys. The appropriations for geological and topographical surveys are linked together. "A geological survey," says Mr. Walcott, "without a topographical logical survey," says Mr. Walcott, "without a topographical basis is money thrown away, because there is no data upon which to tie the work and no map to show the geology so anyone can locate the results." Both surveys are made to aid in the development of our country-topography to aid in the investigation of agricultural resources, and geology to promote the development of our great mineral resources. This is a strong development of our great mineral resources. reason why the work should not be confined to any one portion of the country. It is as important to the eastern section of the country as to the great western part of the United States. Certainly the appropriations as compared with other appropriations are very small, and I trust that the amendment for an increase of the appropriation for topographical maps to $350,-000, instead of $300,000, will be adopted and this great work of internal improvement permitted to continue.

It is a work that concerns and is of interest to the whole country. The work is national and not local. In the Swiss Republic, the French Republic, in Great Britain and Canada, and in every great country the topographical and geological surveys and maps are national in scope and character. Let us continue the work in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. This work is being done in every State of the United States. I feel that this work which is of so great advantage to the people of this country, including my own State, should continue, and I am most heartily in favor of increasing this appropriation to the amount in the last bill. We will not ask the $400,000, but we do ask for $350,000.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, just a word——
The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.
Mr. OLMSTED. I merely want to say that if this is voted down I propose to make it $350,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

I move to make it $200,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. TAWNEY. I rise to make a statement to the committee. A great many of the Members that are here now have been here all day

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee withhold his point of no quorum for a moment?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was going to suggest that we take a recess until half past 8 o'clock, or that the committee rise and go into the House and then take a recess until that time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I will withdraw the point of no quorum. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota move that the committee do now rise?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I insist on my point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.
Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state that it is the opinion of Members that we will not have a quorum of the House and therefore can not go back into the Committee of the Whole if the point of no quorum was made should we take a recess now, as I suggested a moment ago. That would put the further consideration of the bill over until next Monday. It is absolutely essential-it is necessary-that this bill go to the Senate by Monday morning.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope my friend from Tennessee will not interpose any objection to that. Let us go on and pass this bill to-night.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is extraordinary for this tremendous bill to be passed here with a handful of Members present. Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that the other night we had a night session and about half an hour later than it is now the Members came in; and I want to say to him further that under the rules 100 constitute a quorum in Committee of the Whole, and there are certainly 100 Members present now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just counted. There are 104 Members present—a quorum. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engraving and printing the geological maps, $75,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 15, page 105, insert: "For examination of the water resources and products of the national domain, $200,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not authorized by law, and the same question has been ruled on three times this afternoon.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard just a moment on the point of order. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the former occupant of the chair in passing upon the amendment which I offered, in which it was proposed to insert the words "including water," after the words "mineral resources," in line 1, page 104 of the bill, made this statement: "Now, it occurs to the Chair that that word 'water' is included in the words 'mineral resources.'" And my amendment proposing to include the word "water" was held to be superfluous. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the word "water" is included, as stated by the former occupant of the chair, in the words "mineral resources," then it is competent for this committee to the mineral resources and to provide by a specific appropriation for an examination of one particular mineral resource, and that is what my amendment proposes to do. I segregate "water" from the other mineral resources and provide for its examination.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Just as silver, lead, or any other

Mr. MONDELL. As we might segregate silver or lead or iron or any other mineral, and we now provide for an examination of that particular mineral, which is included, according to the statement of the former occupant of the chair, in the term "mineral resources."

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this raises a question which has been three times ruled on to-day.

Mr. ELLIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand this is an amendment to follow the paragraph just read, and I was trying to get recognition of the Chair so as to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman

when this matter has been disposed of.

Mr. MANN. This is a separate paragraph, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman desires to offer an amendment relating to the subject-matter in the preceding paragraph?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chairman will recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming is not an amendment to this paragraph, but a new paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood we had passed the paragraph and read another paragraph from the one the gentleman from Missouri wants to amend, line 6, page 105.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no. The Chair saw the gentleman from Missouri on his feet, but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Wyoming, and now the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 105, lines 10 and 11, strike out "$75,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say I have no objection to that amendment. The theory of the committee was that in view of the fact we were reducing the topographical work of the Geological Survey that they would not need more than $80,000, or within $20,000 of the estimate. The members of the subcommittee were informed this morning that there is two years' work accumulated and that they will need the entire force for at least two years to bring the work current; therefore I accept the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The proposition offered by the gentleman from Wyoming the Chair understands to be substantially the same as the regular occupant of the chair has two or three times ruled upon and each time has sustained the point of So the present occupant of the chair, following the rule of the permanent occupant of the chair, sustains the point of

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 105, at the end of line 11, add the following:
"Provided, That the moneys received by the Director from the sales of topographic and other maps printed by the Geological Survey shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation for engraving and printing the geological maps of the United States."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of the survey of the public lands that have been or may hereafter be designated as forest reserves, $100,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 14, page 105, a new paragraph, as follows:

"For investigations of the mineral resources of the national domain, in addition to the amount herein appropriated, $250,000.

"Provided, That not to exceed $150,000 of this amount shall be expended in the investigation of water resources."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I then offer the first half of the amendment before the word "Provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 14, page 105, a new paragraph, as follows: "For investigations of the mineral resources of the national domain, in addition to the amount herein appropriated, $250,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. The committee has already passed on the subject-matter of this amendment and fixed the amount for this service. It can not be amended. The amendment comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Minnesota is right. The committee has passed to another section of the bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the United States Geological Survey, $870,020.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," line 25, page 105, add: "Provided, That not to exceed $200,000 thereof may be expended in the examination of the water resources of the United States."

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. NEEDHAM. That is simply a limitation upon the whole appropriation. It is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. As presented it was more than a limitation, and the point of order is sustained.

Is there objection to the Clerk making the necessary change in totals made necessary by the amendment adopted? [After a The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. pause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment here for the purpose of correcting an error in the printing of the bill. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transpose the matter following the word "hundred," in line 7, and all of lines 8 and 9 on page 41, to come in at the end of line 24 on that

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now resume the reading of the bill on page 144.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For president of the Board of Managers, $4,000; secretary of the Board of Managers, $2,000; general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the Board of Managers, $4,000; inspector-general and chief surgeon, $3,500; assistant general treasurer and assistant inspector-general, $2,500; two assistant inspector-general, at $2,500 each; clerical services for the offices of the president, general treasurer, and inspector-general and chief surgeon, $15,500; messenger service for president's office, $144; clerical services for managers, $4,500; agents, $1.400, of which sum not more than $200 shall be paid to the agent at Washington, D. C.; for traveling expenses of the Board of Managers, their officers and employees, $16,000; for outdoor relief, $1,000; for rent, legal services, medical examinations, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $7,000; in all, $66,544.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not accept an amendment on page 157, in line 19, changing that item from $1,400 to $1,700, of which sum not more than $500 shall be paid to the agent at Washington. It is an increase of $300. He used to be paid $800.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I will not press it if the gentleman is unwilling to accept it.
The Clerk read as follows:

In all. $4,476,544.

Mr. BOWERSOCK. I offer the following amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 158, line 4, after the word "dollars," change the period to a semicolon and add the following:

"And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteers that contains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation. I am aware of the decision of the Chair last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. This amendment is different in its phraseology, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the Chair kindly have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Just a word or two upon the point of That proviso, if the Chair will give his attention, is in identically the same form as the proviso attached to the appropriation for State Soldiers' Homes in the following paragraph. It is copied from it. It reads:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial Home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold.

It is clearly a limitation. When that proviso was put on the appropriations for State and Territorial Homes, three or four years ago, the point of order was made against it, just as it was a moment ago. I think probably the gentleman from Missouri made the point of order at that time. It is as clearly a limitation as it is possible for a proviso to be. It is contained in the paragraph following that is carried from year to year, and it would be subject to the same point of order if it were not a limitation

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to add to what I advanced last year. I do not know whether the Chair has seen any additional light; but it does not seem to me that this is a limitation, because the limitation does not say that no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purpose of a canteen, but it limits by legislation the conditions that must exist in the Homes before the appropriation will be available. Carried to the logical extreme if a proviso was added that no appropriation should be available in places where the Soldiers' Homes are surrounded by saloons or located within a mile thereof or in a city having saloons, the amendment would have to be sustained along the same line, if the pending amendment is in order.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. The point of order was made last year as to the proviso that no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Soldiers' Home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold. The point of order was made on that by yourself, and the point of order was overruled.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have just said in my opening statement that I was aware of the decision of the Chair last year in sustaining the point of order, and had nothing further to advance from what I advanced at that time.

Mr. JAMES. What is the difference between the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Bowersock] and the one to which the gentleman made the point of order which was overruled? Are they not identical in real meaning?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a difference in the phraseology. The phraseology is copied and is identical with the phrase that is appended to the appropriation for State and Territorial That is an appropriation for Homes over which the National Government has no direct control, and so a limitation as to the conditions under which appropriations are to be available does not infringe any regulation over which it is in the power of Congress to legislate, but as to the National Homes, Congress has power to legislate direct, and this proviso is legislative under the rule forbidding legislation on appropriation bills. I respectfully submit that there is a distinction between the two cases, and this amendment infringes the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can very readily see the difference between the point of order on the amendment sustained by the Chair last year and the amendment on which the point of order is offered now, not as to the phraseology of the amendment, but as to the proposition which is proposed to be amended. The proposition to which the amendment was offered last year was in regard to the payment of a gratuity to various State and Territorial Homes. It is perfectly manifest that the ruling of the Chair last year on that proposition was correct, because, without interfering in any way with the established law, Congress can give or refuse to give to a State or Territorial Home gratuity which was proposed to be given under certain conditions; but here is a situation now proposed where Congress by law is creating Soldiers' Homes. It has by law provided for the government of Soldiers' Homes. At Soldiers' Homes it has the government of Soldiers' Homes. At Soldiers' Homes it has vested the government in a Board of Managers in accordance with the provisions of the statute. It is true that Congress can refuse to appropriate, but, Mr. Chairman, it is also true that the Chair has frequently ruled that Congress can not, against a point of order, by a limitation change the organic law. Here is a provision that although Congress has created these Soldiers' Homes by an organic law, although it has provided for the government of the Soldiers' Homes by a Board of Managers, a proposition through the form of a limitation to take away the control of the Board of Managers and by affirmative legisla-tion in the guise of a limitation to change the statute upon that subject. While limitations are usually favored by the Chair, properly, still it is true that the Chair might well rule, it seems to me, that a limitation in this guise, changing the law, giving the Board of Managers the discretion over the management of the Homes, is positive affirmative legislation, as it undoubtedly would be construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and therefore subject to a point of order. It is perfectly manifest that an item of this kind in the bill is construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury as positive legislation, although it be in the form of a limitation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the Board of Managers having control of these Homes are creatures of the Shall the creatures be greater than their creator? It resolves itself into that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will my colleague on the committee submit to an interruption?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. TAWNEY. The law creating the Board of Managers specifically provides that the control of the Homes shall be under such regulations as the Board of Managers shall provide.

Now, the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is that when Congress assumes to make a regulation for the Home, it is to that extent changing the existing law which places the complete control of the Home under a Board of Managers.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then I repeat myself. clothe our creatures with greater power than we ourselves are able to exercise.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, you can do this, but you can not do it on an appropriation bill that changes existing law.

Mr. McCALL. Is it not true that the law is the creature of Congress, and on that theory it would be entirely proper to change any law on an appropriation bill?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman from Michigan has not stated his full proposition. He has been twice butted into before he succeeded in stating it.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman from Michigan permitted me to ask a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL. I am not anticipating anything that the gentleman may say. The gentleman stated a proposition very clearly, and I simply addressed myself to what he had said rather than to what he might say.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the board of directors shall formulate any rules or regulations contrary to what the Congress believes ought to exist in a Home, the Congress ought to have the right to change those rules in the interest of good government. Otherwise, supposing they should formulate a rule that a man should eat but once a day, or that instead of drinking beer he should drink liquor, or some other specific thing, as a regulation. Ought we to be compelled to stand by those regulations, whatever they might be?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will permit me, there is no question at all that Congress has the right to legislate—to make rules and regulations for the Homes; but the question is whether it can be done here on an appropriation bill in the way of new legislation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We authorize them with regard to the State Homes, and make it a condition precedent to receiving any appropriation for the maintenance of men in those Homes that liquor shall not be sold in the Home.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me, right there?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me, right there? Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. We have no authority whatever over the jurisdiction of those respective Homes, but we can consistently place a limitation on the appropriation made for these State and Territorial Homes, and so far as National Homes for disabled soldiers are concerned, the authority is vested in a board which has the authority of law and authority is vested in a which has the authority of law, and we are attempting to overcome that authority.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And the Board is a creature of Congress, and therefore, under the gentleman's argument, is greater than the Congress itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. Congress has that authority, but not upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the decision of the Chair on this question during the last session. The Chair overruled the point of order. In ruling upon it he called attention to a ruling made Mr. PAYNE, of New York, upon an amendment offered by Mr. Charles B. Landis, of Indiana, as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the agricultural college of any State or Territory until the Secretary of Agriculture shall be satisfied, and shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that no trustee, officer, or employee of such college is engaged in the practice of polygamy or polygamous relations.

After much discussion on this amendment the Chairman [Mr. PAYNE, of New York] held that it was a limitation of appropriation which the House had a right to make, or Congress had the right to make, and was not new legislation. Now, what difference is there between a limitation with regard to polygamy in Utah, upon an appropriation made by the United States for an agricultural college, and an appropriation made to maintain a Soldiers' Home, where the limitation is that spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors shall not be sold there?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It seems to me they are in harmony.

Mr. JAMES. Absolutely.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the Government can do it in one case, it can do it in the other. The principle is the same.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Watson, of Indiana, who now occupies the chair, was also Chairman last session when a like amendment was offered as is now offered by Mr. Bowersock, of Kansas; and a like point of order was by the Chairman overruled and the amendment held germane, and therefore in order, and he quoted approvingly the decision of Mr. PAYNE, which I have referred to.

Mr. MANN. Does Congress provide by law for the government of any of the agricultural colleges?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It determines the conditions under which they shall receive aid from the Government.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly it has the right to determine those conditions; but they can receive the money or leave it, as they please. But here is a provision that takes away from the Board of Managers a discretion which under the law they now have, and to that extent it is positive legislation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will leave it to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the proposition. The language used in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas is as follows:

And provided further. That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any National Home for Disabled Volunteers that contains a bar or canteen wherein intoxicating liquors are sold.

This very proposition was presented in regard to the State Soldiers' Homes in 1904, and the Chair at that time overruled the point of order and held it in order as a limitation. Chair were only following the precedent he would be constrained to overrule the point of order in this case. One year ago this whole question, as most of the Members will remember, was taken up and discussed thoroughly and elaborately, and at that time the gentleman from Kansas offered this proviso:

That this appropriation shall be available only under the condition that no bar or canteen shall be maintained at said Homes for the sale of beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors.

In legislation we look to the substance, and not to the form, and unless there is an affirmative attempt to restrict the adminstrative power or departmental function, it has always been held that a limitation in negative language is in order.

The present occupant of the chair went fully into the authorities and quoted a large number of decisions by Mr. Hemenway, of Indiana; Mr. Burton, of Ohio; Mr. Payne, of New York, and other eminent parliamentarians who had occupied this chair when questions of similar import had been raised, all sustaining the theory that limitations of this character are clearly in order.

The Chair does not care to go fully into this line of decisions again, because the Chair believes that the ruling at that time was acquiesced in and believed to be the proper ruling under the circumstances. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any Home any inmate of which is found in attendance during the next fiscal year upon any race-horse meeting or is discovered in any pool room where gambling is carried on or in any place where malt or spirituous liquors or tobacco is sold.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas is intended to make the National Government a keeper of each individual soldier at these Homes. I simply offer my amendment in order to perfect the enterprise and make the Government the keeper of the old soldier's morals, so that he shall not be tempted by liquor, tobacco, gambling, or horse racing. I trust that the gentlemen who will support the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas will also, in their desire to protect the old soldier, support the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SIMS. Is it too late to make a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late because debate has occurred. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Sullivan) there were—ayes 13, noes 66.

So the amendment to the amendment was lost.

The question now is on the amendment The CHAIRMAN.

offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment doubtless will be supported by some gentlemen upon the theory that it is in the interest of temperance, and that it is for the purpose of protecting those who live in the National Soldiers' Homes. Mr. Chairman, it is entirely erroneous for any man to vote for this proposition upon the theory that it is in the interest of tem-perance or for the protection or benefit of the old soldier.

A year ago we adopted a similar amendment, limiting the appropriations for the present fiscal year, which limitation takes effect on the 4th of March of this year, or a week from next Monday. As a result of our action, and in anticipation of that limitation going into effect at the Home in the State of the gentleman who offers this amendment, people are making preparations for the sale of liquor, are making preparations for the maintenance of brothels, in which they hope and expect that when the beer hall in the Home at Leavenworth is closed these old soldiers will be found spending their pension money and otherwise indulging in vice and luxury. At the Home in Milwaukee, in anticipation of this law going into effect a week from next Monday, twenty saloons have been built and are ready to go into operation one week from next Monday for the purpose of getting the pension money from the old soldier, which is now going to maintain him in the Home and helping which is now going to maintain this in the Home and helping to maintain those of his family that are not there.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any Home in any State where the State legislature is wiping out these saloons, as they are in Tennessee:

Mr. TAWNEY. There is none, and they have not done it in Tennessee

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes we have, in nearly every town and county in the State.

Mr. TAWNEY. The testimony of the governor of the gentleman's own State denies that statement, and the "bootleggers" of Tennessee are, in violation of that State law, selling concoctions to the inmates of the Mountain Home, and some of those inmates have lost their lives, as I am informed by the gentleman from Tennessee, in consequence of the poison it con-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Not by selling whisky.
Mr. TAWNEY. No; injected into neat cider, poisoned with what is known as "wood alcohol."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I must decline to yield further. Here is a document which I hold in my hand, entitled "Canteen in Soldiers' Homes," being a supplement to the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations in charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill for 1908, which document contains the recommendation of the Board of Man-agers, and who compose the Board of Managers? The comrades of these old soldiers who are living in these Homes. These Homes, gentlemen, are not asylums for the purpose of reform-ing these men. The average age of the old soldier in the Home is 67 years. They go into the Home in many cases because of habits that they have contracted in the Army or since they have come out of the Army. You can not reform them. consequence is that when you deprive them of the opportunity to get a drink of beer in the Home you drive them out into the saloons and the brothels that are kept and maintained on the money of the old soldiers in the Homes.

This document contains the letters of temperance people, of the best class of citizens in every community in the communities in which every one of these homes are now located. I have marked a number of them. Here is one on page 122, written by Mr. Jesse L. Pritchard, and dated from the Western Branch, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Leavenworth, Kans., January 22, 1907. Here is another one, written by Mr. Benjamin F. Endres, written from Leavenworth, a prominent business man in that city, wholly disconnected from the Home, who says:

It is a well-known fact among those living near the Soldiers' Home that the sale of beer to inmates is done under close restriction, and to my knowledge I have never known of an old veteran to become intoxicated on beer sold at the canteen, for the very good reason that he is entitled to but a small quantity as a beverage each day.

The influence of such a privilege on the old veteran is a very good one; it induces them to remain upon the premises and causes them to remain away from various dives, where they not only buy an inferior quality of beer, but there are many cases on record where the old veteran has been lured into these dives and drugged and robbed. I in my official capacity have observed that since it has been rumored that the canteen at the Home will cease to exist that a low element of outside people have attempted to come to Leavenworth to open low dives, for no other purpose than to prey upon the old veterans from the Home.

Here is a gentleman speaking from his personal knowledge of the conditions in the Home at Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas. I have here a letter from the archbishop of the Catholic Church at Milwaukee, strongly urging the continuance of the beer hall in the interest of temperance and for the protection of the old soldier, and I have here a letter printed in this document from a minister at Dayton, Ohio, who speaks from personal knowledge and describes the conditions that obtained before they had a beer hall in the Home and the condition since then. Every chaplain in every Home except one protests against the abolition of the canteen. Every officer in every Home, every surgeon in every home, and in addition to these officers, the best element of the people—temperance, law-abiding element of the people—in every community are protesting against the abolition of the canteen, and they do it in the interest of temperance and in the interest of the old soldier.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, coming from the only State where prohibition is really strictly enforced, I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he has any letters from the temperance people of my State about the canteen?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I will say to the gentleman from North Dakota that these communications come from people who live in the vicinity of the Home; people who have had occasion to observe the conditions before the beer hall was established and since the beer hall was established, and their testimony counts infinitely more than does the testimony of the mistaken advocates of temperance who are trying to abolish the old soldiers' beer hall in the Home. [Applause.]

Mr. GRONNA. That is, the testimony from the States where they have the saloon?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and in the gentleman's State there are 300 more saloon licenses issued, according to the population of his State, than there are in the State of South Dakota, where there is no prohibition.

Mr. GRONNA. But we have not a single open saloon in our State.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are "blind pigs." Now I want to read a letter, Mr. Chairman, from the governor of the Danville Home, which is located in the city in which the Speaker of this House

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. May I have five minutes more?
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. He says:

DANVILLE BRANCH, NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS, National Home, Danville, Ill., January 14, 1907.

National Home, Danville, Ill., January 14, 1997.

Sir: I take the liberty of writing you in regard to the canteen in the Soldiers' Home. In the beginning it may not be amiss to state that I am a member of the Methodist Church, and came to this Branch of the National Home with a strong prejudice against a canteen. I could not bear the idea of being in any way connected with such an institution. But the logic of facts has forced me away from my original position, and years of experience have but strengthened the convictions which these facts forced upon me. I know it is a trite saying that the soldiers in the Home are old and their habits of life are formed; nevertheless it is true, and the duty—for it is no less than a duty—of those who are in charge of these Homes is to see that the evil results of wrong habits, when they exist, may be reduced to the minimum, and those who would take this power away from the Home management are doing an incalculable harm, though actuated by the best of motives.

There are numerous members of the Home who will be satisfied with a glass of beer at the Home, who, if deprived of this privilege, would go into the adjacent city or towns and there get no one knows what to drink, and then probably be beaten and thrown into the streets to live or die as the case might be. It is bad enough as it is. My experience both with and without the canteen shows that it is much worse without it. In so far as the men can be saved from the dens and dives in the city, in that far the cause of temperance, sobriety, and discipline is subserved.

I earnestly beg, sir, that the Home management may be permitted to control this question in the interest of sobriety and decency, and this can be done to a very considerable extent at least by allowing the men a place inside the Home grounds where they can assemble, drink their beer, smoke, and talk, and yet be under strict scrutiny. I make no reference to the money question. I base my appeal upon the grounds of sobriety, morality, good order, temperance, and d

I. CLEMENTS, Governor.

Hon. J. A. Tawney, Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

That letter is signed by I. Clements, governor of the Home. [Applause.] Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other letter which I want to read if I can turn to it. It is from the sheriff of the county of Milwaukee, William R. Knell. I will read only that part which gives a description of the roadways, and mark you, gentlemen, the Home at Milwaukee is situated outside of the corporate limits of the city, and the police have no control over the sale of liquors in the city of the Home at Milwaukee, That, perhaps, is the reason that to-day there are standing twenty saloons at the door of that Home that were not there a year ago, before this limitation prohibiting the sale of liquor to the Home was enacted in this Congress.

What Home is that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Northwestern Home at Milwaukee.

Mr. SIMS. Twenty saloons?

Mr. TAWNEY. Twenty saloons have been erected in anticipation of this bill going into effect.

Mr. SIMS. To be patronized by the soldiers there? Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is it necessary for these saloon keepers to apply for permission to sell liquor?
Mr. TAWNEY. Where?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. At Milwaukee.

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; I said before that they are outside of the city of Milwaukee. They would get their licenses under county license. The Government of the United States has no control over that.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I understand; but the authority is in somebody certainly to grant them permission to sell liquor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Here is what the sheriff says:

Mr. TAWNEY. Here is what the sheriff says:

The past four years I have been connected with the sheriff's office, and have had charge of the outdoor work during the last two years. During that period of time we have had numberless calls to the vicinity of the Home, and I assure you that some of the sights witnessed there can not be described.

The old soldiers, as a rule, are no worse with regard to the drink habit than the average run of men; but the methods employed and the alluring temptations thrown out to the old gray-haired heroes is what aggravates the situation and does the mischief. All efforts should be made to devise means to keep them on the grounds of the Home, not to drive them out.

I firmly believe that the morals and behavior of a large percentage of the population of the Home could be immeasurably improved if the service at the canteen were to include the dispensing of beer and even good liquor. Good liquor, if dispensed to the veterans in reasonable quantities, will not injure them nor set them crazy drunk; it is the vile concoctions, commonly called "rye," "brandy," etc., which robs these old men of all sense, reason, and judgment.

Much of the drinking indulged in is, in fmy opinion, merely a repetition of the old, old story of the forbidden fruit. If stronger drink than is now sold at the canteen should be had there, many would never think of indulging at all; others would use it very moderately, and the absolute craving for it would be reduced to a minimum. Fully one-half of those now going outside would never think of leaving the grounds at all. The mere thought of not being able to satisfy the appetite for a good drink is what first starts the craving.

Once in one of the many drink shops surrounding the Home the men seek to make the best of the opportunity, and the result is well known.

It is not what a man drinks of his own desire which does the damage; known.

It is not what a man drinks of his own desire which does the damage; it is the excess brought on by environment, association, and the despicable methods resorted to to encourage lewdness and debauchery. I say, by all means retain the canteen, and, if possible, widen its scope.

Very truly, yours,

WM. R. KNELL, Sheriff of Milwaukee County.

Hon. J. M. Holley, Esq.,

Manager National Home for Disabled
Volunteer Soldiers, La Crosse, Wis.

Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman why will not the soldiers drink mild drinks at saloons as well as inside the Home? Why will not the saloons keep mild drinks as well as alcohol and such-

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, that question answers itself.
Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to this amendment I desire to briefly say that as a trustee for more than five years of the New York State Home at Bath, with more than 2,000 inmates, my experience has been of a practical character. Our experience with and without the canteen should be accepted by the members of the committee as of greater value than that of the theorists and faddists who oppose the sale of beer and ale in these Homes, for nothing else is ever sold. There are nine national and thirty State Homes, in twenty-seven different States, with a population of 46,000.

The average age of the inmates is 67, and 50 per cent, in round figures, are in the hospital. They are growing old fast and soon will join their comrades on the other shore, answering the last summons of the Great Commander. Why deprive them of the opportunity of meeting together socially in the canteen hall, enjoying a glass of good, wholesome beer or ale—for nothing else was sold in the Bath Home—a pipe or cigars? For the information of the Members of the House I shall read the rules and regulations that obtain in these Homes that are carried out to the letter. [Applause.] Regulations that govern this matter are very clearly stated in a supplement to the hearings from which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has been quoting, or rather I should have said from the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers. It is found on pages 10 and 11. These are the regulations which govern the sale of malt liquors in the various Soldiers' Homes:

When beer is sold at a Branch under post-fund management the utmost care must be exercised to prevent any member from drinking to excess. The place of sale will be under the direct charge of a discreet noncommissioned officer, assisted by a sufficient number of suitable members selected from the guard force. They will be present at all times when the place is open for sales, and will have power to make arrests or expel from the place any persons showing evidences of intoxication or a disposition to create disorder.

In the management and conduct of the beer hall or building used for such purposes, the following rules will be strictly observed and enforced:

tion or a disposition to create disorder.

In the management and conduct of the beer hall or building used for such purposes, the following rules will be strictly observed and enforced:

1. Temperance is to be taught and encouraged at all times.

2. No member visibly under the influence of intoxicants shall be admitted to the hall.

3. The hall shall not be opened before breakfast. It shall be closed between 12 and 1 o'clock, noon, and closed for the day one-half hour before supper.

4. But one ticket shall be sold to any member at any one time.

5. Governors of Branches may llimit the amount of beer to be sold to any member and may make special arrangements for members employed in the shops.

The conditions of admission to the Home are such that all of the members must be disabled and without means of support. To enjoy its benefits they must separate themselves from their families and kindred; 96 per cent of the total membership fought in the civil war; their average age is nearly 67 years, and many of them are the victims of misfortune. They are thrown together as comparative strangers at an age when new friendships are not readily formed, and their tendency is to brood over their life failures. Unless they are afforded some ediversions they swell the hospital rolls and the death rate. The social influences of the beer hall and the diversions and entertainments incident to its operation have contributed in no small degree to the health and contentment of the members of the Home.

In July last the governors of all the Branches were required to report in relation to the operation of the beer hall at their respective Branch Homes, as to its effect upon discipline and the sobriety of the members, and to furnish statistics from the records bearing upon the subject. These reports without exception furnish positive evidence as to the value of the beer hall in the promotion of temperance, sobriety, and moral conduct. The chaplains of all the Branch Homes were also requested to report on the same subject. Of the eight

At Bath there are some fifteen of these places, a few conducted respectably and the rest of the worst character, selling adultered and poisonous compounds that are positively injurious to the health of those who drink the stuff.

In the canteen only the best malt liquors are sold, and only in moderate quantities, to the inmates

I may say that the reports of all the governors of these Homes are in favor of the canteen. The chaplains, with but two exceptions, favor it. The board of trustees, of which I have the honor to be a member, composed of nine citizens of the State of New York appointed by the governor, passed this resolution one year ago:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the board of trustees of the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home that the best interests of the institution and the good of the members thereof will be subserved by the reestablishment at the Home of the canteen at which only malt ilquors are sold, and the board urgently requests the several Members of Congress from the State of New York to use their best endeavors to accomplish this result.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. I have not troubled this committee

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. GOULDEN. The following letter is from the Catholic chaplain, an able and zealous clergyman having the love and respect of all the inmates and the confidence of the trustees and officers:

New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home, Bath, Steuben County, N. Y., January 16, 1996. Hon, J. A. Goulden, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In compliance with your request, I send my views as to the advisability of returning to the canteen system in the Soldiers' Homes of the country.

I have been Catholic chaplain at the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home for nearly four years. When I began my work here I was opposed to the canteen, but experience has taught me that it is morally impossible to eradicate intemperance. The best we can do is to endeavor to control it. A large number of the inmates formed an appetite for intoxicating liquors early in life and now consider them essential. To my mind it would be far better to establish a canteen at this Home in which the men could obtain mild stimulants under proper restrictions than to practically force them to frequent the saloons, of which there are many in the proximate vicinity of the Home, where the vilest kind of liquors are generally sold.

I am, yours, sincerely,

Mr. Chairman, I have also the letter of the surgeon in chief of this Home, quite an able young physician, who writes as follows. It is dated at the Bath Home, January 2, 1906, addressed to myself:

New York State Soldiers and Sallors' Home,

Bath, Steuben County, N. Y., January 2, 1906.

Hon. J. A. Goulden, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Through the commandant I have been informed that you desire my opinion, along with others, as regards the advisability of reestablishing the so-called "canteen" at this Home.

After mature deliberation on the subject I am fully convinced that as a practical means for promoting temperance in the use of alcoholics as well as in conserving the health of the men by offering them a limited amount of a pure beverage (beer or ale) in place of the poisonous material obtainable at our gates the reestablishment of the post exchange should be advocated.

Respectfully, yours,

C. K. Haskell, Surgeon.

I have a third letter, which I shall put in the RECORD, from the commandant himself, a gentleman who is known as one of the strongest temperance advocates, a member of the Anti-Saloon League, I understand, which my distinguished young friend from New York [Mr. Benner] is representing on this occasion, I am informed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. GOULDEN. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that his argument epitomized is this: That it is better for the Government to put saloons in the National Homes and keep all the soldiers partially drunk all of the time rather than to have them totally drunk part of the time? [Laughter.]

Mr. GOULDEN. Not at all. It is just the opposite. That might be true in the district in which the gentleman from Kentucky lives, but it certainly is not true of the district represented by my good friend from New York [Mr. FASSETT], in which this Home is located. [Applause.]

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a further ques-

Mr. GOULDEN. I refuse to yield.

I desire to say that I have watched this canteen matter in the Home very carefully. I have seen its operation time after time, and it has always been one of those things that even a temperance man could most heartily approve. I have never seen an inmate under the influence of liquor in connection with the canteen at the Soldiers and Sailors' Home at Bath. And I may add that the consensus of opinion of the officers of the Home and of all of those who live in Steuben County, N. Y., who are familiar with this matter, who know the facts thoroughly, is in favor of a reestablishment of the canteen in the State Home at Bath and of the reestablishment of the canteen in the National Homes all over this country.

The following is a letter from the commandant, to which I referred:

The following is a letter from the commandant, to which I referred:

New York State Soldiers and Sallors' Home, Bath, Steuben County, N. Y., December 29, 1905.

Hon. Joseph A. Goulden, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Dear Colonel Goulden: In the year 1896 the legislature of this State authorized the trustees of this institution to sell beer and ale to members of the Home on the Home grounds, the profits to be used for the support of the library and reading room of the Home and for such purposes as might be deemed best for the comfort and amusement of the members. Under this authority beer and ale were sold on the Home grounds until May 1, 1904, when a "no-license" vote in the town of Bath, in which town the Home is situated, rendered further sale impossible for a period of two years. The town of Bath has now voted for license again, to take effect on May 1 next, so that after that period there will be no obstacle to the reestablishment of the canteen except such as have been or may be imposed by Congress. In the appropriation should be apportioned to any State or Territorial Home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold. The same provision was also inserted in the supply bill of 1905. The trustees of this institution and the good of the members will be subserved by the reestablishment of the canteen at which only malt liquors are sold." I concur in their view. The canteen is maintained at many of the National Homes, and, as far as I know, at all of them under authority of Congress. Why a distinction should be made between State and National Homes is not obvious. Another circumstance that has a strong bearing upon this subject is that all sorts of vile intoxicants are permitted to be sold in unlimited quantities in the Immediate vicinity of the Home. The present no-license régime furnishes no protection whatever in this respect, and after May next such sales will be legal. It seems to me that to prohibit the sale of mait liquors on the grounds of the Home grounds does not appeal to good reas ment. It is to be hoped that the present Congress will take a different view of the matter from that held by its predecessor.

Respectfully,

J. E. EWELL, Commandant.

I also quote the following from the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the subject of the canteen.

In reply to a question of Chaiman TAWNEY, Major Harris, the treasurer of the National Homes, said:

The effect upon the inmates, diminishing the number of arrests for drunkenness and their going outside without permission.

The CHAIRMAN. Do all the governors and chaplains recommend the continuance of the canteen in which nothing but beer is sold?

Major Harris. All the governors do and, with two exceptions, all the chaplains. There were two chaplains who dissented. They thought that the canteen was an evil rather than a benefit. One of those has experienced a change of heart since his last letter and has made a report in favor of the canteen. He has revised his opinion. The experience of the other man in the Home has not been very great, and I have no doubt his expression is honest as to his views on the subject. With those two exceptions all are very heartily of the opinion that the canteen is a benefit rather than a detriment to the Home. The CHAIRMAN. With one exception, the chaplains say the maintenance of the canteen or the beer hall in the Home is more conductive to good order and discipline and more beneficial physically and otherwise for the inmates of the Home than it would be if that institution was prohibited?

Major Harris. Very decidely, it is.

The CHAIRMAN. That judgment is based upon the experience of the Board and the governors and chaplains where they had no canteen and have since had the canteen, where these men have formed their judgment from personal observation as to the changed conditions brought about by the addition of the canteen?

Major Harris. Yes, sif. Experience has also shown, and that is borne out by the reports of the governors, that whenever for any reason the members have been confined within the limits of the Home and had free access to the canteen and did not have access to saloons outside, that drunkenness has ceased and good order has been maintained to a marked degree.

In conclusion, I appeal to the Members of the House to treat my comrades fairly and to de them that institution which them decembers have been confined within the limits of the Home and had free access to the canteen and did not have access to saloons outside, that drunkenness has ceased and good order has been maintained to

In conclusion, I appeal to the Members of the House to treat my comrades fairly and to do them that justice which they demand. The canteen hall is a place where they can assemble in social and pleasant conversation, enjoy their glass of pure beer or ale, and smoke their pipes. It is an aid to morals, to sobriety, and to discipline. Let it be restored to all the Homes. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, if in the town of Bath they are selling as bad whisky as my friend and colleague says, it is a violation of the laws of the State of New York. It is a violation of section 165 of the agricultural law. If the governors of that home had the interests of the old soldiers at heart they would be doing them a far better service if they would see that the sellers of that particular kind of liquor were driven from that particular locality.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has been laid on the desk of each of us, through the kindness of some unknown friend, a document headed "Canteens in Soldiers Homes." The peculiarity of that document is that it contains letters relative to the eight Homes in which there are canteens, and not one word from the one Home in the United States where there is no canteen.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask the gentleman what Home is that?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The Washington Soldiers' Home. Mr. STAFFORD. That is not a National Home for Volunteer Soldiers, but a Home for those that served in the Regular Army, where the conditions are entirely different.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am not yielding. tleman is in part correct in saying it is not exactly on the same footing that these other Homes are. This is a Home for the regular soldier, paid for by themselves. Yet Congress has passed a law under which in that Home, which they themselves pay for, there is no canteen. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am from a family that has always gone to the wars. Two of my family went to the civil war; and I believe now and always have believed that the men on both sides of that great conflict went into that war, in the great majority of cases, from patriotic motives. Will any gentleman here rise in his place and say that the volunteers of 1861 to 1865 are less sober than the regular soldiers? I say that they were men who went into the Army from impulses of patriotism. They were not drunkards, and I am sure they will compare favorably—yes, even better than the regular soldier himself. Let me give you some figures. They are reports made from the Board of Managers as to the men who have committed offenses. Now, there was on an average 20 per cent in the Washington Home, where there is no canteen, who were up for some character of offense. In the Central Home, at Dayton, Ohio, there were 57 per cent; in the Northwestern Home, with a canteen, in Milwaukee, in the last nine years the average percentage has been 49½ per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman p. Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. At the Marion, Ind., Home they never had a canteen until a year ago. Can the gentleman state the percentage of cases that occurred there before and the percentage since the establishment of the canteen? Is there not a lack of figures that will corroborate his statement?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will give the gentleman the figures for the Marion Home when I get to it. In the Eastern Home, 30.7; in the Southern Home, down at Hampton, 54.1; in the Western Home, 24.3; in the Pacific Home, in California, less than 15.3. I am informed that there are practical physical difficulties in the way of getting out there to get liquor.

In the Marion Home, 34.5, and, as the gentleman from Wisconsin intimates, that is not exactly a fair comparison because until the last two years they didn't have a canteen there. well, I will read the figures for the whole nine years of these first seven without a canteen: Nineteen per cent, 23 per cent, 23 per cent, 37 per cent, 33 per cent, 36 per cent, 31 per cent, and 35 per cent. In 1905, when the canteen was put in, the figures jumped from 35 to 43 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The

Mr. BENNET of New York. In 1906 it was 49.3 per cent. So that since 1904, when the canteen was not there, until 1906, the last year that it has been there, the percentage of total offenses has increased from 35 per cent to 49 per cent.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my friend state to the House who compiled those statistics?

Mr. BENNET of New York. They are compiled right from these books which I have here.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Were they not compiled by the prohibition lobby that had its headquarters here in Washington?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If they were compiled by the prohibition lobby they were doing good work. Now, I make the statement on my responsibility as a Member, showing the sources of my information, and I will print them in the Record.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain how it came that during the two days at the Leavenworth Home, July 2 and 3, when the Home managers thought the law passed last year was in force, during which two days the canteen was closed, that there were twice the number of arrests made for drunkenness, resulting from drink obtained outside of the Home, than on the two succeeding days, when the canteen was open?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The fact that those two days were the 2d and 3d of July I think will sufficiently answer that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether any officer in control of the Soldiers' Home at Bath has undertaken to indict and prosecute the violators of their local antiwhisky law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If they have, I have not heard of it; and my friend from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] is one of the board of managers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is nothing to exclude them from doing that, is there?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not a thing. Our courts are open, and we have a very stringent liquor law, under which the sale of impure liquor is a crime. We have a better pure-food law than the National Government has, and under that law the sale of impure liquor is a crime.

Mr. GOULDEN. Those saloons are regularly licensed by the great State of New York; and my colleague [Mr. Bennet] was a member of the legislature, and I have no doubt he assisted in perfecting the license laws of that State.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My recollection is that I voted for a bill to prohibit a saloon within a mile of the Home in Bath. That is what I voted for. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman's colleagues did not.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to yield further. Now, some gentlemen, looking into this thing captiously, might say that these offenses were not offenses that sprang primarily from liquor, and that therefore the comparison was not exactly fair. So let us take the per cent of drunkenness. The great argument they make is that the men go out of the Homes and get ment they make is that the men go out of the Homes and get drunk in the towns. Here is Washington, with a percentage of 11.8 per cent; the Central Home, 20.8 per cent. These are the men who are tried and convicted in the Homes for being drunk. In the Northwestern Home, 18.7 per cent; in the Eastern, 13.1; in the Southern, 35 per cent. All these Homes have the canteen. The Washington Home, with a percentage of 11.8, does not; the Western, 14.8; the Pacific, where they can not get a drink anywhere, 5.1.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me right there

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will yield right there. It is a good place.

Mr. BENNET of New York. At Marion, 14.1 per cent; Danville, 15.3 per cent. So that at every single place where they have a canteen, with the exception of the Pacific Home, they have more drunkenness than in Washington, where they do not have the canteen. I can not see any reason on any ground why the canteen should be continued in these Homes The large proportion of the people in these Homes are sober; and when the representative of the Board of Managers was before the committee he was asked if he had consulted the inmates as to whether or not they wanted the canteen continued, and he said that he had not, and did not intend to, and did not think it would be good for discipline to ask the inmates whether they wanted the canteen continued.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will pardon a question right there, where are many letters from the surgeons and chaplains of these various Homes, all asking for the continuance of the canteen.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have never denied that. Mr. STAFFORD. Of course they do not know anything about the conditions of the Homes where they are in attendance

Mr. OVERSTREET of Georgia. I shall object, unless the time is limited to ten minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Georgia. I will withdraw the objection

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, without wearying the House with additional figures, I will say that the same proportion obtains under these heads that I have already read. The percentage for introducing liquor into the Homes. Every time the proportion is in favor of the Home in Washington.

That means bringing liquor from the outside into the Home.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know the average age of the inmates of the Washington Home?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to yield further. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to insert all of the figures in the RECORD.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I find that some gentlemen here are misled as to what the exact situation of the law is. On the 12th of June this House put in this provision:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available only under the conditions that no bar or canteen shall be maintained at said Homes for the sale of beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors.

That is, it stopped it during the life of that appropriation. The Senate amended that as follows:

Hereafter there shall not be maintained in any Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers any bar or canteen for the sale of beer or wine or other intoxicating liquors.

That technically threw the matter into conference, and the conferees, although both Houses had voted against the canteen, this House for the entire life of the appropriation and the Senate permanently, made this modification:

Provided. That no part of this appropriation shall be available after March 4, 1907—

Thus limiting the decision of both Houses-except on condition that no bar or canteen should be maintained at said Home for the sale of beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquor after said date.

I have been asked, Mr. Chairman, to criticise the conferees, but I shall not do so. I assume that the conferees did their duty; but I have a picture in my mind's eye of the gentleman from Minnesota staying out hour after hour, and day after day, agonizing to maintain the position of this House. I realize that he is defenseless against the attack, if it is made, because he is bound in honor not to disclose on the floor of the House what took place in the conference. Therefore I will assume, although he vigorously opposed this amendment last year on the floor, that when he got into conference he attempted with all the vigor of his great personality to maintain the rights. all the vigor of his great personality to maintain the rights of the House, and that the Senate conferees ran over him and forced a compromise which was no compromise, but a recession from the position of both Houses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will vote to continue to make the inmates of the National Homes as sober as we have made the inmates of the Home at Washington, and I know our constituents will approve of our action. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. What is it?

Mr. TAWNEY. Was whisky sold within a mile of the Home in Washington?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute of his time remaining.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Then I will answer the gentleman. That is a fact, and it is also the fact that within a mile and a half of the Central Home at Dayton no liquor is allowed to be sold, and yet the drunkenness in the Dayton Home is about four or five times as great as in the Home here.

Mr. NEVIN. Mr. Chairman, as to that I should like to be heard in my own right for a little while.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will modify that and make it three times.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Just a moment; I want to correct that one error. I did not have the figures. The figures for the Washington Home are 11.8 per cent, and the figures at the Dayton Home are 20.8 per cent—nearly twice as much.

Mr. BURLESON. Who made those figures? Mr. BENNET of New York. They were made right here by the Board of Managers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the Northwestern Branch of Mr. OTJEN. the Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee is in the district that I represent, and I would fail in my duty if I did not rise here and protest against the abolition of the canteen. [Applause.] average age of the men at the Soldiers' Home is nearly 70 years; Whatever their habits are fixed; they are as fixed as the rock. habits they have, they will carry with them to the grave, so it is nonsense to say that any men in the Home will be tempted and misled by the fact that there is a canteen there. It is not true that the canteen is a temptation. I speak in regard to the canteen at Milwaukee. The building is to one side, and if any man goes to it, he goes to it because he wants to go there. I do not say that if the canteen is run in the Home the men will not go out among the saloons. Some will. There are some men in the Home who do not drink, but the great bulk of the men there do drink, more or less, and if you close the canteen you will simply drive more of these men out into the saloons. I know the conditions of that Home. I know the conditions of the men there. I know the conditions around outside of the Home. The saloon men outside are glad to have this amendment adopted, so as to drive more of these men into these dens outside, where there is no control, where they take advantage of these old men, and where they manage, in one way or another, to get their pensions from them. Every official, from the manager to the chaplain, connected with the Homes says it will be a mistake to abolish the canteen. The chaplain at the Home says so. I can not stop to read all of these statements given in the hearings relating to canteens in the Homes. In these hearings there are statements from Archbishop Mess-mer, the archbishop of the Catholic Church. There is a statement here from Bishop Webb, of the Episcopal Church, and I want to read a few words of what he says. He says:

I feel very strongly that the abolishing of the canteen is a very grave mistake, even from the point of view of those who are trying to do it. The only possible result will be to drive the soldiers to the low taverns and dives outside of the grounds of the Home, where they are under no restraint of any kind. How anyone who knows anything about the conditions can think for a moment that any good is to be accomplished by any such action I do not see. The canteen, with its proper restrictions, is the greatest possible help to temperance in its true sense. I most sincerely hope that it will not be abolished.

There are statements here from the mayor of the city, from the chief of police, from the sheriff, from the judge of the police court, from the judge of the municipal court. There are statements here from Col. A. G. Weissert, who was commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic; from Gen. F. C. Winkler, one of our leading Grand Army men and a respected citizen, and from the best people of the city of Milwaukee. They have no other purpose than to tell the truth and to say that which is for the best interest of the soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the character of evidence that we are asked to believe in opposition to the amendment, which constitutes these hear-Now, listen to the very second answer that is given.

Major Harris. It has been a matter of experience in the history of the Homes that the tendency is for low groggeries to be located in the vicinity of the Homes, and it has always been the programme to keep the men from frequenting these vile and low places, where they not only sell the lowest kind of liquor, but they are run and occupied by thieves and prostitutes and everything that is vile.

Here is a statement as a foundation upon which the canteen is sought to be restored, that the tendency of these low, vile, inhuman criminal wretches is to concentrate at the doors of the What kind of a reflection is that upon the volunteer disabled soldiers of this country—that they are attracted to the resort of thieves, prostitutes, and scoundrels, that the tendency is for this kind of people to go there? Why that tendency? Why does evil segregate and go to any particular place except that it is more welcome there? Why do gamblers go to a certain place or town if there is no grambling there? Why do these infamous wretches that are here described, the low-dive people and the prostitutes, go to the doors of the old soldiers' Homes? I do not believe any such a story.

No soldier has had an opportunity to say anything in these hearings. No; the inmates are not to be consulted. The men whom they claim are so anxious to buy beer and wine, and things of that sort, who are going to fill up and patronize these -are they not worthy of giving evidence? the evidence of the governors of Homes, of chaplains, or some of them, and, strangely enough, it nearly always comes from where liquor or beer is manufactured or sold. Milwaukee is prolific in evidence here, and we know Milwaukee is prolific in something else—in beer. But I say, take the average old soldier. What is his age? It could not be under 65 or 70 years, and tell me that men of that age frequent these dens and debauch themselves, and on account of which we are asked to put the canteen inside of these Homes? Demanded not by the soldiers, but demanded by the people who make the vile stuff and make a profit out of selling it to these soldiers. Tell me of building up saloons in anticipation of these Homes? What is the anticipation of the character of the inmates? What is the anticipation of the character of the old soldiers? Is it on the supposition that they will rush in and patronize the low groggeries? Thank God, there are those who wore the gray and wore the blue in the South who are not filling these groggeries and saloons. There is no Home in the South that will attract twenty groggeries of the character described here, and tell me that this is done for the soldier who wore the blue? God knows I think too much of the volunteer soldier who fought for what he believed was right, who was not stimulated by something which stole away his brains while making him a reckless madman. I deny that men of this character patronize these kind of places. These arguments are inspired by the love of guilty gold and rest on greed and avarice that would rob an angel of his wings if they could be sold at a profit.

Mr. Chairman, I read from these hearings the report of the chaplain of Mountain Branch Home in Tennessee, which shows the effect of the canteen in that Home:

MOUNTAIN BRANCH, August 3, 1906.

Mountain Branch, August 3, 1996.

Sire: Replying to your letter of July 17, 1906, touching the beer hall, I have the honor to say, in answer to the question, "Has the influence of the beer hall, on the whole, been an advantage or a disadvantage to the members of the Home?" with a careful observation of fourteen months without the presence of the beer hall and nineteen months with it in existence and full operation, my judgment is that its influence is a disadvantage to the members.

To the question, "What, if any, effect has it had in restraining members accustomed to the use of alcoholic beverages from indulging in strong liquor?" will state a good per cent of the class above described content themselves with the use of beer, while there is another class anxious to break away from the drink habit and would, in my judgment, succeed but for the presence and influence of the beer hall in the Home.

ment, succeed but for the presence and influence of the beer hall in the Home.

Again, "What, if any, is the influence of the beer hall in promoting social acquaintance of the members and relieving the tendency to depression incident to barrack life?" In answer to this question, I feel sure that the presence and influence of the beer hall creates a fretful chasm between those who patronize the beer hall and those who do not, and thus hinders rather than helps sociability, while, with the age and decrepitude of those who patronize the beer hall, the habit seems to incline them to be more fault-finding, moody, and irritable.

Finally, to the question, "Would the discontinuance of the beer hall.

Finally, to the question, "Would the discontinuance of the beer hall, in your judgment, result in more or less drunkenness among members of the Home?" I beg to say that it is my impression that its discontinuance would result in very much less drinking and considerable less drunkenness The quest

The question is one of difficult solution, and I devoutly trust that the agitation will continue until that which is wisest and best for the members of the Home is attained.

Respectfully,

J. A. Ruble, Chaplain.

Hon. FRANKLIN MURPHY, President Board of Managers.

Mr. NEVIN rose. [Applause.]

Mr. NEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I have lived within 3 miles of the Central Branch of the Soldiers' Home since the time its foundation stone was laid. I know almost every inmate of it, because for three successive times I have canvassed it when I was a candidate for Congress. I know the men, I know them personally, and I know the history of that institution. Those soldiers are as good a class of men as ever lived on this earth. [Applause.] But they are like all men. They have gone through the war. They fought the battles of our country. They are feeble. They have wounds upon them; they have old age and sickness, and, like every other man, they want the right to take a drink if they see fit, and that is all you are giving them. [Applause.] You are not compelling them to drink. You are not asking them to drink, but you are simply saying to the soldier who fought your battles that if he wants a glass of beer he can have it. I know the history of these men, and I know the history of them so far as crime is concerned.

I do not care anything about your figures. For many years

I was prosecuting attorney in that county, and I know that five times the amount of crime was committed upon soldiers before the canteen was there than committed upon them since. plause.] I know when they used to go to our city of Dayton after their pension was paid, and would go home, and right along the railroad track leading out to the Soldiers' Home they were waylaid and robbed. Three murderers, sir, I tried in one term of people who robbed and murdered and killed old soldiers going to their Home when drunk. It has not been true since. I venture to say not 20 per cent of the crimes upon them have been committed since the canteen was in the Home that were committed before. They used to come down to Dayton. would go to the low groggeries, and they would be enticed there they would go to brothels; they would go here and there, and then they were robbed.

We had pocket-picking case after pocket-picking case, larceny case after larceny case in which a strong-armed man held them up and robbed them, who followed men with a dirk and dagger and who killed them for the few paltry dollars he could We have not any more of them out there. find on them. I speak in the cause of the good people of Dayton, and I speak in the interest of the soldiers of that Home when I ask of you, gentlemen, not to take away the canteen from that Central Branch. [Applause.]

Some gentleman has said here that the soldiers are not heard in this. I will venture the prediction now that if you will appoint a commission and leave it to the soldiers of the Home you will find that three-fourths will be in favor of it. I know they want it. The difference is that instead of coming down into the city and drinking whisky and being assaulted on the way home, they are taken as American citizens, treated kindly, given a glass of beer if they want it, and when some of them who are old and do not know how much to take, consume a little too much, they are restrained. They can not buy any more of the checks, and the result is that they are looked after and cared for. These men are not bums. These men are not the class of men that the gentleman from Tennessee would have you believe we have there.

Mr. SIMS. I did not say any such thing

NEVIN. That he would have us believe we have there. Mr. SIMS. I said that this gentleman on whose testimony you rely says they attract such people as that.

Mr. NEVIN. I said when they are led away that is true. But when you get out to the Home you will find a magnificent class of men who are intelligent, some of them speaking two or three languages, men who are magnificently read in history, men who are able to play music, to paint, and all of that. It is an astonishing fact that in these Soldiers' Homes you find some of the best educated men in all the country, and yet they are men who want to take a glass of beer. Why should it be cut off from them? It does not compel them to drink. not a saloon set up to tempt them, but it is a restraining influence. It is simply that those who are in their old age and who desire a glass of beer can have it, and nothing more. If they want it they will get it, but instead of getting it at the Soldiers' Home canteen they will go down to the city of Dayton and go into the groggeries and drink vile whisky. Then we will have the old régime, we will have the old thing that we had when I was prosecutor there, and we will have more trouble with the soldiers in the Home than all of the rest of our population put together. In the interest of good government I ask that you vote for the canteen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], who is against the amendment, and afterwards will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT].

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this morning I was called from the floor of this House into the room of the Committee on Appropriations to meet the commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, who is now in this city, Gen. R. P. Brown, of Zanesville, Ohio. He said, among other things, in my presence, and in the presence of several other gentlemen, Members of the House, "I come commissioned by the commandant of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio," which is the one just referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEVIN], "to urge upon you to continue the canteen in that Home." The commander in chief is himself, as it came out in the conversation, a member of the Board of Managers of the State Home at Sandusky, Ohio. He said that when he had his last report there were 1,353 inmates. It was asked him, "Would you have beer sold or the canteen established at the State Home at Sandusky?"

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Under his charge?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Under his charge?
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Under his charge; where he has a vote. He said, "I would not; never." In the one case he said he spoke by the request of the commandant. In the other the spirit of the commander of the Grand Army rose up and said, "I will protect my comrades by my votes where I have authority to do it and keep the canteen out."

Now, again, gentlemen, do not be unmindful of the fact that there is a new element coming into these national Homes, the young soldiers of the Spanish-American war, and in increasing numbers. We are putting the cup to their lips as well as to the lips of the gray-haired veteran of '61—the heroes of Santiago as well as the heroes of Appomattox. Then, again, side by side with the men who are in the State Homes they walk with the men who are in the national Home, elbow to elbow, under the same flag, having fought in the same battles, and yet you in this House say to these men in the State Homes, constituting a large majority of all the veterans of the civil war in all the Homes—you say to them through the State receiving aid, "You can not receive one dollar of aid for the care of these soldiers if you have a canteen in them.'

You make flesh of one and fowl of the other. You say because a man is in a State Home he must be prohibited from beer. You would say because a man is in a National Home, out of the same regiment, out of the same company, he can have

Where is the consistency, gentlemen?

Mr. GOULDEN. Does not my colleague think that if we allow the canteen to be continued in the National Homes we should do so in the States Homes?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. To be consistent, you can not do anything else.

Mr. GOULDEN. .That is what we are going to do. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The Home within a mile of the dome of this Capitol was established by law

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I ask two minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That Home was established by law requiring on the part of the soldier, and does to this day, to make an annual contribution from his pay in the Regular Army. Yet after they had built that Home and cared for themselves, given their lives to their country, not for four years nor five years, but for twenty, thirty, and forty years, literally their manhood life, you come up here and say to them in their old age, in the evening of life, "If you want these stimulants and ought to have them-within the sound of my voice-you say you can not have it, though you have given forty years to the service of your country." Is it consistent, gentlemen, to vote it? To be consistent, if you give it to one Home, give it to all. [Applause.]

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, it is precisely because I take advantage of the hope that this House will be consistent for at least a short period of time in the passage from one part of the bill to another part, that I speak what I would have said to a latter part of the bill with reference to canteens for soldiers and sailors in the State Homes.

Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the issue of rum or no rum, of drink or no drink, of temperance or intemperance, I refuse to let the impassioned orators on the other side place my name with the lower delights, although it might bring them the delights of men that have been transported into silent wreck.

It seems to me that this is not a time for a discussion of the temperance question. It is not a question of general morals. It is a question of specific prudence in the management of Soldiers and Sailors' Homes. It is a question not of theory but of practice. It is not a question of what constitutes the highest possible ideals for the old soldiers. It is not a question of what the old soldier ought to be. It is a question of human experience and of human happiness. [Applause.] It is a question that can be solved by the actual experience of men having these men and their welfare in charge. Not one of us would yield to another in our desire to make the last days of the relics of the wars comfortable and happy and moral as possible. My good friend, my colleague of New York, talks about making a man sober by legislation. You can not make a man sober by legislation any more than you can make him intelligent or rich by legislation. These men are no children. We have these men in the Homes because they have no other home.

And, when gentlemen talk of the enforcement of discipline against these men—have suggested turning them out again into the world to go to the poorhouse or to the county jail or the workhouse, we must make these men the best that it is possible for them to be; not as they ought to be, not as our fancy, not as our love, not as our hero worship would have them; but we must take these old men as they actually are [loud applause], scarred, tattered, life worn, struggle worn, relics of a strenuous time. Poor old men! Their habits were formed in the heat and passion of youth. Here they are. How will you treat them? I can not speak for the National Homes; I can not speak for other Homes; but in my own district are 2,200 old soldiers and sailors, averaging between 60 and 70 years of age, I suspect as high in morals, as high in intelligence, as regular and proper in conduct as the average collection of 2,200 remnants of any war by any people anywhere; but they are there with fixed habits. Now for three years that Home has been dry, and the town of Bath has been dry, but last fall the town of Bath went wet, and the experience has been unhappy in the management of the Home. By their unanimous vote the board of trustees, men of every rank and experience in life, have asked us to allow them to reestablish the old beer hall, where the soldiers, with music, find entertainment and drink in the Soldiers' Home. We have refused. Saloons have sprung up. Now, we can not change these men's habits by law. Can we let the spectacle be afforded to the young of Bath of the pitiful weaknesses of an increasingly helpless old age? [Applause.1

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentlman's time be extended five minutes,

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that all debate be now closed. [Cries of "Oh, no!"

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the motion. I did not know that there was such a general desire to extend the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FASSETT] desire further time?

Mr. FASSETT. Not that I think I can add anything to what other gentlemen have said-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask it for the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that my request be submitted to the House. I have asked unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. I think that is the thing for the Chair to submit.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be, but the Chair is trying to find out whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fassett] wants the time or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The request would not have been made if the gentleman had not wanted it, and I assume that it is not within the province of the Chair to inquire.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair thinks otherwise, and rules otherwise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I respectfully differ from the Chair. Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad if the House would extend me unanimous consent for a few minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman, I would not have asked for one moment's time if these people, who are my neighbors and who have given lives of consecrated service to this Home at Bath, did not believe it was important for the welfare of that Home and its inmates that this House should concede them the privilege of having the canteen in the Soldiers' Home. It is not pleasant to be here and to be confounded and confused in public thought or in public accusations with the friends of rum, with the friends of greed, with the friends of lust, with the friends of crime. Mr. Chairman, it is because I believe this House will in the end legislate for these soldiers along the line of what they are and of what conditions have made them and of what their lives may be made under proper and sane regulations that I have taken the floor at all. If legislation could make them perfect we would enact that legislation by unanimous consent, and they would be ideal heroes in every aspect and every relation of life. We did not ask these men whether they drank poison, we did not ask their habits when they were at the front risking their lives for the nation, and now when they are on their road to the long rest that knows no waking it is too late for us by legislation to try to make them perfect. And the very chaplains-the men who are charged with their spiritual welfare-say that it is more easy to reach them and sustain them and maintain them and elevate them if they are permitted this indulgence than otherwise.

am not so much voicing my own sentiments as the sentiments of the men who by association and training and devotion know what the old soldier needs, know what these old men are accustomed to, know that the elements of humanity are strong within them, and that they seek to get, as you and I have always sought to get, that which we were forbidden to have, if the fruits are sweet. [Applause.] And I say it ill becomes us to read each other moral lectures here. It is not a question of morals so much as the practical regulation of human beings, who need a kindly care rather than the restraining arm of violont law. Gentlemen have said: "Why not punish the saloon violout law. Gentlemen have said: "Why not punish the saloon keepers?" Have they ever tried to get a conviction for the violation of an excise law? It needs more evidence than would be needed to convict a man to be sent to the scaffold, ordinarily, to convict a man of selling intoxicating liquors.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FASSETT. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will answer for one, and will say yes, that I have tried under the Raines law in our State, and that as a result of the efforts of those who were associated with me, in the city of New York we have reduced the number of vile resorts known as "Raines law hotels" from 1,400 to fewer than 600, and it is perfectly possible under our law to do it.

Mr. FASSETT. That is an entirely different proposition. Mr. Chairman, I thank the House for its courtesy. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be closed at fifteen minutes to 10 o'clock, the time to be divided equally for and against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate be closed at fifteen minutes of 10 o'clock.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the question is simply whether this House or the committee is to be controlled in its decision of this question by sentiment—I shall not apply an adjective to the word sentiment—or by practical experience and by common sense. I for one propose to be controlled when I cast my vote by the advice of those who have managed the Soldiers' Homes heretofore.

A few weeks ago the National Board for these Homes held a meeting in the city of Washington, and, as is well known, the President of the United States is president of that Board, and that Board consists of a number of very distinguished gentlemen, all temperance men, and the majority of them prohibitionists. That Board passed a resolution upon the motion of the junior Senator from Missouri—

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not yield. Upon the motion of the junior Senator from Missouri a resolution was unanimously passed, asking Congress to continue the canteen. I for one propose to be controlled by the practical experience that these men have had in the management of the Homes. The comparison between the Soldiers' Home here and the National Home for Volunteer Soldiers is not correct and does not hold good. The Soldiers' Home here in Washington is under the discipline of the War Department, while to the National Home only old veterans are admitted. As to the statistics submitted by my friend from New York [Mr. Bennet] I desire merely to refer to the report of Governor M. R. Patrick, of the Central Branch, in which he says that the official reports of Hon. Ira Crocker give the number of arrests of members from July 12, 1885, to July 1, 1886, at 486, while for the same length of time after the beer hall was opened, from July 1, 1886, to July 1, 1887, the arrests were 254, a difference of 212.

The CHAIRMAN. There were thirteen minutes of time remaining when the gentleman from Missouri was recognized At that time the gentlemen who were opposed to this amendment had taken forty-five minutes and only twenty-seven minutes for those in favor of the amendment. Therefore the Chair thinks that in all fairness the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], who is to close, should have the remainder of the time. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri said that this was a question of common sense against sentiment—sentiment without an opprobrious epithet, an epithet I presume he could have supplied to the sentiment of this character if the occasion had been seemly.

Mr. Chairman, to my mind this is an important occasion, and this question is an important one for the membership of this House. Mr. Chairman, this is the only time that this Congress will have an opportunity or has had an opportunity to range itself upon one of the great moral questions that agitate the American people. [Applause.] This is the only time that this House of Representatives has had an opportunity to see whether its sentiments shall be in favor of that temperance that so many of our people are the advocates of or whether we shall cast our influence on the other side—the side of rum, as the gentlemen have said.

Mr. Chairman, I am astonished particularly at the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt]. It is not long since we heard how eloquently he pleaded for peace, for quiet, for the good order of the universe and of the world. He was willing to deprive his Government of all the power of self-defense in the interest of peace, and yet, Mr. Chairman, more men are slaughtered by rum each year than by war in any ten years of the world's history. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if you measure it by money, rum costs the people of the United States thirteen hundred millions of dollars every year—more than the cost of all of the armies of Europe during the last twelve months. Two hundred thousand men are estimated to die through the influence of rum Yet during all the war of the rebellion, during all of that four years of slaughter, but 67,000 men died wearing the uniform of blue on all the battlefields of four years. Chairman, that it is an evil every man confesses. We may not do much, we may not accomplish much in checking its ravages, in stopping its sway, but I can say in this House that so far as the opportunity goes, so far as it is within our power, we will cast our influence on the side of morals, in the interest of peace—peace—peace throughout the world—peace in the homes, quiet and order in American homes!

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HEPBURN. I certainly will.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is not this amendment in the interest of rum, rather than temperance?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would say not, so far as the votes of this House are concerned. I have not yet been taught in that school where certain gentlemen seem to indicate they have been, that it is easier to do that which it is difficult to do. That is their theory. They say that if we do throw difficulties around the drunkenness of these men they will be more drunken. In proportion as we build barriers around them they will be able to scale and overcome them. That is their theory. They tell us that if these men do not have the opportunity to be drunk they will become drunk. Is there philosophy in that? That is the answer to the gentleman's query.

Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with these Homes. know whether gentlemen who have extolled the canteen have been dispassionate in their statements or not, but I can not believe that removing the opportunity for drunkenness increases drunkenness. I do not believe that the appetite for liquor will be promoted and increased by throwing impediment in the way of the indulgence in that appetite; and so I vote against the canteen. I believe it is a harm; I believe we at least ought not to throw our influence on that pernicious side; and therefore I shall not vote as will my friend from Missouri [Mr. Bar-THOLDT]. [Applause.]

by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 88.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.
Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. Bowersock to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—aves 91,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

State or Territorial Homes for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors: For continuing aid to State or Territorial Homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $1.175.000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial Home until its laws, rules, or regulations respecting the pensions of its inmates be made to conform to the provisions of section 4 of an act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act prescribing regulations for the Soldiers' Home located at Washington, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;" but the above proviso shall not apply to any State or Territorial Home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial Home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 158, beginning with line 21, strike out the proviso and the rest of lines 21, 22, 23, and 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered

The CHARLES AND THE QUESTION IS OF THE AMERICAN THE QUESTION WAS TAKEN; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word just for the purpose of reading to this committee the very short statement in the RECORD touching upon soldiers of the Army conducting saloons on the outside of their posts, a very astonishing statement, I dare say, to all of you, as it was to me. I read from page 592 of the RECORD of December 10, 1906, from a speech of one of the Senators from Ohio, who read the testimony of G. W. H. Rucker in connection with the Brownsville matter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, to what is the gentleman speaking?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am speaking to a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is right to waste time in trying to get into the Brownsville affair.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is not my purpose at all, and I wish the Brownsville matter never had occurred. God knows I am sick and tired of it, as everybody else is. I read as follows:

Then there is the testimony of G. W. H. Rucker:

"About Monday night last, about half past 8, I took two cases of soda water to saloon near edge of town. There were about thirty or forty negroes inside, gambling, as near as I can ascertain about the crowd, and I heard three or four negroes making threats that they would die and go to heaven before they would go back into post, but do not know what the conversation was about. Yes; I know if I would see this soldier again I would recognize him. I could pick him out of a crowd. He was a soldier. Yesterday morning I passed this negro saloon, but nobody was there. About 12 o'clock, it must have been, as I was picking up empty cases, I went to this saloon, and the proprietor told me that he did not need any 'pop,' as the boys had been having a little trouble with the citizens, and they were all in the post. He is working for two soldiers who are in the post, who own the saloon. He said that if a gun had been fired last night that Company C could have come out without any orders, and would run every man out of town; that this Company C could whip the whole State of Texas."

Now, that is not my statement: that is the statement of Mr.

Now, that is not my statement; that is the statement of Mr. G. W. H. Rucker, and is printed in the RECORD and quoted by Senator Foraker—a most remarkable thing, Mr. Chairman, that the soldiers wearing the uniform of the American Army are conducting saloons on the outside of posts where they are stationed to preserve order and peace and sobriety and to glorify and uphold the American Army.

Now, it seems to me that the distinguished Secretary of War, Judge Taft, ought to know this, and hence I put it in the RECORD. I say it is a great outrage to permit that sort of thing. can not, Mr. Chairman, read the whole paragraph, because I do not want to get connected with my proposition the unfortunate Brownsville matter, but for the purpose of putting it in the RECORD, to call it to the attention of this great representative body of the people, the country, and that splendid Secretary of War, Judge Taft. Simply for those reasons I rose in my seat to say this much.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Back pay and bounty: For payment of amounts for arrears of pay of two and three year volunteers, for bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, for bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, and for amounts for commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States, and to soldiers on furlough, that may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1908, $200,000: Provided, That in all cases hereafter so certified the said accounting officers shall, in stating balances, follow the decisions of the United States Supreme Court or of the Court of Claims of the United States after the time for appeal has expired, if no appeal be taken, without regard to former settlements or adjudications by their predecessors.

Mr. GARRETT Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of condenses.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the proviso for the purpose of asking the chairman for information as to that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will state that under the rule of the Treasury Department certain claims for back pay and bounty were rejected. Subsequently the Court of Claims of the United States in other similar cases decided in conflict with the auditing officers of the Treasury Department. The result of that simply is that under the rule of the Treasury, they will not reopen a settlement once made. Every claimant goes to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims then calls on the Treasury Department for the record. record is transcribed and sent to the Court of Claims. Court of Claims then gives judgment if the claimant is entitled to judgment. Then the matter is recertified to the Treasury Department to pay, and the result is the Government has to pay the claim, just the same. This provision was drafted by the law officers of the Government after consultation with the Treasury official, one of the law officers, charged with the defense of these claims. He insists that the cost, expense, and labor are vastly increased by this circuitous settlement of going through the Court of Claims, calling on the Treasury, the Treasury furnishing the record, the Court of Claims entering judgment, and the judgment being certified back to the Treasury, and this can be avoided by simply providing that where the Supreme Court of the United States or the Court of Claims has decided that a certain claim is a valid claim against the United States, under this paragraph the Treasury Department will reopen the case and adjudicate the claim, thus avoiding this unnecessary labor and expense.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me ask the gentleman-my ideas are very hazy about this; I have only a hint of it, and I am asking purely for information. I hope the gentleman will understand. I am not trying to delay matters— Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Under the rule of the Department, is it not true there is a certain ruling there as to cadets in West Point which has been overturned by the Supreme Court or the Court of Claims?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not with reference to this item. sibly that may be true, but it has nothing to do with this item.

Mr. GARRETT. As a matter of fact, as I understand-Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is simply back pay and bounty of volunteers of the civil war.

Mr. GARRETT. And this will not in fact result in any increase in expenditure, but will save money?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It will not increase expenditures, but will save money and a large amount of labor.

Mr. GARRETT. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Convention with Mexico: Toward the construction of a dam for storing and delivering 60,000 acre-feet of water annually, in the bed of the Rio Grande at the point where the headworks of the Acequia Madre now exists, above the city of Juarez, Mexico, as provided by a convention between the United States and Mexico, proclaimed January 16, 1907, $1,000,000, to be available as needed and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in connection with the irrigation project on the Rio Grande: Provided, That the balance of the cost of said irrigation project over and above the amount herein appropriated shall be allotted by the Secretary of the Interior as may be needed and as may be available from time to time from the reclamation fund and collected from the settlers and owners of the land benefited under the provisions of the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902, and acts supplemental thereto or amendatory thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the proviso for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. I have talked with the gentleman from Iowa about this, and I understand something about it. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in his opinion there is any possibility of compelling the payment of the entire cost of this work out of the reclamation fund if this appropriation should now be stricken

If you read the proviso-Mr. TAWNEY.

Mr. MANN. Well, this carries an appropriation of a million dollars for the construction of this dam in connection with the Rio Grande, and the proviso provides the balance shall be paid out of the reclamation fund. What I wish to ask the gentle-man is whether the United States Government—and I am sure they have given careful study to the subject—whether there is any possibility of compelling the payment of the cost of all of this work out of the reclamation fund, instead of a part out of the National Treasury?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that is a very difficult question to answer. The committee considered the matter very carefully.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to detain the House very long.

I wish the gentleman's opinion very briefly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Geological Survey has made this apportionment, or rather the Department of the Interior and the Department of State. All that we could possibly do was by affirmative legislation or declaration, and say that the balance of this money and the balance of the cost of this construction must be paid out of the reclamation fund. Now, it is for Congress in the future, if a demand comes from the Reclamation Bureau for an appropriation in addition to this $1,000,000, to simply refer to this provision, and they have promised to build the rest out of the fund or to charge the balance to the land, or refuse the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks this is the best possible provision we can get for the protection of the Treasury?

Mr. TAWNEY. Absolutely; it is the only protection I can conceive of. This leaves a future appropriation, if one is asked for, entirely in the hands of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I supposed when the irrigation act was passed that that ended specific appropriations out of the Treasury for irrigation purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that is the general impression in the House, but we did not know that there was about $33,000,000 of alleged claims filed in the State Department which would be used as the basis of a convention between the United States and Mexico, whereby the Government of the United States would obligate itself to give to the people of Mexico 60,000 acre-feet of water every year.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court-house and jail, Nome, Alaska: For the erection of a court-house and jail at Nome, Alaska, $30,000, to be immediately available, and the $10,000 appropriated by the sundry civil act of June 30, 1906, for the erection of a jail and repairs to the court-house at Nome

Alaska, is hereby made available for the erection of the new building herein provided for, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to turn over to the Department of Justice, as a site for the erection of this building, so much of the reservation at Nome, Alaska, under the control of the Treasury Department as may be necessary for a proper site and grounds for the new building; to be expended under the direction of the court of the second division of the district of Alaska, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair). The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 162, in line 6, strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Defense of suits before Spanish Treaty Claims Commission: For salaries and expenses in defense of claims before the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, including salaries of Assistant Attorney-General in charge as fixed by law, and of assistant attorneys and necessary employees in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Attorney-General, to be expended under his direction, so much of the provisions of the act of March 2, 1901, providing for the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, as are in conflict herewith not-withstanding, $92,000, of which not exceeding $200 may be expended for law books and books of reference.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether or not there is a probability that man of the committee whether or not there is a probability that this Commission will ever complete its work.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that it is the judgment of the committee that if the limitations that are written into this appropriation bill becomes a law it will come to an end very much quicker than it otherwise would.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What is the work that is being done by the Commission? Are they doing anything besides drawing their salaries?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are denying and rejecting a great many claims. It may be said to the credit of the Commission that they are not passing favorably upon 1 great many, but pass unfavorably upon a great many.

Mr. MANN. They are disposing of all the claims as rapidly as they come to an issue, I may say to the gentleman. The principal difficulty has been to take testimony and get the case to an issue.

Mr. TAWNEY. The principal difficulty is the getting of the testimony taken, the testimony of the claimant or the Govern-

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think the provision in the next paragraph of the bill will dispose of three-fourths of the cases in ninety days, if it passes the House and the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I think I can tell the gentleman what the diffi-culty is. The Commission has made a certain ruling in regard to the liability of the Government that is adverse to a large number of claims. The attorneys for the claimants have therefore persistently declined to bring their cases to an issue for the purpose, if possible, of getting a decision in some other way, from some court which would allow these claims. The Commission is without the power to compel them to put these claims to issue, and so they have tried to dispose of them.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was stated a year ago that the work ought to be completed in at least a year from that time. Now I see that this appropriation contemplates at least another in salaries for the Commissioners and other officers

Mr. MANN. The reason I give the gentleman is the absolutely correct reason. The great majority of these claims are based upon a certain proposition as to the liability of the Government. The Commission, in deciding a case, decided that the Comment was not liable. The attorneys of the claimants The attorneys of the claimants, Government was not liable. knowing that if they put their claims to issue and have the claims determined will have them determined adversely to that ruling, are holding back their claims for the purpose of endeav-oring to get a decision from the court somewhere which would overturn the decision of the Commission.

And the provision in the bill, on which I congratulate the committee in reporting, fixes it in such a manner that these claims must be prosecuted, and they must put up the money so that they can be prosecuted. The gentleman understands that the Government so far pays all the cost of taking the testimony in these cases

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. On both sides?

Mr. MANN. On both sides.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It is difficult to understand why the Government should pay the expenses of a claimant to get testimony against it in this class of cases.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would like to say to the gentleman from Kansas the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois is correct, but I think this additional statement might be given. As long as the Government is willing to pay for taking all the testimony of the claimants in cases of that kind before this Commission, these gentlemen, who realize that under the prece dents they are doomed to defeat, are still willing to go on and take their testimony, as it does not cost them anything; and if they do not succeed, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, in gaining a reversal of the decision of the Commission or an act of Congress that will give them some relief, they will at least have secured a permanent record of the evidence for one hundred years to come, so that they or their descendants may knock at the doors of Congress and ask for relief and claim that the record is in their favor.

I will say to the gentleman the information I Mr. MANN. got of this I did not receive from the Commission, but have received by talking to a number of attorneys of claimants, who have bitterly complained of the ruling of the Commission and have stated that so long as they could prevent it they never would bring their claims to an issue until they got a ruling re-versing the decision of the Commission by some court.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am hoping that the legisla-tion proposed on this bill will result in terminating this Commission. I would like to see one commission or bureau that was started for the purpose of doing a particular work terminate some' time.

Mr. MANN. I think the provision made by the Committee on Appropriations is one of the most brilliant flank movements that I have ever heard of. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I congratulate the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Spanish Treaty Claims Commission: For expenses of taking testimony abroad, $25,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available unless the said Spanish Treaty Claims Commission shall, within sixty days from the passage of this act, ascertain the average cost of taking the claimant's evidence, including cross-examination of claimant's witnesses, in all cases heretofore tried, which average shall be computed by first ascertaining the average cost of taking evidence, per page, by dividing the whole sum expended from appropriations under this head by the total number of pages of evidence taken in all cases and multiplying this cost per page by the number of pages of claimant's evidence taken in cases heretofore tried and dividing this by the number of cases so tried, and having so ascertained the average cost of taking claimant's evidence shall, by rule, require every claimant to pay, in the first instance, the costs of taking his evidence at such average price per page, and to deposit with the clerk of the Commission within thirty days, for the purpose of paying such costs, the amounts so found to be the average cost of taking claimant's evidence, and that upon failure of any claimant to make such a deposit within the time so limited, his claim shall be dismissed with prejudice.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this proviso, beginning on line 13 to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not subject to the point of order. It is an express limitation on the appropriation, and it does not require anything to be done.

Mr. CANDLER. I will submit to the Chair for a ruling on it.

It is clearly legislation and contrary to the statute to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no. There is no statute on the subject.

Mr. CANDLER. There is a statute.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no; not at all.
Mr. CANDLER. My information is that there is an act of Congress. That comes to me from a source that I understand to be accurate.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I know the gentleman is sincere, but there is no statute, and it is a limitation.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on the point of order. In the latter part of the proviso it is provided that unless the claimant pays a certain amount of money within thirty days his claim shall be dismissed with prejudice. certainly is legislation, contrary to existing law, and is amenable to the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is not the provision at all. The limitation is that this appropriation shall not be available unless a certain specific rule is made, which is entirely optional with the Commission to adopt; and if it is adopted it does not provide for the dismissal of the claim.

Mr. PARKER. It says if the parties do not pay the amount fixed by this Commission their claims shall be dismissed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It does not say that. Mr. PARKER. Then what does it say?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It says that the appropriation shall not be available unless they comply with the rule which may be made by the Commission. It simply means that the appropriation will not become available if the rule is not made.

I do not see it that way. Mr. PARKER.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It involves the same principle as was involved in the question of the State Homes and the National Homes

'Mr. PARKER. There is no such rule. It says that no part of the appropriation shall be available unless the said Spanish Treaty Claims Commission shall, within sixty days from the passage of this act, ascertain the average cost of taking the claimant's evidence; then it shows how to do it, and then it goes on to say that the claimant must pay in the first instance the costs of taking his evidence and to deposit the money with the clerk of the Commission within thirty days.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; it says that the Commission shall by rule require every claimant to pay these advance costs.

Mr. PARKER. Having ascertained this cost of taking claimant's evidence, it shall by rule order the claimant to pay the costs, or else his claim shall be dismissed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And the money is not available unless they adopt such a rule, but it is available if they do.

Mr. PARKER. It seems to me this is a very roundabout way of reaching a result.

Mr. CANDLER. Is it optional with the Commission? * * * Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They are not required to spend the money for taking the testimony if they do not want to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRUMPACKEB). The question is a very close one, but this is a limitation in form, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Then I move to strike out the proviso.

When this Spanish Treaty Claims Commission was created and cases were filed before it, the number of cases presented amounted to 542. They have disposed of 342 cases, leaving yet to be disposed of by this Commission 200 cases. Upon the recommendation of the Commission it, was provided that the Government should pay the expense of taking the testimony for the claimant, with the exception of the payment of the witness fees. I see the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Smith] shakes his head, and therefore I will read it. In the Commission's letter to the President, dated April 7, 1906, it is said that liberal arrangements were made to pay for the interpreters, commissions. sioners, and stenographers, leaving only the witness fees to be paid by the claimants.

Now, the only reason why I make this motion is because the Government did assume certain responsibility in reference to these claims. It provided a forum in which they could be They invited the claimants to present their claims in this form for consideration. They went further and provided that they would pay for the taking of this testimony, the interpreters, commissioners, and stenographers, but that claimants should pay the witness fees. Having tried and disposed of 300 cases under that provision, is it now just and right to the remaining 200 cases to require them to assume greater were imposed upon those whose cases have burdens than already been disposed of?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman happen to have any information as to how many cases of those 300 that have been disposed of were tried and argued either upon the law or facts?

Mr. CANDLER. I could not tell you accurately.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The majority of them were Maine

Mr. CANDLER. Quite a number were argued. The exact number I do not know.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand not to exceed seven or eight.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, yes; a much greater number than that. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is it not a fact that not to exceed ten or fifteen cases have been argued, either upon questions of law or fact, within the last seven or eight years?

Mr. CANDLER. I can not give the gentleman the information he wishes

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is my information.

Mr. CANDLER. All I know I get from the report of the Commission, in which they state that 542 cases were filed before them, and that they have tried and disposed of 342 cases, leaving 200 yet to be disposed of. I think those 200 are entitled to the same consideration at the hands of the Government as the 342 that have been disposed of, and I do not believe an

Then there is one other question, that they require this deposit to be made within thirty days, and unless the deposit is made within thirty days the case shall be dismissed with preju-That means that they can not come back into court.

do not believe that is sufficient time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They have three months.

Mr. CANDLER. It says that they shall deposit the money with the clerk of the Commission within thirty days.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And the Commission has sixty days in which to promulgate the rule.

Mr. CANDLER. Some of the claimants live in Cuba and in other countries, and can not be communicated with promptly.
All the claimants should be given the same treatment at the hands of the Government, and we should not treat 342 one way and then impose additional burdens on the 200 whose cases yet remain to be disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, without any action of Congress or any statute as a basis for it, proceeded to adopt the most extraor-dinary rule ever heard of in any tribunal of a judicial character. It provided that the Government of the United States should pay not only its own costs, but all the costs of commissioners, interpreters, and stenographers to take the claimants' evidence in an attempt to prove claims against the United The result was not especially obnoxious until now, when it appears that men whose claims are already defeated in this Commission by the establishment of precedents conclusive as to their determination are still willing, if the Government of the United States will pay the costs, to take their testimony, or at least pretend that they want to take their testimony, so as to delay the matter, and this committee thought that this Commission should not be kept going forever at a cost of something like $200,000 a year in order that these gentlemen may, at the Government expense, make up a record on which they and their descendants may appeal from time to time to the Congress of the United States for generations yet to come for the payment of claims rejected by the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission.

The law required that the claimants should file their claims within a specific time or the claims would be forever barred. Consequently if these claims are dismissed their rights are terminated, and that is why it says that they shall be dismissed with prejudice, because no claims could be filed hereafter, they being barred.

The purpose was to enact the rule that prevails in every court of justice that the claimants must pay the expense in the first instance of their own witnesses and the taking of their own testimony.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that rule had prevailed from the beginning, would the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission be in existence now

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not; and if any Member wants to end this Commission, he ought to vote for this provision of

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As a member of the subcommittee, I do not intend to oppose the action of the committee; but I have felt that I ought to make a brief statement concerning this rule. rule had been adopted in the beginning, no one could have doubted its justice. I think its justice can be seriously doubted now after so long a period of time has elapsed and after so many cases have been tried.

There is no doubt that the rule will accomplish a useful purpose, because, unquestionably, it will wind up the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, which is "a consummation devoutly to be wished." I wish, however, that we had wound it up in I wish, however, that we had wound it up in another way. A year ago I sought to get a bill passed abolishing the Commission and transferring its jurisdiction to the Court of Claims, which is a permanent tribunal, constantly deciding questions of international law, and splendidly equipped to do justice between the Government of the United States and the claimants.

It is my own opinion that the rules of decision laid down by this Commission were not sound as a matter of international law, and that they have operated to do injustice to the claimants. The claimants, believing that they could not succeed under the rules of decision laid down by the Commission, have sought by every practice to avoid taking their evidence and perfecting their cases and bringing them to an issue, and so the claimants have been playing back and forth, seeking to get an appeal to some other court. A bill providing for a writ of certiorari from the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission to the Supreme Court has been pending in Congress. I believe it was reported by one branch at one time, but failed to pass. have been hoping to get a writ of certiorari so that the decision of the Claims Commission could be reviewed. If they do not succeed in getting that writ unquestionably the labors of this Commission will be brought to an end within six months after the adjournment of this Congress. I am glad to have the work of the Commission ended, but I am extremely sorry that in bringing it to an end we have done substantial injustice to the claimants where we assumed an obligation under the treaty with Spain to do justice to them.

[Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think that the measure of injustice that may be done by this rule has been more than mitigated by the great and unprecedented concession which has been made by the Government in paying for the testimony that has been taken in their cases?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; I regard the payments by the Government for the taking of the testimony in the light of a Barmecide feast. The Government has invited these claimants to come to its banquet; it has spread its board and put upon the table fine linen and shining glass, but it has procured for them no viands to eat. The Government has provided for the taking of the testimony and then provided the Commission which adopted a rule that excluded the claimants from any possibility,

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to return to page 126, for the purpose of offering the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, that section to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers in his amendment was passed without prejudice, and it does not require unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section after line 7, page 126, the following: "Lincoln memorial shaft or tablet: To aid in the construction of the Abraham Lincoln memorial shaft or tablet at Hodgensville, Ky., to be paid to the chairman of the commission appointed by the governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky under an act of the general assembly of that State approved March 16, 1906, the sum of $10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, $1,300,000, to include payment for services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, Advances to United States marshals, in accordance with existing law, may be made from the proper appropriations, as herein provided, immediately upon the passage of this act; but no disbursements shall be made prior to July 1, 1907, by said disbursing officers from the funds thus advanced, and no disbursements shall be made therefrom to liquidate expenses for the fiscal year 1907 or prior years: Provided, That the salaries of the United States marshals for the eastern and western districts of the State of Oklahoma shall be at the rate of $4,500 each for the fiscal years 1907 and 1908.

Mr. MCON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order account.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso of the paragraph at the bottom of page 168.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order to the proviso in the paragraph beginning at

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the ground of the point of order?
Mr. MACON. That it increases the salaries of officers.
Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps it is subject to the point of order, but I desire first to state to the gentleman from Arkansas that if this proviso is not added, and Oklahoma comes into the Union before the end of the next fiscal year before Congress convenes, there will be no provision whatever for the organization of the district attorney's office and no provision whatever for the payment of the marshal's or the district attorney's salaries. It is in anticipation——
Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any marshals in Arkansas who are receiving the sum of $5,000 per annum, and I do not know why Oklahoma's marshals should have preference over them in the matter of salary.

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee was influenced by the fact—Mr. MACON. If the gentleman will make the salary $4,000, just the same as other marshals are getting, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would say that it is contemplated that the work in the State of Oklahoma both of the district attorney and of the marshal at first, at least for several years, until the rights of the Indians are fully settled, will be infinitely greater than the work of the marshals and the district attorneys in the State of Arkansas. If the gentleman wants to make the point of order he can.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word-

Mr. MACON. But the last word is already out.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Maybe I can show to my good friend from Arkansas that while he is perfectly sincere in making his objection there are reasons why the salary ought to be different. Arkansas has been a good State of this Union for a long, long time. There are no Indians in it that I know of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Except good ones.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If there are, they are good ones.

There are Indians in Oklahoma. It is a new country

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. In Arkansas the marshals get $4,000 per year, and that means for their entire time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I don't know anything about

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Ordinarily the marshal gives his time for the salary.

I demand the regular order. Mr. MANN.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no last word to that paragraph. It is out of the bill, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been sustained to a portion of the paragraph only. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not know anything about Indians in Arkansas. I never heard of any of them in a long time, and I am sure that none of them are ever sent to Congress. Here is Oklahoma; it is a Territory that is full of lawless people, compared to Arkansas and Tennessee and any other old State.

It has many Indians in it, it is a new country, and the marshal will have more dangerous work to do and will have more work to do, so I think that if $4,000 is paid an attorney in Arkansas, it is worth $4,500 in the Territory of Oklahoma, soon to be a State, and that is why I hope my friend will withdraw his opposition.

Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman that I can not consent to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be con-The Clerk will read. sidered as withdrawn.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MACON. I am a Christian when it comes to opposing increases of salaries on appropriation bills. I know that if these salaries are fixed at $4,500 that will be $500 more than the marshals in my own State are receiving——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But you have no Indians.
Mr. MACON. Wait until I get through. There will be a time in the nature of things, perhaps, when Oklahoma will become as civilized as Tennessee, as Arkansas, or any other State in the Union, and then her officers should not receive higher salaries than officers of other States; but if they are fixed higher now, they will not be reduced then, and gentlemen know it, I dare say, and I say that within the history of the life of the gentleman from Tennessee he has never known where a salary was once fixed for an officer of this Government and afterwards reduced because of changed conditions. They are always increased—not reduced. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, $460,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of the salaries of regularly appointed clerks to United States district attorneys for services rendered during vacancy in the offices of the United States district attorney: Provided, That the salaries of the United States attorneys for the eastern and western districts of the State of Oklahoma shall be at the rate of $5,000 each for the fiscal veers 1907 and 1908. State of Oklahoma s years 1907 and 1908

Mr. MACON. I make a point of order against the proviso in the paragraph just read.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There are two provisos. The gentleman means the last one?

Mr. MACON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

All laws fixing the annual salaries of the United States attorney for the southern district of New York, and of assistants in his office, shall hereafter apply in all respects to and be construed as fixing the annual salaries of the United States attorney for the northern district of Illinois, and of assistants in his office.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph just read. I do not like to see salaries fixed

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. MACON. I will reserve the point of order; yes

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman I understand the reason for this item is this: A great deal of work in connection with the prosecution of the antitrust laws and violations of interstate-commerce laws is now being carried on at Chicago, the northern district of Illinois,

Under the law as it now stands the assistant district attorneys in the city of New York are not limited to salaries of $2,500. In Chicago they are limited to salaries of $2,500. impossible in the city of Chicago to obtain and keep assistant district attorneys who are qualified to do the antitrust work and violations of interstate commerce law work for that price. The result of that is that these attorneys are employed out of the trust fund by the Government without being under the control of the district attorney, and the purpose of this amend-ment is that these assistant attorneys shall be under the control of the district attorney, so that that office shall be engaged in the prosecution of these violations. There are now pending prosecutions against the Standard Oil Company at the office in Chicago some three thousand and more counts in eight different items. It requires expert work to try those cases. The attorney for the defense, I will say to my friend from Arkansas, in that case receives a salary of $100,000. It can not be expected that assistant district attorneys can be obtained sufficient to cope with these tried and expert criminal lawyers at a salary of $2,500, and the only purpose of this is to permit the district attorney to increase the salaries of these assistant attorneys under his control, to place them under the control of the assistant district attorney. It is distinctly in the interest, I may say to my friend, of the prosecution of persons violating the antitrust and interstate-commerce laws. If it were not for that distinctive purpose, I would not ask the gentleman, if he can see his way, to withdraw the point or order.

Mr. MACON. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I will say that I never knew an honest and conscientious officer that would not discharge the duties of his office for a small salary just as efficiently as he would for a large one, if he assumed the obligation.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman. Mr. MACON. I never understood that the salary had anything to do with the efficient discharge of the duty if the officer assumed an obligation to perform the duty.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is perfectly correct. agree with him in his statement. But this is the point. You can not obtain in the city of Chicago experienced attorneys as assistant district attorneys at a salary of $2,500 to cope with these big cases. Why, Mr. Chairman, the district attorney's office has lost a number of assistant district attorneys in the last two or three years because they have gone out and obtained a $5,000 or a $10,000 salary. Now, all that is expected here is to pay a reasonable salary; but you can not try these cases on this basis

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

Mr. TAWNEY. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist upon his point of Mr. MACON. I do. Mr. SULLIVAN. The gentleman has stated that he will reserve his point of order for two or three minutes longer, and I ask that the Chair recognize me in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. Regular order has been demanded, and that is equivalent to an objection. The point of order has already been sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries, including pay of officials and employees, as follows: Warden, $4,000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplain, $1,500; chief cierk, $1,800; physician, $1,600; bookkeeper and record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; six clerks, at $900 each; telephone operator, $4,80; engineer and electrician, $1,500; assistant engineer and electrician, $1,200; two captains of watch, at $1,000 each; steward and store-keeper, $900; superintendent of farm and transportation, $900; two teamsters, at $600 each; cook, and baker, at $720 each; guards, at $70 per month each, $26,000; in all, $49,220.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] asks unanimous consent to return to page 169. For what purpose?

Mr. MACON I do that for the purpose of withdrawing a point of order that I made upon the last paragraph on that page.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $124,420.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter here from the superintendent of the Capitol in respect to the subject-matter of I would like to have it printed in the RECORD this amendment. in connection with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The letter is as follows:

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING-APPROPRIATIONS AND REPORTS. Office Building, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., February 23, 1907.

Washington, D. C., February 23, 1907.

Hon. James A. Tawney,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Sir: I am sorry that my report on the House office building, made to the House Commission under date of December 1 last, was not printed prior to the discussion on the floor the other evening. It would have shown the preliminary difficulties encountered before the construction of the building could proceed. It would have pointed out the fact that the twin tunnel of the Pennsylvania Railroad runs under the eastern portion of this building, and that the foundations of the building could not proceed until this construction was out of the way; and that our building foundations were of extraordinary character ever and surrounding this tunnel and could only proceed with watchfulness and care and some delay. Further, that the actual construction could not begin until April 12, 1905, that the foundations of the building were completed and the first brick laid on July 5, 1905, and that the setting of stone began in August, 1905. It is, therefore, a year and ten months since the actual construction began, and the results should speak for themselves. The amount of extraordinary foundations required on account of the presence of the tunnel exceeded in volume and cost the ordinary foundations of the building.

It should also be borne in mind that the progress of a building of this character is limited to the progress of the exterior stonework, and that the contract entered into on the authority of the House Commission, among other things, was based upon the low time limit given by the bidder—May 1, 1907.

The character of construction adopted in the House office building should not be placed in comparison with the ordinary office-building construction, as the general character and arrangement of the materials used in office-building construction allows a very rapid progress, and the progress in construction of this building should be compared with buildings of its type.

I am free to confess that if the building had been of brick only, or even if it had been constructed with an exterior facing of limestone, a material which is easy to produce in the quarry, that it could have been ready by this time, but marble is a stone which is not so easy to get, especially if chosen with a certain due regard to fine quality and appearance. The stone used in the House building for a selected quality, and the contract term does not expire until about May I next. No doubt the gentlemen are considering the date of the act of authorization and the lapse of period with some annoyance. I think it just to the House Commission and to this office to point out some of the facts which c

Very respectfully, Elliott Woods, Superintendent U. S. Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just briefly, for the benefit of the House, I will say that the amendment only provides for the regulation and control of the building and does not provide for the distribution of the rooms, leaving that to be done by the next Congress when it meets.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the House to give me unanimous consent to return to page 169 of the bill for the purpose of withdrawing a point of order that I made against the last paragraph on that page.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to return to the third section of page 169, having made a point of order against the section.

Mr. BABCOCK. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]
The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir; I stated that I asked unanimous consent for the purpose of withdrawing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the section will be considered as restored to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the matter under discussion yesterday, in reference to the insane hospital, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the appeal of Charity Ann Hoyle from the assessment on the prop-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks leave to print a statement in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The appeal in the matter of this land. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The appeal is as follows:

APPEAL.

Washington, D. C., September 15, 1902.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Reptember 18, 1902.

To the Board of Equalization and Review, District of Columbia:

I, Charity A. Hoyle, residing on Hamilton road, Washington County, respectfully appeal from the assessment on the following-described property: Farm of 81.67 acres in plat 28, Hamilton road, in county, assessed at $200 per acre in the name of Henry J. Hoyle, and request that the assessment be changed to $100 per acre for the ground, for the reasons set forth in accompanying statement.

CHARITY ANN HOYLE.

CHARITY ANN HOYLE, Widow of Henry J. Hoyle, Congress Heights, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to page 169. The Chair understands two points of order were offered by the gentleman from Arkansas

Mr. MACON. I made a point of order against the last paragraph on that page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands. Without objection, the last paragraph will be reinstated in the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk read as follows:

For the Court of Claims, $15,000.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 15, by striking out the word "fifteen" and inserting the word "eight-

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15, strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen."

Mr. OTJEN. I desire to state that last year we passed a law that requires all the reports and printing to be charged up to the court. Formerly the reports sent here were paid for out of Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the Committee on Appropriations now has under consideration the same item in the preparation of the general deficiency appropriation bill. There is no question about it being taken care of, but the committee is not at this time sufficiently advised as to the necessity of increasing the amount for the next fixed preparation of the sufficiency and it suggests to great the suggest the suggest to great fiscal year to accept it. It is a deficiency, and it ought to go on the general deficiency bill. The deficiency arises under the The Court of Claims must send their findings to Congress, and under the rules of the House these findings are referred to the appropriate committee and printed automatically, and the cost of the printing is charged up to the Court of Claims. It is something that we can not estimate for. That is how the defi-ciency arose, and it will be taken care of in the general deficiency bill.

Mr. OTJEN. With that statement I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of members, officers, and employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission, including assistant purchasing and shipping agents, and all other employees in the United States, $200,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 190, in line 3, strike out the words "two hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and eighty-four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. All funds collected by the government of the Canal Zone from rentals of public lands and buildings in the Canal Zone and the cities of Panama and Coion, and from the Zone postal service, and from court fees and fines, and collected or raised by taxation in whatsoever form under the laws of the government of the Canal Zone, are hereby appropriated until and including June 30, 1908, as follows: The revenues derived from the postal service to the maintenance of that service; the remaining revenues, after setting aside a miscellaneous and contingent fund of $10,000, to the maintenance of the public school system in the Zone and to public improvements within the Zone. A detailed statement of all receipts and expenditures under this paragraph shall be submitted to Congress after the close of the fiscal year 1908.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on section 2, just read. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what is the necessity for this legislation, permitting the money to be expended first and accounted for afterwards?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, at the present time there is absolutely no authority for the expenditure of the Isthmian Canal receipts for any purpose whatever. It is the purpose and policy of the Commission, so far as the maintenance of schools is concerned, and as far as the maintenance of their courts and their postal system is concerned, to have the cost paid out of the Canal Commission receipts. That is what they are doing at the present time. This will legalize what they have been doing, and we were obliged to do this because of the fact that they have no government there except under the Canal Commission. We authorize them to continue to collect these receipts and to apply them in the manner proposed here, and give to Congress a statement of the total amounts collected, and also a statement of the expenditures that have been made for those purposes which relate peculiarly to the government of the Zone.

Mr. FINLEY. Am I to understand that this proceeding has been going on without any authority of law?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Minnesota will pardon me, I think he is mistaken in reference to the collection of the receipts. The receipts are collected and turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; they are not. The Government owns a number of buildings there, and it is proposed to turn the revenue from those buildings over to the school fund in lieu of any other tax.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that this would legalize what had been done heretofore without authority of law.

Mr. MANN. That is not my understanding of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will bear with me just a moment I will turn to the hearings, where the general counsel of the Commission went over this matter very fully.

Mr. FINLEY. It is on page 892.
Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it is on page 892.
Mr. FINLEY. I have read that; but I do not quite understand the necessity for this legislation. Who will have control of the expenditure of this money?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Canal Commission. I read from page

The CHAIRMAN. What are the revenues of the Zone? Mr. Rogers. They are estimated at $160,000 for next year.

Mr. Rogers is the counsel of the Commission.

Mr. Rogers is the counsel of the Commission.

The Chairman. All that money is expended for schools?

Mr. Rogers. No, sir; it is not. Under the plan I recommended, the revenues of the Zone will be appropriated in about the following manner: All of the revenues which are derived from the postal service will be devoted to maintaining the postal service. The schools on the present basis cost about $30,000, but in the course of the current year will cost very much more than that, because it is our desire to give an education to a large number of white children who are coming in, and also, so far as we can, to the native population, and that cost will probably ultimately rise to the neighborhood of $50,000. We pay all of that out of the Zone revenues. The balance of the revenues are now collected very largely from the municipalities.

Mr. FINLEY. I have read that.

Mr. FINLEY. I have read that.
Mr. TAWNEY. I read this to show that the revenues have heretofore been applied by the Commission in the manner indicated

Mr. FINLEY. Then the Commission will expend this money? Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and account to Congress for the aggregate of the expenditure, and also the purposes for which it was expended in detail.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I move to insert after the word "detailed" the words "and classified," in line 3, so that we will get a detailed and classified list of expenditures.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection to that.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And then, after "expenditures," I move to insert the words "without the duplication of items." I have had some experience as to that in the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection to either amendment,

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments. The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "detailed," in line 3, page 194, insert "and classi-

After "expenditures," in line 4, page 194, insert "without the duplication of items."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. That $100,000 of the said appropriation for the fiscal year 1908, "For skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus for the departments of construction and engineering and administration," shall be transferred to the appropriation "For skilled and unskilled labor engaged in the health and sanitation department on the Isthmus of Panama" of the same act; that $300,000 of the said appropriation "For skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus for the departments of construction and engineering and administration," shall be transferred to the appropriation "For miscellaneous expenditures" for the same departments, of the same act; that $50,000 of the appropriation "For pay of officers and employees other than skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus, for the construction and engineering and administration departments," shall be transferred to the appropriation "For pay of officers and employees other than skilled and unskilled labor on the Isthmus," of the same act; and that any unexpended balance of the appropriation in the said bill "To continue the reequipment of the Panama Railroad" may be paid to the Panama Railroad Company to reimburse that company for direct expenditures for equipment and construction: Provided, That all expenses so reimbursed shall first be audited in all respects as if disbursed directly under the Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, on line 13, page 194, I move

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, on line 13, page 194, I move to strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "seven." This is an error in printing. It should be for the fiscal year 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On line 13, page 194, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded and completed the reading of the bill. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, on the day that we commenced the consideration of the sundry civil bill, owing to some misunderstanding, there was a provision on page 32 that was stricken out on a point of order. Its importance is such that I am constrained to ask unanimous consent to return to page 32, at the top of page, and ask unanimous consent that that provision may be reinserted in the bill.

A MEMBER. What provision is it?

Mr. TAWNEY. It gives the Department the power to lease the buildings back of the post-office building, and also au-thority and an appropriation for the Department to make the necessary repairs for the occupants.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to turn to page 32. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. If there be no objection, the paragraph described by the gentleman from Minnesota will be restored to the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, that concludes the consideration of the bill, and I move the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Watson, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25745, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the canteen proposition. Mr. TAWNEY. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman will withdraw that demand. We want to pass the bill this evening, and I have some doubts whether we have a quorum.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will withdraw the demand, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was or-

The amendments were considered and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Tawney, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF BILL ON CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the House that House bill 10103 is a public claims bill and should be transferred from the Private Calendar to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Nevin, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. Denby, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of J. E. Allen and C. E. Allen, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

STEPHEN M. HONEYCUTT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3498) for the relief of Stephen M. Honeycutt, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RATIFYING ACT OF THE ASSEMBLY OF ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 8451) ratifying and confirming chapter 58 of the twenty-third legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, providing for repair of the Territorial bridge at Florence, Pinal County, Ariz., a similar House bill being on the Calendar.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 58 of the session laws of the twenty-third legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, providing for the repair of the Territorial bridge at Florence, Ariz., approved March 16, 1905, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and approved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Williams, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 8969) was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Denby] will act as Speaker pro tempore for the session to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 24, 1907.

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., as follows:

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven

If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked.

For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come.

Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Eternal God, our heavenly Father, whose heart goes out in approbation and love to those who seek to do Thy will and thus add to the sum of human happiness and departing leave the world a little better that they have lived and wrought.

We thank Thee for the men whose characters and deeds we are here to memorialize, men whose gifts and talents fitted them in an eminent degree for the onerous duties laid upon them by their fellow-citizens. Let Thy blessing, we beseech Thee, be upon this service, that those who shall record their tribute of love and respect may inspire those who shall come after them to faithful service.

We thank Thee for the hope of immortality which lifts us in our better moments to larger life and nobler deeds and which bids us look forward to a brighter world beyond the confines of earth. Let Thine everlasting arms be about those who mourn the loss of their dear ones, and in Thine own good time bring them to dwell together in one of the many mansions prepared for those who love the Lord, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RECESS.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 10.30 a. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DENBY). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BISHOP] called the House to order.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR ALGER.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. RUSSELL A. ALGER, late a Senator from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjuvened.

journed.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the senate. Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave to print upon the subject of the day's exercises be extended to all Members of the House for a period of ten days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, the truest tribute to the departed is the silent requiem that chants in the hearts of a great people when death comes to a loved and honored leader. main may vie with one another in the superlatives of praise, we may exhaust the language of eulogy—we do not add one jot or tittle to the fair fame of the illustrious dead. As it is beyond our power to take from him any part of that respect and love that have been his reward in life, so it is idle to suppose that we can control the hand of history and by our feeble efforts make him nobler, better, greater than he was. He, the dead, whom we vainly strive to exalt, gains nothing by our praise. His place is secure, and the story of his life becomes a cherished possession-his legacy to the living.

We have gathered here to-day to pay this public honor to our lamented Senator, Russell A. Alger. But the great heart of Michigan has rendered to him in death an honor so perfect that no eulogy spoken here can add to its simple dignity. tribute can there be so earnest and so pure as the bowed heads and the bitter tears of a mourning populace?

Michigan, which so greatly honored him in life, received him home as a sorrowing mother receives the body of her son. Upon a day of bitter cold the train arrived. Snow covered the streets of Detroit. It was Sunday morning, and, free from the engage-ments of their week-day toil, the citizens of the Senator's home chose to spend their holiday standing in the rigors of the open air to pay their sad tribute. The beautiful city opened wide her tender arms and took him to her heart again. suggested another great occasion, when, having left the Cabinet of President McKinley, the affectionate sympathy of Detroit went out to him and she made him welcome home. Then flags and music and mighty cheers showed their loyalty and devo tion; but when last he returned the concourse that filled all the thoroughfares stood silent and stricken as he passed them by. As one was the generous outburst of sympathy and honor, that all the world might know how true to the living statesman beat the heart of Michigan when causeless slight was put upon him, so the other was the reverent expression of her grief when he came home to stay forever. And upon the next day, when the last honors were paid and the bugles sounded taps over the soldier's grave, again in the winter weather the people of Michigan came out to say farewell. The streets were crowded, the cemetery thronged with a silent multitude. All classes, all ages, all conditions, one purpose—to honor General Alger, representative and friend to all, benefactor to many. Delicate women, busy men, veterans of the great war, worn and feeble that their country might be safe and strong, the sires of '61 and the sons of '98, all standing bareheaded in the snow when the General came home.

Ah, sir, there was tribute, there was eulogy, such as few eccive. What inspiration to the living in this high honor to receive. the dead! And these scenes, Mr. Speaker, but lately I was witness of. With the thought of this living, throbbing eulogy so freshly present in my mind, Mr. Speaker, do you think I can try to-day to eulogize Michigan's loved Senator? But there is no study more inspiring than that of the nation's patriots, who in many walks of life have illustrated the energy, adaptability, and capacity that have always marked the men of America; there is no duty more grateful than that of paying loving respect to their memory. That study and that duty are ours to-day.

General Alger was a typical product of his day and nation.' It is the glory of our country that this is so. Many other of his contemporaries raised themselves by their unaided efforts, as he did, from poverty to affluence, from obscurity to fame. Many other men fought gallantly at his side in the great struggle of 1861—the new birth of freedom upon this continent. It is well with a nation when this is so. I take nothing from his fame when I say he came into being in a generation when great emergency raised up many great men to meet it; great fighters like himself, great statesmen, great patriots. is said that every emergency breeds its master, as the Revolution bred Washington; as the civil war, Lincoln; the military exigency, Grant, when it seemed that Grant, and only Grant, could wear out the gallant forces of the South. But it seems to me that, be the emergency great enough, it will breed, in this country at least, not one man, but a nation of men of giant mold, men fit to cope with anything, men of one idea, if you like, men at least with but one fear, and that of dishonor.

The civil-war epoch was the heroic period of our national Men grew to their full stature then. So terrible a struggle, waged on both sides for principle's sake, could not fail to develop the greatest qualities in the character of its partici-When a man leaves all that home may mean, to incur the horrors of march and battlefield and offers upon the altar of his country and his conscience, health and life and hope of the future, there is, Mr. Speaker, something stirring within him that proves him one with the Eternal. And when an entire nation dedicates itself to furious warfare, one part against another of the same great people, for four long years, and gladly suffers all the unspeakable agonies of that awful struggle until for very exhaustion the sword falls from the hand of one party to the conflict, may we not say, sir, that that nation was not born to die? It, too, has shown itself of the immortals. I do not propose to burden this paper with statistics; but, sir, to show where Michigan stood during this time and what she did to prove her right of equality in the sovereign sisterhood of States, I give you these facts only:

On the outbreak of the war there were in Michigan about 775,000 inhabitants. During the war Michigan sent to the Federal Army 90,747 soldiers, or about 12 per cent of the entire population and about 60 per cent of her able-bodied sons. Of the 90,747 men and boys whe served under the flag, 177 officers were killed on the field, 85 officers died of wounds, and 96 of disease, 358 in all; and 2,643 men were killed, 1,302 died of wounds, and 10,552 died of disease, or 14,497 enlisted men, a total of all ranks who died during the war of 14,855, about 16 per cent of all soldiers engaged from the State. This does not take into account the great host whose lives were shortened and whose health was destroyed. A notable fact in regard to this splendid army of volunteers from Michigan is that 67,468 of the men were native-born American citizens. Of the remainder, nearly 9,000 were Canadians, and about 13,000 were natives of the British Isles and Germany.

Let me call your attention to one striking fact in regard to the mortality list. Two hundred and sixty-two officers were killed or died of wounds out of a total of 358 in all who died. Those men were well led whose officers died in such numbers on the field of battle. Against the lurid background of the war General Alger first comes into public view, as captain of Company C, Second Michigan Cavalry. Thereafter, through successive promotions earned by skill in the handling of troops and gallantry on the field, he rose to be colonel of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry, and later was brevetted major-general of United States Volunteers. There is not time to recite here the many conflicts in which he participated or the many deeds of daring he performed during his service in the Army. Certain it is that he was a brave and able soldier, leading his men with dash and view into the forcest of the fighting. vigor into the fiercest of the fighting, wherever it was to be found. He was the typical cavalryman, infinitely careful of the health, comfort, and well-being of his troopers when care could be shown, utterly reckless of their lives and of his own when attacking the enemy. The whole great story, full as it is of romance and of valorous devotion to duty, is told in this one sentence from the Congressional Directory:

Brevet major-general, United States Volunteers, June 11, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services during the war, having participated in sixty-six battles and skirmishes.

Sixty-six battles and skirmishes! Sixty-six occasions when death was an ever-present possibility, generally a probability; when the young life, with all its courage and all its hopes, afterwards so abundantly realized, was freely offered for the flag.

Let me touch very briefly upon one only of these many engagements. I quote his own account of the dreadful days at Gettysburg, July 3 and 4, 1863. It will be remembered that the plans of Lee are supposed to have contemplated a cavalry charge on the Federal right, which, with Pickett's terrific on-slaught on the center, was to break the line and give the victory to the Confederate forces. Had Stuart been successful in getto the Confederate forces. Had stuart been successful in get-ting to the rear of the Federal position, no one can tell what might have been the outcome. That historic spot, now known as the "High-water mark of the rebellion," might have been in-stead the low-water mark of southern reverses, from which the gray tide might have swept on, whither no one knows. At any rate it is certain that the cavalry action on the right of the Federal line was of critical importance. General Alger, in a report made to the Adjutant-General of the Army, July 1, 1880, thus describes the part his men took at Gettysburg:

July 3. At 10 a. m., our brigade being on the right of the army, the enemy's cavalry, under General Stuart, appeared in our front in large force. I was ordered to dismount my regiment and attack him, which I did, driving him back about half a mile and into a thick wood. Here he rallied and attacked me and was repulsed, but with a heavy loss to my regiment, as well as to him. Again he attacked me, moving round on my left flank, but was again repulsed. In this last attack I also sustained a serious loss, including the gallant Maj. Noah H. Ferry (brother of United States Senator Ferry), of my regiment.

Being unable to hold my position longer, my ammunition being nearly exhausted, and while the enemy was diverted by a charge of the Seventh Cavalry, Colonel Mann, on my right, I fell back and mounted my regiment. While mounting the enemy charged past my right flank, about 40 rods distant, driving the Seventh Michigan back in confusion. At that moment, having mounted a portion of my command, I directed Major Trowbridge to take it and charge the enemy, which he did gallantly, having his horse shot and killed under him in so doing.

in confusion. At that moment, having mounted a portion of my command, I directed Major Trowbridge to take it and charge the enemy, which he did gallantly, having his horse shot and killed under him in so doing.

A few moments later the balance of the regiment was engaged and the enemy checked and driven from the field, only, however, to rally and come down upon our brigade in still greater numbers. This charge was met by Colonel Town with his First Michigan, which had been held in reserve until now, who charged, checked, and broke the enemy's ranks, driving him from the field in confusion, assisted by the other regiments of the brigade.

This left our brigade in possession of that hotly contested field, and night having closed in, this terrible battle ended, and at our left, where the roar of cannon and muskerty had been kept up all day, all was now quiet except occasional desultory firing along the line. My loss in killed and wounded was very severe. Major Ferry, who was cheering his battalion to hold its ground, was instantly killed. His death cast a deep gloom upon the whole brigade. He was a gallant soldier and an exemplary man, and his loss was a great blow. July 4, at 10 o'clock a. m., our division marched from Gettysburg battlefield to intercept the enemy, who was retreating along the South Mountain road toward Williamsport. We marched, via Emmettsburg, up the road leading to Monterey, a small place, as it appeared in the night, on the top of South Mountain Range, the Fifth Michigan Cavalry being in the advance. As we approached the summit of the mountain about midnight (the night being very dark) we were surprised by the enemy opening fire upon us with two howitzers charged with grapeshot, at short range. The confusion following was only for a moment, and they were soon driven off and the command moved forward. Arriving at the summit of the mountain, the trains of the enemy could be distinctly heard moving along down the road which intercepted the line of our march, the road leading down the west slope

General Custer, who commanded the cavalry brigade engaged during the battle, in his official report, made August 22, 1863,

The enemy was soon after reported to be advancing on my front. The detachment of fifty men sent on the Oxford road were driven in, and at the same time the enemy's line of skirmishers, consisting of dismounted cavalry, appeared on the crest of the ridge of hills on my front. The line extended beyond my left. To repel their advance I ordered the Fifth Michigan Cavalry to a more advanced position, with instructions to maintain their ground at all hazards. Colonel ALGER, commanding the Fifth, assisted by Majors Trowbridge and Ferry, of the same regiment, made such admirable disposition of their men behind fences and other defenses as enabled them to successfully repel the repeated advance of a greatly superior force. I attribute their success in a great measure to the fact that this regiment is armed with the Spencer repeating rifle, which in the hands of brave, determined men, like those composing the Fifth Michigan Cavalry, is, in my estimation, the most effective firearm that our cavalry can adopt. Colonel ALGER held his ground until his men had exhausted their ammunition, when he was compelled to fall back on the main body. The beginning of this movement was the signal for the enemy to charge, which they did with two regiments, mounted and dismounted.

During his military career General Alger was at different times severely wounded, captured by the enemy, but escaped, and stricken with fever.

When at last the war was over he returned to Michigan and took up the pursuits of peace with the same courage, vigor, and intelligence that marked his military career. He had no fortune to repair, but one to make. The rapidly growing business of the State and the great lumber industry, then in its infancy, offered opportunities of which he was not slow to avail himself. By his own ability and farsighted business skill he made a great success in business and was soon numbered among the most prosperous and influential men in the State, and so remained until his death.

Michigan has always loved and honored the General. made him her governor, then the President made him Secretary of War, and after he had left that position Michigan sent him to the United States Senate. It was my pleasant privilege, as a member of the legislature of 1903; to make the first seconding speech in behalf of General Alger. Upon that occasion I was so impressed with the unanimity of the sentiment in his favor that I referred to this vote in the legislature as merely confirmatory of the action of the people, taken by popular vote, without the formality of a ballot.

If I were asked to name the qualities of General Alger which more than any other accounted for his remarkable success in political life and for the devotion of his friends, I would say his kindness, generosity, tact, and sweetness of disposition, the great human attributes that charm and attract and make the world akin. His course through life was marked by many deeds of unostentatious charity. How much he gave will never be known, but that his bounties were very large is certain from the occasional instances brought to public notice. In Detroit he was mourned by none more sincerely than by the newsboys of that city. They have there a large organization consisting of six or seven hundred members, called the "Newsboys' Association." General Alger helped the boys in and out of the association with clothing and other necessaries and with his kindly cheer, year after year, until he became the "newsboys' friend," a badge of honor he was well worthy to wear. How many other persons there are who regard his passing as the loss of their best earthly friend can not be known. His charities he tried to hide, but you will hear to-day some instances that could not be concealed. He rendered back to society in constant benefactions the riches it gave to him. He was one of the kindest, most lovable men in public life.

Mr. Speaker, General Alger met death as a friendly messenger, not unexpected and, save for the pain of parting from those whom he loved so well, and who in their sorrow have our tenderest sympathy, the summons was not unwelcome. He faced the end in that perfect peace that is the reward of a life well He was engaged to the last in the discharge of the duties of his high office, and when the time came it found him ready to go. I think Tennyson's last poem gave General Alger's feeling toward death so clearly I quote it here:

Sunset and evening star
And one clear call for me,
And may there be no moaning of the bar
When I put out to sea. But such a tide as moving seems asleep, Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home. Twilight and evening bell And after that the dark, And may there be no sadness of farewell When I embark. For tho' from out our bourne of time and place The floods may bear me far, I hope to see my Pilot face to face When I have crost the bar.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at any great length upon the life, services, and memory of General Algera.
The Representatives from the great State of Michigan will do this fully, as his character deserves. Iowa originally was a part of the Louisiana Purchase, subsequently was transferred to the Territory of Michigan, and so for a time the State which I have the honor in part to represent was a part of the Territory of Michigan. Our ties were then close and intimate, and we of Iowa have always retained a profound interest in the affairs of that splendid sister State. The statue of General Cass stands in Statuary Hall, the old Hall of the House of Representatives, a Valhalla in which the patriot dead of America will be commemorated. There is a place in that hall for General Alger, and whether chosen for that place or not, he has a more enduring place in the hearts of the people of the State which he has so greatly honored.

In the civil war he became a general. He filled all the positions to which he was there called with the highest honor and ability, and shed his blood upon many battlefields in behalf of his country and of his flag.

In 1896 I recall a political trip which was planned in the campaign of that year for General Alger, a wounded Union soldier and a general of high distinction, with General Sickles and General Howard-Sickles with but one leg and Howard but -the three of them passing from State to State, speaking briefly at different points, receiving an ovation that they so well earned during the days of the civil war.

General Alger's career in that war will always be pointed to with especial pride by Michigan. Michigan has honored him with high office as governor of the State and as Senator of the United States. He was chosen during a critical period for the position of Secretary of War, and the Spanish war was conducted under his administration. For his part in that war he never received the credit that he deserved, but, in the language of Shakespeare, "did not escape calumny."

In a Roman triumph it was the custom to select a number of people to hoot at the conqueror as he passed by, to teach him that he was mortal.

But mourners only appeared to watch the funeral train of the same conqueror when death had claimed him.

When the Spanish war had closed there were those who were anxious to point out every flaw that could be found in the wonderful record of that brief but heroic epoch. Time has vindicated and will continue to vindicate General ALGER'S service in His service and that of General Shafter will be written in the history of the American Republic. General Shafter, who with 19,000 men surrounded and captured 29,000 Spaniards, received obloquy and carping criticism for his heroism and success. He did not break into the magazines in his own defense, but intrusted his career to time and to history, and that career will receive the due credit which it deserves. American historian will be just. General Alger, while directing from the office of Secretary of War the management of that great war, great at least in its results, though brief in time, never received the credit that he deserved. In one hundred and thirteen days the Spanish power was erased from the map in two hemispheres and the history of the world was changed. Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as a resultless war. We may have the wireless telegraph, we may have the smokeless powder, we may have the crownless king or queen, but there is no such thing as a resultless war; and the results of that brief war of one hundred and thirteen days will figure much in the history not only of the United States of America, but of the world.

General Alger's ability in conducting the hurried details of that improvised war will be written to his honor in the future accounts of the nineteenth century. On next Wednesday the seventieth birthday of General Alger will have arrived. He almost filled out, though not quite, the allotted three score years and ten of man. Those were honorable years. He was recognized for his true worth by those who knew him best and stood by him through evil and good report, and his State rallied around him and sent him to the Senate of the United States and would have elected him again if he had so desired, but failing health led him to make the announcement that he did not desire that distinction, and he failed to serve out quite the full term for which he was chosen. He was often spoken of for the Presidency. He was formally nominated in more than one national convention. Well do I remember, Mr. Speaker, the enthusiasm with which his name was received in 1888 in the Chicago convention when a soldier of his old regiment, who had after the civil war cast his lot in the South and had come up as a delegate to that convention, spoke about the various men who had been thought of and suggested, both before the meeting of the convention and on the floor of that convention, describing the heroism of General Alger without naming him; he finally came to the statement, "What is the matter with Alger?" and a cry went up from the convention "He's all right," and there was a battle cry born right there on the floor of that convention. From that answer originated a phrase which has been upon the tongues of millions of all kinds of men in public meetings from that day down to the time General Alger's honorable career was rounded out with the sleep that knows no waking. We meet here this cold, blustery, wintry day, selecting the holy Sabbath day to honor his memory in the closing hours of the Fifty-ninth Congress, when night sessions have overworked both of the bodies which make up the American Congress. We stop during these hurried hours in the closing days of this session to do honor to a man who has honored his State, honored his nation, and who has brought credit and distinction to the great legislative body of which this House is a part.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, simply to lay upon the snow which covers his grave to-day a wreath from Iowa in memory of Michigan's distinguished soldier, citizen, and statesman.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, to-day we meet in commemoration of one of the most illustrious sons of the great State of Michigan, and I deem it a profound privilege to here speak a few words in behalf of the memory of such an one as the late Senator Russell A. Alger.

Mr. Speaker, I had known the deceased for over thirty yearsin fact, from my early manhood. I had known him as an employer, as a private citizen, as a public man, and as a friend; and from that extended acquaintance with him I feel that my life has been enriched and ennobled to an extent far beyond my present ability to express. His life was so full of goodness, the purity, the simplicity, and the faithfulness so lacking in the most of us that justice can not be done his memory in the brief time I feel that I am privileged to ask at the hands of this Much will be said and much has been said here and elsewhere of our departed brother in more fitting phrases and loftier speech than it is my ability to command, but I doubt much whether any will hold the memory of that man in as loving reverence as do I by reason of my long acquaintance and association with him.

Senator Alger came to Michigan a young man, poor as viewed from the standpoint of latter-day greatness, but rich in the eyes of God. He came with the muck of the furrow on his feet, but with a heart of sterling manhood beating in his breast. He came to us when to live in Michigan meant more than mere sweat of brow, when it meant a fight with the help of the strong right arm of the Lord, when it meant unswerving trust in a power higher than humanity can bestow, and when it meant to know no defeat in the face of seeming failure. He faced the obstacles of the sturdy pioneer of his day with the fortitude that predicted his future success. He helped us hew our homes in the vast forest fastnesses of the great State; he helped us lay the foundation of our State government; he helped us to build what we have builded; he toiled with us, arm to arm and shoulder to shoulder, from our infancy to our present greatness, and whatever glory there may have been achieved by the State of Michigan, in either national or State affairs, his hand has been one of the guiding influences pointing to us the right way and helping our faint and faltering footsteps when we would turn back.

Mr. Speaker, not an avenue of the life of our great Commonwealth, be it religious, commercial, or political, is there but that has felt the beneficent touch of his gentle influence. He was with us in all our undertakings, and while many times honored at the hands of his adopted State, yet the gratitude thus expressed for him falls far short of just compensation for his life's efforts and sacrifices in her behalf.

His early life in Michigan was spent in the woods when the lumber industry in that State was paramount, and as a lumberman he laid the foundation of his future prosperity.

As a young man among us, forgetful of self, at the sacrifice of opportunity, as it seemed then, at a time when hope and honest effort count for much in the lives of young men, he put behind him all personal ambitions; the then present opportunities became secondary in his thought and with the zeal and love of a true American, in the year 1861, offered himself, his hopes, and his ambitions that his State and his country might be saved. His was a life and character to which war, with its attendant horrors and deprivations did not appeal. He had other aims in life than that of marches and battle, but to his great sense of duty and patriotism there were no two ways.

His not to reason why, His but to do and die.

The necessity of his motherland was paramount. that she needed him was enough, and he went. His services in the war between the States, his achievements and sacrifices, his rise from the humble position of a captain of a company to the higher rank of brevet major-general, United States Volunteers, is fittingly chronicled elsewhere.

On his return to us at the close of the war, bearing the scars and stains of his active and eventful participation therein, un-changed and untarnished by the glories of conquest and the flattery of an admiring Commonwealth, in his gentle and retiring manner he took up the thread of life where it had been severed; he started where he had left off, never fearing, nothing daunted, and by that indomitable perseverance so characteristic of his every effort and ambition, never for a moment regretting the time he had given for the preservation of the Union, unaided. save by his silent reliance on that ever present source of strength, he built the foundation of a career, both private and public, attained by few.

It was some years after his return from the war that I became acquainted with him, and at that time he was well on the road to success which so fittingly crowned his every effort. In later years it was my privilege to have been acquainted with him in his public and social life, and in all these opportunities of a most thorough acquaintance in all capacities, I can say that I have never known any man whose confidence and esteem I have cherished more than I do that of Senator Alger.

Mr. Speaker, it is scarce in this life that we find a man of so retiring a nature, so unassuming in every detail, so thoughtful of others, so unselfish and so faithful, who attains the position in public or private career as did Senator Alger. We find many admirable characteristics in all with whom we come in daily contact, and possibly very few undesirable qualities, but seldom do we find all of the virtues centering themselves in the life of one man that were characteristic of the life of Mr. Alger. His success was due to his nobleness of purpose, his fidelity to trust, his unswerving devotion to his friends and to his promises, his love for all mankind, and his purity of thought. A criticism once passed on him in my presence was that he placed too much reliance on everyone with whom he came in contact. Ah! would that all men had that simple, childlike trust in their fellow-men that stamped every moment of the career of Senator Well may it be said that he believed all men, for suspicion is born of untruthfulness. And while Senator Alger may have suffered many times for this unfaltering trust placed in his brother men, yet that very trust which has shown a life so free from blame, so free from corruption, so full of all that is most desirable in men, has borne him on pinions of love above the petty suspicions, inferences, and insinuations usual in these days, and has placed him on a pinnacle unscathed and unsullied.

Mr. Speaker, no man can love uncleanness, corruption, or untruthfulness in another, and I say that few men are loved by those who know them best as was Senator Alger loved by those who knew him best. To be sure, his pathway in life was not without its disappointments, its defeats, and annoyances. His public career at times was attacked, his purposes assailed, and his ambitions thwarted, but through it all, through the malignity and abuse that was maliciously directed at him at one stage of his public life, does his untarnished character shine like a lone star in the blackness of night. From the chaos of envy, malice, selfishness, and abuse he rose purer, more loving, and more beloved than ever. Clad in an impenetrable armor of a clean conscience, a pure purpose, and a love for all mankind, he marched with head aloft amid the petty cross fire of political jealousy and intrigue, knowing full well that "truth, crushed to earth, will rise again," and that the invectives of hatred and malice could but make the brighter, by the contrast, the purity expressed in his every thought and deed.

He conquered because he "loved his neighbors as himself," and by this love his enemies became his friends.

It was my privilege, Mr. Speaker, to be on intimate terms with Mr. Alger during the declining years of his life, through periods when his dear ones daily despaired of his recovery. was with him at his rallying intervals, at which times he most faithfully attended to his every duty, both public and private, and I knew his condition—learned it from Mr. Alger himself and, with the deepest sense of gratitude for the lesson of patience, cheerfulness, and hope which he thus taught me, I say not one word of complaint, irritability, or regret did I ever hear pass his lips. Standing in the shadow of death's valley, and knowing it, to the end he maintained that same kindly, Godfearing, and forbearing nature that had characterized his whole Little wonder a loving family mourns the loss of such a husband and father; little wonder that the great State bows its head in silent anguish at the news of the death of such a son; little wonder that a nation pauses to place the emblems of reverence and sorrow on his bier.

Our friend Russell A. Alger remains with us only as a memory, and since his death I have heard so many kindly words spoken of him by his colleagues that it seems sad that living he might not have known how much we valued, trusted, and appreciated him.

By nature he was sunny and cheerful, and the atmosphere about him was always warm and bright. Though possessed of great self-reliance, he had no frills and needed no starch to strengthen his dignity. Those of us who came to best not only respected him, but learned to love him. Those of us who came to know him

Death came to him as it should come to all of us; not as an enemy, but as a friend; not as a defeat, but as a victory; not as an end, but as a beginning; not in the guise of a serpent, but in the form of an angel. Death came to him, not as life's curse, but as life's coronation. His life work is finished, his pleasant voice is hushed, his feet no longer press the sands along the shores of time, but those of us with whom he mingled will, until our last days, be grateful for having known such a character, and I believe we are all broader, truer, and better men because our friend for a time sojourned with us.

[Mr. GARDNER of Michigan addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, Russell A. Alger was born in a log cabin in Medina County, Ohio, in the year 1836. He was born in poverty; but it was the robust poverty of farm life in the earlier period of our Republic, which, though it knew nothing of luxury and frequently lacked even the necessaries of life, was never abject.

He was rich in the poverty of being born so poor that he could see something above him to struggle for.

He was reared in poverty, but it was the poverty of boyhood on the farm, rich with hope and health and ambition; and it was the poverty of a time and place which drew no lines of caste and social distinction.

His father and mother died when he was 11 years old, and after their death he worked for his board and clothes until, at the age of 14, he began to earn wages, beginning at $5 a month and increasing until at the age of 20 he was earning $15 a

Meanwhile he had been going to school winters, and his schooling culminated with a term or two at Richfield Academy.

In 1857 he began reading law with Wolcott & Upson, in Akron, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar, but he never practiced law; and in 1861, having moved to Grand Rapids, Mich., he enlisted as a private in the Second Michigan Cavalry, and was commissioned captain of Company C. He served three years, participated in sixty-six battles and skirmishes, was seriously wounded, and rose by successive promotions until he reached the rank of colonel, and was brevetted major-general for gallant and meritorious service,

He was elected governor of Michigan in 1884, was a conspicuous candidate for the Presidency in 1888, served as Secretary of War from 1897 to 1899, was appointed a Senator of the United States to succeed James McMillan in 1902, was elected to that office in 1903, and died January 24, 1907.

General ALGER died a rich man. In 1867 he entered into a partnership known as "Moore, Alger & Co.," which evolved in 1881 into a corporation known as "R. A. Alger & Co." This partnership and this corporation dealt in pine timber lands. They acquired vast tracts of magnificent pine forests, which increased in value while they held them until single trees were worth five times what the land whereon they grew had cost per acre.

To lumber interests were added mining interests, railroad interests, and banking interests, until General Alger became a multimillionaire.

Victor Hugo says: "Be fortunate and you will be thought a General Alger was something more than a fortunate man. Whatever there was of greatness in his personality or his career is due not alone to good fortune, but to a blend of certain inherent qualities-the qualities of honesty, generosity, philanthropy, courage, and patriotism.

These qualities alone, however, do not make major-generals, Secretaries of War, United States Senators, or governors.

It is possible to hold these places without these qualities, and many a private in the ranks has had all these qualities and never been heard from outside his own immediate neighborhoed.

Neither is it greatness in itself to have held any or all of these offices. There have been many major-generals, and some few of them may be remembered.

There have been many members of many Cabinets, and some few of them may be remembered.

The various States from time to time have elected a good many Senators, and some few of these are still remembered.

As to governors, there are forty-five of them now performing their executive functions, and there are two or three, perhaps, whose names are known beyond the boundaries of their States.

It has been estimated that about 4,000,000 people die every year, and the percentage of those who do things to make their names remembered is not high.

It is impossible to analyze the baffling, illusive, internal illumination which we call personality which differentiates one man from another.

There were greater lawyers than Lincoln, greater legislators than Lincoln, greater orators than Lincoln, and yet the personality which we call Abraham Lincoln will hold his name forever above the flood of years.

By universal consent he has taken his place among the few great souls who belong to all time.

We may account for the greatness of some men whom conspicuous talent has driven on to great achievement by calling it the abnormality of genius. But if we point to most men of eminence and say such and such traits made them great, we are obliged to admit that others endowed apparently with these same traits have utterly failed.

No philosopher has ever undertaken to name the elements and give their true proportion in the human compound which the world calls greatness.

It is possible for a man to be great without honesty, like Mariborough; brave without patriotism, like Benedict Arnold; great without morality, like Rousseau, or great like Voltaire, to whom Frederick the Great wrote: "If your works deserve statues, your conduct deserves handcuffs."

Then, too, greatness is a relative term, and it is hard to determine the point where it grades into mediocrity or the point where it shades into notoriety, which is a sort of bastard brother of greatness.

To this class belong all those who possess that impalpable quality—impossible to describe, teach, or counterfeit—the faculty of fooling the crowd, which amounts to genius in some cases and collects toll from the credulity of all ages.

I lay no stress on money. I do not call a man great necessarily because he has capitalized an industry, taken the right tips on stock, discovered a mine, cornered oil or steel, captured the standing timber of a nation, owns a town, or controls a railroad.

The men who have done these things have their reward, and their reward, among other things, amounts to the monotony of the very best, a dulled faculty of enjoyment, and eternal vigilance to protect what they have obtained.

Solomon tried it all. He asked God for wisdom, and because he asked God for wisdom and not for wealth or honor we are told that wisdom, wealth, and honor were added unto him; and, having tried it all, in his old age, from a throne of ivory in a palace of cedar, he pronounced it all vanity.

We are like travelers on a journey. The world has been explored, but it is a new country to all of us, and we travel mostly alone, although the caravan in which we journey is large. And we pick up the baubles which others have left along the way, make collections of them, capitalize them, issue shares on them, decorate ourselves with them, and go the way that those who left them went.

One man has the money-getting faculty; another has not. One man has the bump of acquisitiveness, and another has not; and generally when there is a convex on one side of a man's head there is a concave on the other side to make up

Of course there are great men of wealth and men of great wealth, but the public comment makes little distinction, except that the five-talent man attracts more attention than the twotalent man and is therefore singled out for more frequent denunciation.

We have no titles of nobility, but we have men who command markets to rise, and they rise; to fall, and they fall; who could buy a moderate-sized kingdom without financial inconvenience, and we have constant illustrations of the involuntary deference that one million pays to two millions.

People are constantly rated according to their bank accounts, not only in Dun's and Bradstreet's, but socially.

These distinctions are not abolished above-ground even in the cemetery, where the shadow of the monument of financial success falls across the pauper's anonymous grave in the potter's field just over the fence.

General Alger was a rich man, but his claims to distinction are in no wise based upon his wealth, except that it enabled him to respond nobly to the charitable impulses within him, to respond nobly to his own constant desire to relieve want and to extend the hand of pity and alleviation to all those in distress.

I read some days ago the story of a man who died and, being called before a Mighty Presence, was asked to state what things he had accomplished while on earth, and he humbly answered that he had accomplished nothing; that his life had been a failure, and then there rose up a multitude of witnesses of good deeds done in secret, until this feeble, wayworn failure in the race of life was glorified.

And so I think some things in General Alger's life, least known about, may constitute his most enduring claim to glory.

He was a man of exalted patriotism. He risked his life time and again for love of country.

Perhaps humanity may sometimes meet upon some higher level than patriotism, but at present there is no nobler trait in human nature than love of a man's country.

He was an honest man, and the reputation of an honest public official is part of the moral capital of our whole country.

He was a modest man. He never stood around on prominent corners for the purpose of being pointed at as a celebrity.

He was a sincere man. Sincerity is a trait that in the long run can not be counterfeited. It is like a flame-no one can

A man's name comes to stand for what he is, and the name of Gen. Russell A. Alger stands for the life of a brave, generous, honest gentleman, who loved his country and served it to the best of his ability.

Mr. DARRAGH. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Gen. RUSSELL A. ALGER had its beginning soon after the close of the He was at that time, as he ever after continued to civil war. be, the idol of the veteran soldiery of Michigan.

He was then serving as commander of the Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, to which office his comrades had elected him in recognition of his valor as a soldier and of his worth as a citizen. He was the first man ever chosen. to fill that office.

Our acquaintance later ripened into a warm personal attachment which remained unbroken to the end.

The recollection of the kindly interest which Senator ALGER ever made manifest in matters which concerned me and the helpfulness of his counsel impel me to pay humble tribute to the memory of him whom I esteemed as a friend and admired as a

To the people of the State of Michigan, whose love and high esteem for Senator Alger had been so frequently demonstrated. the announcement of his death came with all the force of a personal bereavement. His never-failing kindness, his faith in his fellow-man, his gracious hospitality, his munificent and yet unostentatious charity, his sublime courage and patience and dignity when unjustly assailed, his correct life, and his honorable and distinguished career as a soldier and as a citizen all endeared him to the hearts of the people of his State, who knew him best and loved him most.

RUSSELL A. ALGER at the age of 11 years faced the world as a poor and obscure orphan boy. With something of that courage and confidence which was a dominant trait in his character he confronted the situation. He earned his daily bread and acquired an education. He studied law and was admitted to practice.

At the outbreak of the civil war he raised a company of volunteers and was mustered into the service of the United States as captain of Company C, Second Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, of which regiment Philip H. Sheridan was soon thereafter placed in command as its colonel.

Captain Alger was, by promotion, made major April 2, 1862. He was wounded and taken prisoner in action at Booneville, Miss., July 1, 1862; was appointed lieutenant-colonel Sixth Michigan Cavalry October 30, 1862, and colonel Fifth Michigan Cavalry June 11, 1863.

He was again severely wounded in action July 8, 1863. He served with distinction under Sheridan, Kilpatrick, and Custer, and participated in more than three-score battles and minor engagements.

"For gallant and meritorious services during the war" he was commissioned brevet brigadier-general and was mustered out of the service as brevet major-general, United States Volunteers, at the age of 29. Such is the brief history of his brilliant and honorable military career.

When hostilities had ceased and his country no longer needed his services in the field, he returned his sword to its scabbard and devoted himself to business affairs with the same energy, the same intelligent forcefulness, the same courage that characterized his military service, and abundant success crowned his

Senator Alger's life was one of achievement. The influence of such a life as his, let us hope, will live on as an inspiration to the young man of to-day and to the young man of the future.

The greatest of English poets has said:

The evil that men do lives after them; The good is oft interred with their bones,

To this sentiment I do not fully subscribe. Rather let it be said that the good equally with the evil that men do will live after them and bear fruit each of its kind.

From early life Senator Alger was deeply interested in public affairs. He did not seek political preferment until he was chosen by his party as its candidate for governor of his State in 1884. To this office he was elected, but declined a renomination two years later.

At the Republican national convention in 1888 Governor ALGER was the candidate of his State for the office of President, and was one of the three leading candidates for that high office.

From the date of the organization of the military orders of the Loyal Legion and the Grand Army of the Republic, General ALGER took a lively interest and a prominent part in the affairs of these societies. He was elected commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic in the year 1889.

In 1897 President McKinley appointed General Algen to a place in his Cabinet as Secretary of War. In the discharge of the duties of this office, made difficult and trying by reason of the war with Spain, and because of our almost complete unpreparedness for war, General Alger labored diligently, and with a measure of success which few men could have equaled under like conditions.

The following high tribute was paid to the character and services of General Alger by his successor, Mr. Secretary of War Taft, in the formal announcement of General Alger's death made to the Army:

The Secretary of War announces with deep sorrow the death of the Hon. Russell Alexander Alger, which occurred on the 24th instant, at his residence in this city.

General Alger was Secretary of War during the administration of President McKinley, from March 5, 1897, to August 1, 1899; a period during which the administration of the War Department was brought into great prominence through its activities in connection with the war with Spain and the military operations in the Philippines that succeeded it.

General Alger was patriotic, earnest, and most devoted to the interests of the Army, and especially considered of the realistic the succeeded.

Succeeded it.

General Alger was patriotic, earnest, and most devoted to the interests of the Army, and especially considerate of the welfare of enlisted men. He was a gentle, kindly man, with great confidence in his friends and associates, and was much beloved by his subordinates. He was the subject of unjust criticism because of the country's lack of preparedness for war when war came, although for this he was in no wise responsible. His record as a soldier in the civil war was long, useful, and highly honorable.

General Alger became United States Senator by appointment of the governor of Michigan on Sentember 27, 1902, to succeed of the governor of Michigan on September 27, 1902, to succeed the late Senator James McMillan, and was elected to that office on January 20, 1903.

Owing to failing health, he declined to be a candidate for re-His term of office as Senator would have expired on March 4 next.

His last prayer was answered:

I want to die in the harness. I want to give my family and friends just as little trouble as possible when the time comes. I would prefer to live, but I am ready to go.

"Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams" Senator Alger passed into the great unknown.

Upon no citizen of Michigan has a grateful people bestowed so many and such high honors as were cheerfully accorded to Senator Alger, if we except only Gen. Lewis Cass. Russell A. ALGER died full of years and full of honors. His deeds will be his most enduring monument.

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths; In feelings, not in figures on a dial. We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, to me it is a rather solemn and unpleasant duty to speak on memorial occasions, and were it not for the fact that he whose memory we honor here to-day was a resident of Michigan, I should adhere to my hitherto un-broken rule of contemplating in silence the memory of my departed friends. I can see much that is proper and much that is beautiful in setting apart a day of the Congress to eulogize deceased Members. I am only sorry that we live in such an age of business and of practical things that when a man dies we have scarcely time to attend his funeral, much less to memorialize him. It is undoubtedly an evidence of man's divinity that in the presence of death resentments are softened and only good thoughts are in control.

Sometimes things are said on such occasions as this which rught to have been said before death had stopped the ears to words of censure or praise. It is probably true that he who has passed to the Great Beyond will not be affected by what we may say here to-day, but we possibly—the few of us who are -will be made better for having contemplated the man who has departed from among us. How much better it would be if we could only find time to say the things that the man would like to hear before he has gone out from among us.

RUSSELL A. ALGER since 1859 and until his death in this city was a resident of Michigan. He contributed largely to the development of our State and for many years was one of our foremost citizens. At his death he was considered a wealthy man, but his wealth was due to his own energy and ability; and he will not be known hereafter because of his wealth, but rather because of his life as a public citizen.

His was a strenuous life, and much of it was passed during crucial periods of our country's history. When the rebellion broke out he enlisted and was mustered in as captain of Company C, Second Michigan Cavalry, and at the end of seven months he was promoted to the position of major of his regiment. In six months more he became a lieutenant-colonel of the Sixth Michigan Cavalry, and after seven months more he was again advanced to the position of colonel of the Fifth Michigan Cavalry; and on June 11, 1864, for meritorious services in battles, he was brevetted brigadier-general, and one year later was made brevet major-general of United States volun-

Few soldiers of the great civil war have advanced more rapidly; but promotion came not as the result of achievements on parade, but rather because of things done in action. He was engaged, as has been stated here, in sixty-six battles and skirmishes, and so strong was his faith, so dauntless his courage, that defeat was never contemplated by him. I have thought that the "plunger" in business life makes the most brilliant soldier; he has a vision of something desirable, and no intervening obstacle retards him. General Alger in business more than once had his all staked on practically a single venture. He only saw success. He did not see, or, at least, was not deterred by, the difficulties in his path. He knew that lumber was a staple, and into it he plunged with all the vigor of his strong nature. Several times it seemed that he had gone in too deeply, but lumber rose to meet his necessities and success was his. In war it was the same. He believed in the ultimate triumph of the Union and recognized nothing insuperable in its pathway. In 1884 he was elected governor of Michigan, and in 1888 was a formidable candidate for President at the Republican national convention at Chicago. One of the sad yet glorious memories of Michigan's citizens is General Alger's connection with the War Department. Sad, because circumstances placed upon his brow a crown of thorns, which malice and ignorance pressed down hard; glorious, because he lived long enough to see himself vindicated and to have the crown of thorns supplanted by a wreath of immortelles. Michigan never lost faith in her distinguished son, and on the death of Senator McMillan the vacancy was filled with General Alger.

He died in the harness. His was a nature which could not endure idleness, and his wish to serve to the last was gratified. Only when the war was over and the Union preserved did he lay down his sword. Only when the Great Commander or-dered him to "fall out" did the beloved Senator Alger quit the distinguished service he had rendered his State and nation.

It seems most fitting that his eyes should close here in the nation's capital. In 1865, at the age of 20 years, he, as major-general, beheld the glorious concluding spectacle of the civil war. Here at the beginning of the Spanish war he was the Secretary of War. Here, as Senator since 1902, he assisted in shaping the destiny of the nation he fought to preserve. here loving hands tenderly bore his earthly tenement to its last resting place in Michigan, where there was but one heart, and that heart was sad. His bereaved family will miss him most, for he was preeminently a devoted husband and a loving father.

But thousands of newsboys, who through his bounty and encouragement were inspired with ambition to do and to be, will mourn his death, and the citizens of Detroit and all Michigan will appreciate that one of their most respected and influential men has gone out from among them.

Death is always a solemn thing; whether it comes in the morning, at noon, or at night, it is unwelcome; but of very few men could it be said that their work was more nearly finished, their lives more completely rounded out, their duty more fully performed than of Senator Alger when he "wrapped the drapery of his couch about him and lay down to pleasant dreams.

For a year or more he stood in his open grave and waited for the walls to fall upon him; but he was unafraid and asked no He had met death before. He had become familiar with all the sensations which come to a man under those circumstances and was unterrified. A few days before he died I sat beside him in the dining room of this House, and he discussed his coming dissolution hopefully and cheerfully, and when I reminded him that all Michigan was his friend he said: "I believe that is true, and I would rather have that to console me than to know that I could have my days prolonged." His face lighted up, and his eyes shone with an expression of perfect faith and confidence. He was apparently ready to go, and well could he have repeated the words of the venerable poet, uttered under similar circumstances:

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in alr;
I only know I can not drift
Beyond His love and care.
And so, beside the silent sea,
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm can come from Him to me
On ocean or on shore.

His life work was well done, and the allotted span of life having been passed, he went to sleep amidst the flowers of love and esteem and awakened at the Master's commendation-" Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON, HENRY C. ADAMS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. Henry C. Adams, late a Member of this House from the State of Wisconsin. Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Sentender ate. Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, duty and desire alike prompt me to offer to the memory of the distinguished dead a just and tender tribute. I was not within the inner circle of his friends, for he was of a generation just preceding my own, but I knew him personally and well for more than one-half the years of my life; and during all these years, however much at times we might chance to differ in our personal choice of measures, as of men, we were never on other than friendly terms; and his closest friends are now, it gives me great pleasure to add, equally near and dear to me.

It was on Monday, the 9th day of July, last summer, that HENRY CULLEN ADAMS crossed the bar and saw, face to face, his Pilot and his God.

He was on his journey home. The first session of the present Congress, in which he had played a somewhat stirring, strenuous, and conspicuous part, had just passed into recorded history. Against the urgent and the anxious counsel and advice of his colleagues and of his friends he had stayed to see the word written at the end of the last chapter. In thus playing his prescribed part in this drama of modern American history making, played as it is in the fierce lime light of national publicity, he had overstrained his frail and then enfeebled health beyond the point its marvelous elasticity had permitted in the past. Thus the dreaded messenger overtook him, speeding homeward behind the modern fiery foe of distance and of time, serving the inevitable summons even before he could reach again home, wife, children, and find rest. For a week or more, in a quiet room at the Auditorium Hotel, in Chicago, life grappled with death, hope fought despair; but at last his dauntless will gave way and his immortal spirit winged its long voyage across the silent river and passed through the inwardswinging gates of eternity beyond the boundaries of time.

To his many friends in his home State, and more particularly to the community in which fifty and six years of activity were spent, his departure came as a rude and sudden shock. gressman Adams had for years been a man of extremely frail physique, but he was so active, energetic, and self-reliant that no one who knew him was quite prepared for the sad news when the tidings of his mortal end flashed over the wires. Obituaries, those humble handmaidens of History, dipped their gentle pens in the ink of brotherly love and wrote for the last time of his honorable parentage, his humble birth, his high educational attainments, his splendid achievements in the affairs of men, praised his many virtues, forgot his frailties—for who hath none?—and now we—you, his colleagues, and I, his successor—in this Congress would say the last word and do the last honor to the departed dead in the same spirit of kindly fellowship, for when face to face with the unsolved mystery of mysteries who can have thought of aught but his brother's virtues? And so, hoping for mercy as we show mercy, we bow our heads in humility and speak most kindly of them we shall know again when the hourglass of our allotted time shall have run its unknown course.

There were mourning and gloom manifest in his home city, not merely in the trappings and outward tokens, the crape and drapery on doors, the floating flags on capitol, court-house, and city hall, but in the tearful eye, the spoken voice, and the sad hearts of all whom "Cully" (as he was familiarly called) had encircled within the limits of his life.

Thus it is written that HENRY CULLEN ADAMS was born in Verona, Oneida County, N. Y., November 28, 1850. His father was Benjamin Franklin Adams, a very cultured gentleman and a graduate of Hamilton College, New York, of which institution of learning he was for some time professor of Greek and Latin.

But the East was not to be the field of action in which the ambitions of Henry Cullen Adams should find development. In the early fifties, all but a babe in his mother's arms, his parents bore him with them westward. Thus it was that at the last session of Congress his voice rang out in clarion tones for what he believed to be the best interests of the West.

Wisconsin had only shortly before been admitted into the proud sisterhood of sovereign States, and to her virgin soil the elder Adams had directed his footsteps and upon that soil he wisely pitched his tent. At first the Adams family lived at Beaver Dam, later moved to Liberty Prairie, and finally settled near Madison, the old farm being now a part of the capital city.

The elder Adams had a great love for agriculture. respect the influence of the father was strikingly reflected in his honored son. From his days upon the farm at Liberty Prairie agriculture and its kindred pursuits became the constant theme of his oratory and the field of his success. It was not, however, as a farmer, but as a champion and spokesman of farm industries, that Henry Cullen Adams climbed the ladder of fame.

He early realized that knowledge constitutes power. While doing his share of the work on his father's farm he longed for the magic wand—an education. It may be that the young man, looking into the dim vistas of the future with the prophetic eye of hope and ambition, saw gleaming on some far-away hillton the dome of the National Capitol, which by pursuing steadily the pathway of loyalty to Ceres he was to reach before his journey's end. After the public schools he attended for one year the little academy that lies nestled away from the main highways of men in the beautiful town of Albion. This little institution of learning, by the way, was destined to produce men in Wisconsin who have come to be leaders in law, letters, and politics. The names of Justice Charles K. Bardeen and Senator Knute Nelson occur to me as illustrating the high type of its scholarship, and many of these noted men were classmates of our departed friend. He was also for three years a student at the University of Wisconsin, but ill health, his constantly recurring affliction, prevented graduation, as it did his subsequent essay on a legal career. He undertook to read law in a law office, but was forced to desist, and thereupon engaged in the dairy and fruit business as an avocation, in which he continued up to the last fifteen years, which, aside from his official duties, he largely devoted to real estate.

Mr. Adams's activity in the great field he had made his life study was too extended and varied for me to review within the limits of my time. It is enough to point out that by virtue of his superior education, clear and forceful rhetoric, and profound interest in agriculture his rise was rapid and continuous in the esteem and confidence of the farmers of his State. He was institute conductor, and one of the most popular. He became secretary of the State Horticulture Society; then president of the State Dairymen's Association, a field in which his greatest honors were won. He was for a long time an influential member on the State board of agriculture. Linked with that of his devoted personal friend, former Governor William Dempster Hoard, the name of Henry Cullen Adams will long be found high in the annals of agriculture and dairying not only in Wiscensin but in all the West.

ing not only in Wisconsin, but in all the West.

His political history is equally varied and extensive. It follows naturally that a man so gifted as Mr. Adams should be a leader in the great American pastime—politics. From the time he entered the legislative assembly, in the early eighties, up to his death, with the exception of a very few years, he was serving the public and his party in some high official position. He was assemblyman, superintendent of public property, dairy and food commissioner, and Congressman. It was in the two latter positions that he did the greatest good for his fellowmen. His successor as dairy and food commissioner has given Mr. Adams very high praise for laying the foundations through wise legislation of the dairy and food department, perhaps the most essential department in the State government for the protection of the people from the injurious consequences of the sale of fraudulent adulterations of food.

Mr. Adams was a Republican. He was high in the councils of the party. For years he was a member of the State central committee. In State and Congressional conventions his voice was generally heard, and frequently as presiding officer. He was, too, at one time a delegate at large to the Republican national convention. But though a party man, he was never intensely partisan. He could differ with men and not harbor feeling. He was too full of the milk of human kindness to permit the base feeling of envy, malice, or hatred to corrode his heart. He loved his friends and clung to them, but he wanted no enemies and had extremely few.

Mr. Adams was rich in his family life. He was married in 1878 to Anna B. Norton, of Madison, a good wife and a gracious lady, who still survives him. They have four children—two sons and two daughters, splendid types of manhood and womanhood.

Henry Cullen Adams was of an independent mind. In this Hall he more than once demonstrated his moral courage and his independence. Nay, more; he displayed the highest quality of soul—that of self-sacrifice. It was the verdict of his colleagues and of his friends when he passed away that in the service of his country he made the sacrifice, greater than which no man can make for the land he loves and the welfare of its people. He gave all he had—his strength, his life.

of its people. He gave all he had—his strength, his life.

The great bard of the Romans sang of old "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori," a strain of patriotic sentiment that has reechoed in the hearts of men down to us through all the corridors of time. And may we not say that if war has its heroism, no less has peace, for who in public life does not know that it takes as much of moral courage and of self-sacrifice to stand up for conscience and for right on the battlefields of peace as upon the wild, delirious fields of war?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, very trite but very true is the statement that blessings brighten as they take their flight. Perspective adds to the beauty of a scene. The great characters of the world have ever appeared greater as depicted in history than as seen by their associates. The love of a mother for a child never appears quite so strong as when intensified by the death of the child. So it seems to me to-day it is with our late friend. The sweetness of his character seems sweeter, its strength stronger, since he left us.

Henry C. Adams was a most unusual personality. With the physical strength of a child, apparently frail in the extreme, he had limitless moral and mental courage; his rugged honesty was as great as his muscular power was slight. His mental equipoise was well-nigh perfect; his judgment of men and measures was superior; he was industrious, studious, painstaking, wishing ever to carry more than his portion of every burden.

He was persistent, was aggressive, and yet his thought of others was so kindly that the aggressiveness was never offensive. He was true—true to every public trust intrusted to him; true to those whom he called friend. He was noble—noble of thought, of word, of deed. He was Christ-like—bear me witness his colleagues who saw him day by day saw him as he struggled to accomplish something for the betterment of some condition, saw him as with his ringing voice and clear diction he opposed some action with the wisdom of which he could not assent. Was ever unkind word heard to come from his lips?

He accorded to others with whom he radically differed honesty of thought and action. In all the hundreds of men who have come and gone during my nearly a score of years of service here I have known, admired, loved many. Some have disclosed wondrous strength of intellect, some superior courage, some special consideration for others, some unusual industry, devotion to duty, capacity for accomplishment—all integrity—and yet, as I mentally call the roll of those whose earthly work has closed, I think of none who possessed so many of the characteristics which attract and hold friends, so much of brightness, of sympathy, of loving-kindness, of sweetness of character, as dear "Cully" Adams.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, more than thirty years ago, while a student at the University of Wisconsin, I first became acquainted with Henry Cullen Adams. In his younger life, when I knew him in Wisconsin, he manifested the same qualities of mind and heart which distinguished him in his last days as a Member of this House. An honest, open-hearted frankness, and extreme loyalty to any cause which he espoused were perhaps his most marked characteristics as a youth, as a citizen, and as a legislator. Indeed, Mr. Adams possessed many of the qualities that justly make men great, beloved, and distinguished. He was a loving and loyal friend and had arisen to that height of soul development where he could forgive his enemies. to hear the voice of conscience he pursued with fidelity the course which duty pointed with a boldness and courage which elicited the admiration and praise of all who knew him or watched his public career. This House, during his service here, had frequent exhibitions of the zeal and fearlessness with which he advocated those measures which he believed to be right, and with which he fought in almost savage ferocity those things in legislation and in the conduct of the business of the House which he believed to be wrong.

Of old American stock, his soul was loyal to that perfect law of liberty for which his fathers strove, and he always granted to others all the freedom of thought and conduct which he claimed and exercised for himself. He had no patience with the methods by which men sometimes seek to hamper the exercise of those rights of conscience which all men having any of the elements of greatness recognize as our dearest heritage. He carried this spirit of toleration into his duties here, and in all his relations with his colleagues he was always courteous, gentle, and manly, although he did not hesitate in debate to call things by their right names and hit hard and directly from the shoulder those things that aroused his opposition. In these things we, his colleagues, may with profit follow in his footsteens.

Mr. Adams's public career properly began with his election to the legislature of Wisconsin in 1883, but the work which most entitles him to the gratitude of the people of his State was that which for eight years he did as dairy and food inspector of the State of Wisconsin. The knowledge and experience gained by him in the conduct of that office proved to be of immense value to the House and to the country during the last session of Congress in the preparation and passage of the meat-inspection measure and the pure-food bill, in both of which he took a prominent part. In the death of Mr. Adams just at the most useful period of his life the country at large has lost an able, an honest, and a conscientious legislator, and the agricultural interests of the country an intelligent and faithful friend and representative.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that without offense to his friends or to the proprieties of this occasion I may speak of a matter purely personal to Mr. Adams. Even when I knew him as a student the disease which must have made a large part of his life a constant pain and which ultimately caused his death had already fastened itself upon him. This disease forced him to give up his university course before it was fully completed and to abandon whatever ambitious projects he may, in his early manhood, have cherished for himself. He devoted himself to agricultural pursuits in the hope, no doubt, that an outdoor life would restore him to perfect health and strength. This hope was never fully realized. Although handicapped by this lack of health and strength he was always most cheerful, and his fellow-citizens, recognizing his ability and worth in spite of the disease which would have made of most men hypochondriacs and invalids, continued to advance him from one position of trust and responsibility to another where the labor incident to his official duties so absorbed him as to make him almost forget his physical ailment. To comparatively few men has come in such great measure the confidence and respect which those of his fellow-men who best knew him freely and gencrously accorded to Mr. Adams. As I look over his life since I have known him, and think of the terrible physical handicap under which he labored, I am surprised that he was able to accomplish so much that will be of lasting benefit to his State, to his country, and to his fellow-men. But the years we spend in this world are only the beginning of eternity. The grave is only the open door to larger opportunity, to grander effort, to holier, nobler living. Not as the light of a candle which flickers in the darkness for a brief time and then goes out forever is the life of man, but rather as the light of the sun which, after the work of the day, goes down only to rise again upon other scenes, to warm and stimulate other fields, other trees and flowers. And so as we pay tributes to the memory of our departed colleague, let us hope that the sun of life which in this world was somewhat obscured for him by the clouds of physical weakness may have risen full orbed and clear upon that immortal life into which he has entered.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, with mingled feelings of pain and pride I rise to say a few words regarding the life and character of Hon. H. C. Adams. I am overwhelmed with sorrow when I reflect upon the nation's loss, his State's loss, and his family's loss. The nation has been deprived of the services of a great, good, and competent Representative. The State of Wisconsin has suffered an equivalent loss, and his family has been bereft of a wise, kind, and indulgent husband and father.

A certain sort of mental pleasure is realized, however, in being able to honestly offer evidence of his noble character and devoted loyalty to the country he loved so well, his lofty ideals, and his high and noble purposes.

It is no exaggeration to assert that Mr. Adams was a constructive statesman and an ideal Congressman. He was honest in all things and careful and painstaking in all things. He possessed the courage of his convictions and never sidestepped or flinched in the performance of what he conceived to be his duty, and never "dodged a record vote," or anything else, through fear of personal consequences, as many others in this day and generation do. His word was as good as a gold bond, and he kept his promises like a man that he was, and stood out "foursquare to all the world and every wind that blows."

Notwithstanding his public career was cut short by the "grim reaper," Death, of which I am confident he was admonished months in advance, he was indefatigable in the performance of his public duty.

By reason of his long and successful experience as State food and dairy commissioner of Wisconsin, where such subjects are thoroughly understood, he was technically qualified to dictate, in some measure, the most important legislation passed by Congress during his membership. And it is also a matter of common knowledge, at least among his colleagues in this Chamber, that in the preparation of the pure-food bill and the law governing the inspection of packing houses and meat products the technical knowledge and natural genius of H. C. Adams exercised a potent influence on legislation. This statement can be corroborated by the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture. Certain distinguished gentlemen may vie with each other for all the honor of this new and important legislation, but the fact remains the legislation itself bears the well-known earmarks of H. C. Adams. He was not an egotist, never sounded his own praise or boasted of his own achievements, and the world may never know what he has done to make

Had his life been spared it is certain he would have developed into one of the most prominent and useful Members of this body.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the death of Hon. H. C. ADAMS, of Wisconsin, was a calamity to the State and nation. I had known him for many years. His character was as sturdy as the oak, and his ideas of right and wrong were so thoroughly fixed that there never could be any question as to his integrity. His wide experience and public career had especially fitted him to perform the duties of a Member of Congress, and it was his work and his devotion to duty that were largely responsible for his death. His ideas on public matters were always well digested and clear in his own mind, and his ability to express them was recognized by practically all of the Members of this His physical make-up was too weak to support the brain and mind of the man who was constantly at work in the interests not only of the district which he represented, but of the whole country.

I loved him as a brother and feel his loss keenly. His high character and manly instincts will be an example for the coming generation.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, nothing that I can say in eulogy of the late Henry C. Adams can measure my admiration of him as a man or give my real appreciation of his service as a co-worker in this Congress.

In an intimate acquaintanceship, covering his entire service in Congress, I found him to be an affable, genial, candid, and at the same time earnest and intelligent man. Toward all great questions involving the interest of his fellow-citizens his attitude was easily ascertainable. He concealed nothing, and expressed his opinions with the utmost candor and with a force which can come only as the result of intense earnestness. As a companion he was engaging; as a conversationist, always interesting; as a fellow-worker, always reliable, and as a public servant he approximated the ideal. Of frail physique and always in wretched health, it would not be hard to imagine him as a person of morose and cross disposition. Ill health too often embitters the sweetest disposition. With Mr. Adams it was not thus; on the contrary, he was an optimist in his He loved the beautiful, was moved to tears by disposition. music, and was a disciple of that faith which regards the world as growing better day by day and sees in life something worth its living. He enjoyed a good joke and delighted to entertain his friends with numerous reminiscences of his own All in all, his was a most lovable character, and experience. uplifted and ennobled those whose privilege it was to come in contact with it.

In politics Mr. Adams was a Republican, and yet I feel that it can be safely said of him that he was never a partisan in the offensive meaning of that word. It was my pleasure to serve with him on the great Committee on Agriculture for a number of years, and yet I do not recall a single partisan utterance as falling from his lips. To the members of this committee from the South he was especially considerate. I take it that it was not a tribute to them personally, but a liberal and in-telligent recognition of the wonderful agricultural and indus-trial possibilities of that great section from whence they came. There never came before that committee a proposition looking to the development of the southern interests which did not enlist his sympathy and active help. He was absolutely nonsectional in his views, and, if anything, he gave preference to the South.

No man on the committee, I dare say no man in the House, was so thoroughly conversant with agricultural problems in this country, both in their scientific and practical aspects, as was the deceased. His whole life was given to a special study of agriculture in all its varied phases; his knowledge of it was intimate, so much so that he was regarded in Congress and by the country as an authority. To develop the agriculture of the country, to make farm life pleasant, to educate and train the farm boy and farm girl to a better conception of the manifold advantages of farm life, to impress upon the country the value of science in agriculture, to demonstrate the necessity of care and intelligence as a prerequisite for successful agriculture—all these, and more, made up the life work of this good man. He was an enthusiast upon the subject, and though buffeted and browbeaten by prejudice and misunderstanding, his optimism never deserted him nor his faith in the coming of a time when ideal farm conditions should prevail in this country leave him.

It was this enthusiasm, this belief that a good fight for a worthy cause could not fail, which induced him to introduce and fight through Congress a bill doubling the appropriation to the State experiment stations of the country. Who can forget the earnestness, the vigor, the persistency, the tenacity which marked his efforts in this behalf? Nothing could daunt him, nothing could stem the tide of his enthusiasm. The opposition was brushed aside by the justness of his cause and by the eloquence and earnestness with which he presented it, and this one act, this one supreme and triumphant effort in behalf of the American farmer, is sufficient to make Henry C. Adams one of the splendid characters of our history. And when agriculture receives that recognition to which she is entitled, when our farmhouses are filled with educated and happy occupants, and when ideal conditions have been reached, his name will be revered along with that of Morrill and Hatch. Can any higher tribute be paid to any man than to give him equal rank with those men in our history who have wrought most effectively and wisely for the greatest industry of the nation? The time will be when the name of ADAMS will be whispered in reverence by every man who believes in an educated agricultural people.

Loyal to his friends, liberal in his views, independent in his opinions, courageous in his convictions, an aggressive fighter, a skillful debater, an eloquent advocate, an earnest worker, a wise legislator, he was the embodiment of all the elements essential to the highest type of American citizenship, and the bright example of his life and work may well serve as a guide star for those of us he has left behind.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I first became acquainted with Mr. Adams at the beginning of the Fifty-eighth Congress. In the short, very short, period within which I knew him I learned his wondrous qualities of heart and mind and to appreciate him, in a measure at least, as he deserved.

Mr. Adams was possessed of sterling qualities; was a coherent and logical thinker, his mind invariably reaching right and correct conclusions on all of the great social problems of his time and with a courage unfaltering and steadfast that led him to adhere to the right as he knew it. These characteristics being dominant in this representative of the people whose memory we commemorate to-day, it seems impossible that any words which we can set in order here upon this Sabbath of sorrow would exaggerate the public loss in the death of Henry Cullen Adams.

His work in the National House of Representatives was suddenly interrupted by death almost as soon as it was begun, but in the brief period while he was associated with us he conquered to himself a place in our respect by his vigorous intellect. His qualities of heart and soul won universal friendship and affection.

It was my privilege to know him somewhat intimately, and I know of nothing sadder than the regret of that great mind and soul at its own limitations imposed by bodily weakness. While seldom well, and never strong, Mr. Adams was always cheerful and lovable. Those who knew him best had for him the warmest affection and most profound respect. As a Representative, both his influence and his vote were used and administered as a sacred and holy trust in the interests of those whom he represented, and in bringing my humble tribute to his memory I wish to conclude with the thought that whatever he did was well done, as if his life had been molded and controlled by the sentiment of the poet when he said:

Do good! Do noble deeds!
Not dream them all day long,
So that life and death
And the vast forever shall be
One grand, sweet song.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, we meet to-day to pay our tribute of respect to the memory and character of Henry Cullen Adams, Member of Congress from the Second district of Wisconsin.

He left Washington shortly after the adjournment of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress for his home in Madison. On arriving at Chicago he was taken sick, and after an illness of a few days died at the Auditorium, in that city. In his death his State and his nation sustained a great loss.

Mr. Adams held many important positions of trust and honor, both public and private, in his State. He served his State as a member of the assembly, superintendent of public property, and dairy and food commissioner. In November, 1903, he was elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress. Few men were so well qualified by experience and training for the important duties required of a Member of Congress.

He was a man of great force and ability, kindly and genial in manner. He had that quality usually known as "good common sense" in the highest degree. He made friends easily and quickly, and soon won a prominent position among his associates in the House of Representatives. His Congressional career was exceptionally successful. In his term of three years he accomplished much, especially for the agricultural interests of his State and nation, and they have cause to remember him with gratitude.

His duties as a member of the Committee on Agriculture in the Fifty-ninth Congress were exceedingly important and arduous. In the legislation relating to meat inspection his services were most valuable. The President called him into consultation upon this important legislation, and its satisfactory solution was largely due to his extended knowledge of the subject and his good judgment. His response to the call of duty in the closing days of that important session of Congress overtaxed his bodily strength and undoubtedly was the principal cause of his untimely death.

Life is a great mystery. The object and purpose of our being here are not made clear to us. Men strive here to attain the highest purpose, to gain the greatest success in life, and we may well ask, What is success? Some conceive it to be one thing, some another. Many strive after wealth as if it were the most desirable and highest object to be obtained. "Cully" Adams, as he was familiarly known, had that which money can not buy. He had earned the respect, the confidence, and love of his neighbors and fellow-men. What greater success can one gain in this world than to win the love and esteem of mankind?

Most of his life was spent in exposing fraud and deceit and in the betterment of humanity. The world has gained something through his life; it has been made better thereby. He was honest, faithful, and true, and in all positions of life met every requirement of right and duty. His State mourns his loss.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, on this Sabbath, in the Hall in which he so well distinguished himself, we come to lay our garlands of praise to the late Henry Cullen Adams in the memorial records of Congress, and to pay tribute to his nobility of character, his high ideals of public duty, his eminence as a legislator, and his worth as a man:

To accord him a proper place in the legislative annals, attention should be directed to his independence in political action, to his devotion to principle, and to his adherence to right-doing in every endeavor.

He was too conscientious and too forceful a character to surrender meekly to rule and numbers when he held fixed convictions. This trait was exemplified in his position on several measures in his last year's service in Congress that brought him distinction and renown. Notably may be mentioned his stand in oppositon to joint statehood and to free trade with the Philippines. His courageous and independent position on these measures, though it lowered heavy and undeserved criticism upon him, marks more than aught else his strong personality and his courage to do right as he saw it.

Not only was his independence of action commanding, but his judgment on large public questions was respected for its conservatism and soundness. Again, he was gifted with voice and phrase to claim distinction as an orator and with poignancy of repartee to be classed as a strong debater. The Congressional, Record will bear lasting testimony to his keen mentality and to his command of good English.

Born and reared on a farm, he had the advantage of the academic training at the State University at Madison that stamped him indelibly as a college-bred man. The various positions of trust and responsibility that he filled before his elevation to Congress as State legislator and in administrative capacities equipped him for the rôle he was to play in the larger and more responsible position of Representative.

It can be said without hyperbole of statement that few Representatives in three years of service attained a more commanding position and rose so rapidly to eminence as Mr. Adams.

His greatest public service was as arbitrator of the differences arising from the meat-inspection measure, where the expert knowledge he had acquired years before as State dairy and food commissioner placed him in the unique position of being best qualified to speak as to the need of Government inspection, and as to the proper legislation to safeguard the interests of the public. Though he triumphed in the settlement of a dispute of great consequence to humanity's cause, his great effort in achieving this result accelerated unquestionably within two weeks of its accomplishment his untimely end.

With greatly impaired health, he gave close application to every detail connected with legislative work, which was a marvel to all who knew his sufferings. Many a time in the last three months of his service good friends, seeing his failing health, urged and cautioned him to rest, but, impelled with that strange call of duty, he heeded not their admonitions to rest for his own sake.

But though he suffered and labored under greatest difficulty, no complaint and no wailings were ever uttered to his intimates, for his temperament was roseate by nature, and it shone more resplendent because of its envelopment in the mask of suffering.

It is inexpressibly sad to have a conscientious public servant sacrifice his life on the public altar, and especially where health is broken and where every effort seems to reduce the vitality one jot more until the last drop is drained. Those of robust and sturdy constitution fail to contemplate the indomitable and overpowering will that impels these frail crafts with keen mentalities to keep aloft in their aspirations and achievements.

Dead in his prime, Mr. Adams sacrificed his own life to the welfare of the people's cause, and he died a martyr in the highest calling of unselfish devotion to duty and of performance well done. In his passing away, the Second district has lost a capable Representative, the State a high-minded citizen, and the people a faithful public servant.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, during the fifty-nine years of Wisconsin's statehood she has sent eighty-eight different individuals to represent her in this body. Of this number six have died in office: Luther Hanchett, Benjamin F. Hopkins, Joseph Rankin, William T. Price, George B. Shaw, and, last, Henry Cullen Adams, whose life and services we this day commemorate.

It is a sad duty to speak a final word for those who leave us filled with years and honors, but sadder still is it to voice our sorrow for the friend and colleague the sands of whose life have but half run. Memorial exercises such as these are proper in that they afford us an opportunity, in the midst of our public cares and labors, to give our estimate of the life and services of the dead. Through our words we may inspire those who read to emulate that which we find to be true and just and of good report.

In the death of Mr. Adams Wisconsin lost a most capable and experienced Representative. With a broad knowledge of public affairs and thorough understanding of men and measures, he entered the Fifty-eighth Congress well equipped to win for himself a successful legislative career. As a practical farmer, as State dairy and food commissioner, he acquired a reputation as an expert on agricultural subjects which extended far beyond the borders of our State. From the very beginning he took an active part in shaping legislation affecting the agricultural interests of the country. His arguments in favor of the oleomargarine bill in the public prints and before committees of Congress were largely instrumental in securing its passage. His appointment as a member of the Committee on Agriculture by the present Speaker of the House was a fitting recognition of his peculiar fitness. He did not disappoint the expectations of his friends. Realizing the valuable work of the various agricultural experiment stations of the United States, and that with an increase of funds at their disposal this work could be largely increased, he at once introduced a bill with this end in Nothing more finely illustrated a distinctive trait of view. Nothing more finely illustrated a distinctive trait of Mr. Adams's character as to fixity of purpose and indomitable will than the patient, courageous, and splendid fight he made for his bill. After the lapse of many weeks and months he won. He deserved to win, and as a result his memory lives in the chief seats of learning of almost every State in the Union.

Loyalty to duty was another trait of character which Mr. ADAMS possessed in large measure. All of us were impressed by it during the hearings and consideration of the meat-inspection legislation in the closing days of the last session. No man in either House had, on questions pertaining to inspection and the packing interests, greater practical or scientific knowledge. He entered heart and soul into the whole subject-matter, he spared not himself, his opinions were sought, he was called into counsel by the President, and when obstacles arose he helped to smooth the way. All this he did, but at what a sacrifice!

Nature in the disposal of her favors had endowed him with a feeble body, but vouchsafed to him a clear, strong, and active mind. A mind so strong as to enable him to sustain for years an enfeebled frame through the sheer power of will. However, those sultry, nerve-racking, laborious days which marked the close of the last session slowly sapped the small reserve of Mr. Adams's vitality, and day by day his feeling of exhaustion increased. Two weeks before the adjournment we advised him to leave Washington for the mountains or the seashore. With characteristic spirit he replied, "I can not go away. I must stay here until the pure-food and meat-inspection bills have passed." And so he stayed, and early in July proceeded on his homeward journey only to die on the way.

Mr. Adams's loyalty to duty found a counterpart in his loyalty to his friends. During stress of recent political storms he always stood steadfast. With frankness and courage he proclaimed his faith and stoically abided the consequences. He faithfully followed the poet's injunction:

To thine own self be true, And it must follow as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man.

His friends he numbered by the score in all parts of our State. He bound them to him as with hoops of steel through the warmth and generosity of his nature. To the needy and helpless his heart and hand were ever open.

The citizen with decision of character, generosity, broad-mindedness, and high ideals is sure to be a man of influence and public spirit in his city, district, and State. Such was our deceased colleague. In matters economic, political, and educational he played a leading part, and the force and effect of his example will long abide.

In his domestic relations Mr. Adams was singularly happy. The Mecca of all his pilgrimages was his own hearthstone. The love of wife and children helped him to forget his bodily sufferings and to inspire him to greater achievements. In him the spirit seemed ever to be willing. Now his life work is ended, for "God's finger touched him and he slept."

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, in compliance with a custom honored in its observance we have met to pay our tribute of love to the memory of a deceased colleague.

As the closing hours of the Fifty-ninth Congress approach, with all the tumult and strife which usually attend the close of a session, it is eminently proper that we pause on this sacred day and quietly review the life and work of one who served well and faithfully the people who honored him, Henry Cullen Adams, late a Member of this House from the State of Wisconsin.

His career here, all too short, was yet sufficiently long to gain for him the cordial friendship and esteem of his colleagues and, in turn, for him to demonstrate his ability as a legislator in the National House of Representatives.

Mr. Adams from young manhood strove to make his life a benefit to the community in which he lived. For a number of years he was prominent in the public affairs of Wisconsin. For four years he served that State as a member of its legislature, during which service he aided in securing legislation intended to protect the people from adulteration in food products, and especially in dairy products. A farmer and the son of a farmer, his natural instinct led him to become interested in the development of the agriculture of the country.

As president of the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association and also as the dairy and food commissioner of Wisconsin, in which latter office he served for eight years, he devoted his energy and his ability not only to the enforcement of the laws, but in developing broader ideas among the dairymen of the State and the consumers of the dairy products, in order that they might work harmoniously together for the advancement of the interests of an industry which is so vital to the prosperity of our State.

It was during this period that the Congress of the United States enacted a law to prevent the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter. Those who were engaged in that contest have always appreciated and been grateful for the splendid service rendered in behalf of that legislation by Mr. Adams. Whatever he became interested in he became a thorough student of, and having devoted much time and study to that particular subject, he was able to be of great assistance in demonstrating the absolute necessity for that legislation and the equity and justness of its enactment.

The people of the Second Congressional district of Wisconsin, appreciating his ability, elected him as their Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and he was reelected to the Fifty-ninth. His principal committee assignment was to the Committee on Agriculture. To the work of that committee he brought intelligent, broad-minded, comprehensive ideas. It was largely through his influence that the increased appropriation for the agricultural experiment stations through the country was made, and, in fact, it may truthfully be said that he alone was entitled to the credit for that legislation. His last great work as a member of that committee was in the preparation of what is known as "the meat-inspection act," passed at the last session of this Congress. We know that Members of the House hon-estly differed with each other over the provisions of that act. Each of us was desirous of the enactment of an effective law, and during the days when the fate of that measure hung in the balance Mr. Adams, although far from well, devoted his every energy to not only the perfection of the measure, but in harmonizing the differences between Members in order that the bill might become a law. His friends are pleased to know that the provisions of that bill which represented his convictions have stood the test of trial, and that the measure is producing beneficial results to the people and to the country.

His work, however, was not confined to measures pending before the committees of which he was a member. He took an active interest in all matters of legislation, and we all remember how pronounced was his opposition to the Philippine tariff bill and the joint statehood bill.

Those who were closely associated with him knew that he regretted sincerely the fact that his position on these two measures put him in opposition to the Administration and to the leaders of his party on the floor of this House. did not deter him from pursuing the course his judgment dictated, and it is to his everlasting credit and honor that, as a legislator representing a district the equal in population and intelligence of any other district in the country, he stood in this forum and defended their interests and their rights to the best of his ability, regardless of its effect upon his own personal popularity with the membership of this House. He had made a careful study of those two questions. His judgment was formed after mature and conscientious deliberation, and, having decided what he believed was the right course to pursue, he never faltered or wavered in the contest which was to follow.

He was a sincere man, a courageous man, an honest man; therefore in the contests in which he engaged he fought openly and fairly, but forcefully, for his convictions. Differences of opinion upon matters of legislation were not permitted to interfere with his social and personal relations with Members, and those against whom he contended respected and honored him the more for having been loyal to his convictions.

Lamentable, indeed, would be the condition if members of a legislative body were to be influenced in their convictions either by the clamor which comes from the multitude or the glare which surrounds those high in authority. He who without fear or favor pursues his course as his judgment dictates must in the end be given credit for consciention service. This was characteristic of our departed colleague. During his long official career he discharged the duties of every position which he occupied from a firm conviction of the right, without fear or favor and without considering what the effect might be upon his

A few days before the close of the first session of the Fifty ninth Congress, realizing that he was far from well and that his arduous labors here were undermining his strength, I personally urged him to go away and rest for a few days, or even to go home and remain for the balance of the session. This he determinedly declined to do, insisting that under no cir-cumstances would he leave his duties at the Capitol until the session was ended. He remained at his post of duty watching carefully the legislation in which he was interested until it was finally enacted into law. Then, upon the adjournment of Congress, he started for his home, where, with his family, he hoped to find rest and there regain his wasted strength and energy. But the task had been too severe, the strain too great. His weakened constitution gave way, and while en route to his home it was necessary for him to be taken to a hotel in Chicago, where, after a short illness, he passed away. Thus it may be said of him, as of those who defend their country's service of the country he loved. In his death the nation lost an able, conscientious, and earnest legislator. In his death the State of Wisconsin lost an upright, honorable citizen, one who had done much for it and tis various interests. In his death the people of the Second Congressional district of Wisconsin lost not only an able Representative, but a faithful servant, one who was always careful in attending to every duty and quick to respond to every request made by his constituents. He never neglected the pension claim of an old soldier or a soldier's widow. The honor on the battlefield, he died with his armor on and in the teachers and children of the public schools always received from him every courtesy he could extend, and this was also true of all his constituents. To his wife and children the loss is still greater, and we deeply sympathize with them. They, however, have the consolation that in life he commanded the respect, the admiration, and the confidence of his fellowcitizens, and, while they mourn sincerely his untimely death, they know that, after all, it is but the sleep from which he will awake in a brighter and better place, where pain and sickness enter not in.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty as a Representative from the State of Wisconsin, and as a long-time friend, to add a word to what has already been so well said in remembrance of our late colleague, Henry Cullen Adams.

My first acquaintance with him dates back to the year 1870, when we were students together at the University of Wisconsin. For three years I met him daily-in the class room and upon the campus-and grew to recognize in him a young man of ability and great promise. "Cully" Adams Adams was a genial, whole-souled fellow in college, well beloved by his fellow-students. He was a thoroughly conscientious student, who, when he had finished considering a subject, had a complete understanding of it. He took high rank as a student and was considered among the ablest debaters in the institution at a time when debating societies flourished, and when they filled a most important part in rounding out the education of the young men of his time.

He spent three years at the University of Wisconsin, but on account of ill health was unable to complete his college course. Thus it will be seen that even in early manhood he suffered from the handicap of being afflicted with poor health, and it is not too much to say that from the time of his leaving the university to the day of his death he saw very few, if any, Yet with all of this to contend with few of those well days. who were his early associates have risen so high or accomplished so much in the about thirty-year period allotted to him for his life's work. Few public men were more universally known throughout Wisconsin than he, and his career was of interest to all; hence it was with universal anxiety that the citizens of his State learned that he had been stricken with illness while en route from the capital to his home at the end of the last session, and a feeling of deep sorrow was manifest when, after a few days of suffering, the end came.

His public career consisted of two terms as member of assembly; six years as superintendent of public property; eight years as dairy and food commissioner, and as a Member of the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses.

He was raised on a farm, and by study and experience became a practical dairy farmer; hence he brought to his duties as dairy and food commissioner a knowledge of the needs of the dairy interests of the State, and put that knowledge to practical use in administering the office, and in consequence performed his duties with ability and to the great advantage of the dairy interests of his State. Even before entering Congress and while he was yet a State official he made his impress on national legislation in behalf of the dairy interests of the country. Probably no man either in or out of Congress exercised as much influence in securing the passage of the oleomargarine bill as did he. During the consideration of the bill by the committee he made exhaustive argument in behalf of the legislation and showed such broad and profound knowledge of the subject that by the force of his logic he compelled attention and convinced the committee and Congress that the legislation was demanded.

When he entered the Fifty-eighth Congress he was well equipped to take up his duties promptly, and he introduced without delay what was known as the "agricultural experiment-station bill and secured the approval of the committee which authorized him to report it to the House, where it was placed on the Calendar, but his efforts, though persistent, were unable to force consideration of the measure in that Congress. This was a great disappointment to him, but instead of discouraging him it nerved him to greater effort. Even before the adjournment of the Fifty-eighth Congress he had commenced a campaign throughout the country, which was destined to bring him vic-tory. He solicited the support of agricultural colleges everywhere, and through his influence farmers' institutes discussed the legislation, and as a result pressure was brought to bear until at the opening of the Fifty-ninth Congress, because of the universal demand, the bill was reported from the committee and passed without material opposition during its first session. This one important measure, which was enacted into law during his second Congress solely because of his individual efforts, was an accomplishment which any Member could well be proud of securing, even after a long term of service.

He also took a prominent part during the last session in securing the enactment of the pure-food law, it being admitted by all that his technical knowledge of the subject and his clear conception of the need for governmental regulation was of great advantage to his associates in formulating and passing the legislation, which is now conceded to be most practical and beneticial.

He again came into prominence during the consideration of the meat-inspection provision of the agricultural appropriation bill as the first session of the present Congress was nearing its close. It was generally conceded that his broad knowledge, sound judgment, honesty of purpose, and strong personality had much to do in smoothing out the differences which at times seemed to endanger the possibility of securing adequate legislation. With less than two terms' service he had compelled legislation of the greatest importance and had taken rank with the best debaters in the House. His clear statement, sound logic, personal magnetism, and forcible and eloquent expression, together with the fact that he invariably spoke with a purpose, enforced attention in this body, where it is so difficult to secure listeners.

In the death of Representative Adams this House has lost an able, conscientious Member, and his family, the country, the party, and his State have suffered an irreparable loss.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, it is an unpleasant duty to have to speak of the death of anyone, and I regard that duty calls upon me at this time for a few remarks. I feel as though I ought not to remain silent upon this mournful occasion. appreciate that I can not add to what has already been said, but as duty calls upon us now it gives me pleasure to testify to the many excellent qualities of our late colleague, Hon. H. C. Adams. It was not my good fortune to know him long and intimately as others have, as I only had a speaking acquaintance with him until he was elected a Member of this House. I had seen him but few times prior to his membership, but I knew enough of him to appreciate his worth and sincerely regret his death.

As an active worker in many industrial ways I had heard of him long before I had the pleasure of meeting him. He was truly an excellent representative of a strong people—a man of excellent judgment. He was honest, intellectual, and capable; in many ways very progressive, a leader among strong men. He had long been an energetic, active friend of the people, fearless in the discharge of every public duty.

Understanding the need of the farmer, he devoted much time to the agricultural interests of the country with great benefit to the people. He was admired and respected by all who knew him. During my acquaintance with him he appeared to be a sufferer from some disease that seriously impaired his health and retarded the progress he otherwise would have made. But during that time I never heard him utter one word of complaint, and his cheerfulness under the circumstances always made him a pleasant companion.

Having been a tireless student, he was well read, a splendid conversationist, ready debater, and well equipped for public service. As a colleague he was very much respected for his readiness to help his State and his delegation. He never uttered one disrespectful word, always endeavoring to harmonize difficulties and promote good feeling. He came from a splendid family. I knew his father well, for I had the honor of serving in the legislature of our State with him.

Mr. Adams was popular among those who knew him, and his circle of acquaintance was large, his friends many. The testimonials at his death evidenced his high standing and that his home people realized his death was a great loss to them, as well as a loss to our State. His early death was the direct result of his untiring efforts to serve the people as a Member of this House. He never favored himself at the expense of the people, and his desire was always to do his duty regardless of the effect upon himself. We all know how rapidly he grew in influence and power. At the time Mr. Adams left Washington to return to his home for a much-needed rest he had as bright and as honorable future as any Member of this House. The news of his sickness and death was a shock to his many friends.

It is a duty we owe to the name and memory of a good man to place on record our opinions of him. His life was a shining example of what industry and honesty can accomplish, and it was a painful matter that, after having served his people and country so well, he could not be permitted to return to his family and home he loved so well before having to depart this

Mr. Adams more than filled the measure of life and reached an honorable and distinguished manhood. A happy home was robbed of a loved husband and father. One of the important

Congressional districts in the State lost a distinguished Representative, the people an able and trustworthy friend. I know I do not make it too strong when I say his early and untimely death was not only a great loss, but that it was sincerely mourned by the entire membership of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. JOHN H. KETCHAM.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolutions which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. John H. Ketcham, late a Member of this House from the State of New York. Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House at the conclusion of the memorial exercises of this day shall stand adjourned. Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, there were a number of gentle-men who desired to take part in these exercises to-day who are necessarily absent; but I understand general leave to print has already been granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KNAPP). The Chair is informed that leave has already been granted.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, John H. Ketcham was born December 21, 1832, and had nearly reached the age of 74 years at the time of his death last November. He was brought up in a very small rural community, his father being a general store-keeper and farmer. He was from English stock, his ancestors having migrated to this country with the Pilgrim Fathers. His education was in the district school and in the academy, giving him in those early days few advantages of education. had, however, the opportunity which falls to a boy on the farm of self-education. He passed his boyhood working upon the farm by day and studying at night. This gave him a vast amount of information and a broad education, which contributed much to his success in life. Afterwards he became a farmer, developing a marble quarry upon his farm, which brought out his unusual capacity for business and genius for

At an early age he became a political leader in his town, hav-ing been elected supervisor in 1853, before he had attained his twenty-first birthday. This office, of no mean importance and a source of education, was held by Mr. Ketcham until he was elected to the State senate in 1857. He was only 25 years of age at this time, and is said to have been the youngest man who ever held this important position. He was reelected to this office two years later.

In the summer of 1862 he became interested in raising troops, and soon raised a regiment, so great was his zeal and industry. He was unanimously chosen colonel of this regiment, which was known as the One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers. He had no previous military experience, but by his close study of military affairs he soon gained the education and experience which fitted him to become a model officer. His regiment took an active part in the battle of Gettysburg, and here General Ketcham was severely wounded. Afterwards he joined General Sherman in the famous march to the sea, and was again wounded at Argyle Island, in the Savannah River. The surgeon ordered an amputation of his leg to save his life, but Colonel Ketcham resisted this, preferring to take his chances of death rather than go through life with a single limb. As a result of this wound he was not able to return to the Army. I have obtained from the office of The Military Secretary a statement of his service, which is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE MILITARY SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

Statement of the military service of Bvt. Maj. Gen. John H. Ketcham, formerly colonel One hundred and fiftieth New York Infantry Volunteers, and brigadier-general of volunteers.

It is shown by the official records that John H. Ketcham was mustered into service October. 11, 1862, as colonel of the One hundred and fiftieth New York Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years; that he was present with his regiment to December 31, 1863, and that on January 31, 1864, in addition to the command of his regiment, he was commanding a detachment of the Third Brigade, First Division, Tweifth Army Corps.

It appears that in January, 1864, several soldiers on duty in the Department of the Cumberland were murdered by guerillas and that a tax was levied upon the property of all disloyal citizens living within a circuit of 10 miles of the place of the murder, and that the proceeds of the tax were divided among the dependent families of the murdered soldiers. On February 16, 1864, Colonel Ketcham was commended for the manner in which he had discharged his portion of the duties in connection with the collection of the tax and was designated to proceed to the State of New York with a portion of the soldiers so murdered. The records show that he was absent from his regiment on duty on February 29, 1864.

After his return to the regiment he was present with it until October 15, 1864, when he received a leave of absence, from which he returned regiment, he was severely wounded in the thigh in battle near Savannah, Ga. A leave of absence for thirty days was granted him January 11, 1865, on account of the wound so received, and the leave of absence was extended for twenty days on surgeon's certificate of disability.

On March 2, 1865, he tendered his resignation in letter of that date, in which he stated that he had been in the military service for two and one-half years to his great pecuniary disadvantage; that he had been in the military service for two and one-half years to his great pecuniary disadvantage; that he had been until the properties of the military service for two and one-half years to his great pecuniary disadvantage; that he had been until the properties of th

F. C. AINSWORTH, The Military Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I have read to the House the wonderful story of General Ketcham's military service from the records of the War Department. No words of mine could add anything to the eloquent recital preserved in the imperishable archives of our While General Ketcham was still at the front with General Sherman he was nominated and elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress. He served at this time four consecutive terms, but was beaten for the Forty-third Congress, in 1873, during the Greeley campaign. The contest between himself and Hon. John E. Whitehouse was a memorable one, which has not been forgotten throughout the Empire State. General Ketcham was then appointed a Commissioner of the District of Columbia by then appointed a Commissioner of the District of Columbia by President Grant, and in this office accomplished some of the most important work of his life. He brought to the office his wonderful and untiring industry and business tact. He was a real friend of the District and his administration was heartly approved by the leading citizens of Washington. At the end of four years he resigned, having been elected to the Forty-fifth Congress. He held office for eight successive terms and declined a nomination for the Fifty-third Congress. Subsequently he returned to the Fifty-sixth Congress and had served continuously since. Although his service was not continuous, he was here for nearly thirty-four years, probably the longest service of any man who had ever been a Member of the House of Representatives.

I met some of his constituents at Saratoga in October last, who told me that the "old General" was confined to his bed and would probably die; but they said the convention would meet in his district the following week and, if there was a breath of life in his body, they would renominate him by acclamation.

They showed an honest, heartfelt pride in this act of loyalty and devotion to one who had been so long their chief. He was renominated, but died on the first Sunday in November, two days before election.

General Ketcham was a generous, warm-hearted, liberal man. He would go farther to do a favor for a friend than any man whom I have ever known. He was loyal and devoted to his own party, but generous and kind to those who opposed him. Frequently the opposition made no nomination against him. Often it was said that both party conventions contained only the loyal and devoted friends of General Ketcham. He had good common sense, business sagacity, and prudence. He was a quiet man, who never took the time of the House in debate, but whose advice and opinions were sound.

He was married in 1858 to Augusta Belden, to whom four children were born, three of whom, with his widow, now survive the General.

He had a warm place in the affections of all the people of his district, and his loss was greatly mourned. He had many friends on both sides of this Chamber, especially among those who had served with him long and knew him well. He left behind him the record of a long, busy, useful, and marvelously successful life.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, to bear the burden of years cheerfully, patiently, resignedly, and uncomplainingly is a crown of glory of its own. When a man nears the goal of threescore and ten he must, perforce, stop to think of that which lies beyond; take stock of what life has brought to him and ponder on what is to come.

To some this brings sorrow and grief; the parting seems all too near. To others it brings profound joy, because of physical or mental ailments, or because of a deep and abiding faith it seems useless or painful to tarry longer here. But he who approaches the mysterious change calmly, bravely, and cheerfully, whose physique and well-spent life enable him to continue those habits of industry acquired in days gone by; to meet his friends and associates each day as genially and as pleasantly as, when a youth, life was full of promise; to fear neither the presence of the messenger of death nor seek a nearer acquaintance with him-such an one is to be admired and beloved and must necessarily attract his younger associates as an example when their burden grows heavier year by year and the end of the struggle, perhaps not yet in sight, still reposes just a little way over yonder hill.

Let us not forget this lesson and this example when to-day we pay tribute to the memory of our beloved colleague, John H. Ketcham. In him were found these qualities to a singular degree. He was a valiant warrior. Death nor life possessed terror for him. During all his years he had faced every situa-tion as it arose. To meet it, to encounter it, to triumph over it was his custom and his delight. Through poverty to distinguished honors he progressed, steadily and unchanged. His kindly, genial manner never forsook him. His industry never tired. His faithfulness to private or public trust went unchallenged. His big heart, filled to the brim with human kindness, withered not. His patriotism and love of country responded to the call to arms and his spurs were won on the field of battle, simply to be laid away as mementos of duty done and not as evidence for self-exaltation or as souvenirs to humiliate a vanquished foe.

At his home, as a neighbor and a friend, he was a father to the young, an elder brother to the middle-aged, and a companion and comforter to those who had longest known him. In his district he was a champion to whom all appealed irrespective of party, and no appeal went unanswered. In this Hall he performed service worthy of his country and himself, and at the same time gave to us all an inspiration that the pathway toward the valley was not one to be trod in fear or loneliness.

Now that he has departed we miss him much. We sorrow because we shall never more meet and greet him, but we more than ever appreciate and realize what he was to us, what this House and his district suffers in his loss, Honest, faithful, true, and loyal, he was a pillar of strength to be counted upon in calm or storm.

It were needless to speak in detail of General Ketcham's work. The records of his thirty-four years of service in Congress will carry these details down to posterity. It were useless to tell of his achievements for his district. No man lives there but can tell of them. It were waste of time to recount his No man lives there heroic deeds during three long years of weary marching, bloody battles, and starvation camps in the civil war, for in the archives of the great granite building at the other end of the avenue they rest secure, to be read and admired by his children's children. In every position which he occupied General Ketcham made a record. He placed himself squarely and clearly on every proposition, and now that he is gone that record, like his memory, lives to stimulate and to beckon us onward to nobler aspirations and higher ambitions.

I can not better close my weak tribute to our departed friend than by reading the following in eulogy of him from the Hudson (N. Y.) Republican:

than by reading the following in eulogy of him from the Hudson (N. Y.) Republican:

Gen. John II. Ketcham was of the old school. He learned his politics from the old masters. Over fifty years of public service have brought him to his grave with an unsullied name. Sincere in his ways and honest in his methods, he stands out like the fir tree in the forest. What hosts of men have gone to Congress since he first went, climbed to the top, and have fallen and are forgotten! What reputations made and ruined since John H. Ketcham was first elected! What a list of investigations which have retired hundreds to private life can be remembered; but the man never lived who ever called this dead citizen to an accounting. He stood straight and clean through the heat of his many campaigns and through all the scrutiny of public officials. Simple in his ways of living, unaffected in his demeanor toward others, always approachable, his relations to his people were peculiarly personal and his affection for them sincere and deep rooted. He loved best to be busy for others. And this was no one-sided friendship. As he looked to them, they turned to him. Party lines were broken. Many times he ran without opposition. His death is no occasion for his own party to claim a monopoly of mourning. As he stood for and by his people when alive, now with sad hearts they think of him called to the great beyond. His was a unique life, born of a unique character. There may have been men more brilliant, there may have been men more eloquent, but the House of Representatives has never held a more unselfish, painstaking, earnest, honest statesman than he whom we miss to-day. His power in Washington was tremendous; where Senators falled he succeeded. Gentle, but persistent, he accomplished wonders. Men high in the councils of the nation looked on him with amazement, and many a millionaire statesman with all his money envied the reputation of this honest gentleman. Such was he whom we now so mourn. We shall have to go on without him, but the life that

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is always a sad duty to pay tribute to a friend who has gone to his reward. number of the Members of this body for the past thirty-odd years knew the manly form and the genial greetings of the late Gen. John Henry Ketcham. For more than fifty years he had ably and loyally served his country in various capacities, first as supervisor of his town, then as a member of both houses of the New York State legislature, followed by active service in the Union Army as colonel of the One hundred and fiftieth New York Infantry, then as brigadier and major general of volunteers; he was a Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and a Representative in Congress from 1865 to the day of his death, and, with the exception of eight years, was a useful and distinguished Member of this body, serving faithfully for a period of thirty-four years.

This briefly is the history of one of America's noblest sons. His record in private as well as in his official life was an honorable one. Perhaps the best test to apply to life's achievements is the opinion in which the individual is held by his friends and neighbors.

General Ketcham was born, lived, and was buried from the old home at Dover Plains, in Dutchess County, N. Y. To those of his colleagues who attended the funeral on the 7th day of November last the sight witnessed will never be forgotten, when hundreds of his old-time friends, neighbors, and comrades took their last fond look at the face of him who lay quietly sleeping in the parlors of his beloved old home. Tears were in many eyes, and the simple but impressive service of two of his former comrades in arms, chaplains of his old regiment, was indeed a memorable scene, never to be forgotten.

As an old comrade, as well as a Representative of a near-by district, it was my privilege during the past four years to see much of our late colleague. He had a delightful personality that charmed all who met him. To know him was to love him. Others who knew him better will tell of his grand and glorious life, full of good deeds, of loving kindness, and of patriotic achievements. His life was that of a typical American citizen, replete with splendid results and full of encouragement and hope to the young men of the nation. He exemplified in his life the golden rule, "Do unto others as ye would that they do unto you," thus making and retaining as friends all whom he met.

Of him it could truly be said:

His life was gentle, and the elements So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up And say to all the world, "This was a man."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I appear here to-day to bear my testimony on the life and character of John Henry Ketcham, of the Twenty-first district of the State of New York. He was my comrade in the great civil war and a distinguished Member of this House during all my service therein, and he was always my personal friend. I met him here first in the Forty-fifth Congress and served continuously with him for four terms;

then, after an interval of twenty years, I returned and found him here to greet me in his always gentle-spirited manner. was a constant and lovable friend, and he was guided in all public, private, and personal relations by duty and lofty principles. He was a patriot in country and his fellow-men. He was a patriot in war and in peace. He loved his

JOHN H. KETCHAM was my senior more than three years. He served with distinction in the civil war about two and onehalf years, holding the rank of colonel, brevet brigadier-general, and brevet major-general of volunteers. Prior to his service in the civil war he had served a term as assemblyman and a term as senator of the State of New York. He left the Army in March, 1865, to enter the Thirty-ninth Congress, to which he was elected in 1864, and he served here for four successive terms (eight years), ending March, 1873. He was Commissioner of the District of Columbia for nearly three years, from July 3, 1874, to June 30, 1877, when he resigned, having been elected (1876) to the Forty-fifth Congress, and he then served for eight consecutive terms, ending March, 1893, when he retired voluntarily on account of ill health. He was, in 1896, elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and successively for four more terms, including the present (Fifty-ninth) Congress, and but for his death (November 4, 1906) he would have been elected to the Sixtieth. He has the singular distinction of having been elected to and having served in the House of Representatives of the United States seventeen Congresses. I do not recall any Member who served so long-nearly thirty-four years, covering a period of about forty-two years from the time he first became a Member of this House. This testifies of itself to his high character as a statesman and to his integrity. He was a Republican, but not a partisan in the sense that he was not in touch with all the people of his district. He commanded their confidence, regardless of party, and he always proved himself worthy of it. In all the years of his public life no suspicion of dishonesty was breathed against him. With a constituency of exceptional intelligence, energy, and spirit always constant to him we are sure he was a man of integrity and of no ordinary capacity. Such a constituency did not err in its estimate of their Representative here. A final test of the true merits of a man, both in public or private life, is found in the estimate his neighbors make of him. The public press may speak evil of a man and strangers may judge him erroneously by what they hear of him or of his acts, yet the word of mouth reputation given him by the people with whom he lives, his neighbors, who know him in his daily life is always right.

The life and public services of the man in whose honor we meet to-day cover a period in our country's history—indeed, in the history of the civilized world—that is rich and great in important events, marking the progress of civilization and the more universal recognition of the rights and liberties of man. It required more to constitute true greatness in the period in which he lived than in any antecedent like period.

General Ketcham's military service was signally marked by gallantry and uniform brilliancy. He did not hold at any time high command, and perhaps he did not aspire to attain to the important rank of a great commander, contenting himself with the command of a regiment or brigade. In doing this he won honors too often overlooked. Such service is necessarily performed by many in a large army and during a great war. Only a few can attain, in even a long and bloody war, to the first rank with high command in the field. Those who attain such rank and command are generally awarded praise and renown impossible to be earned or achieved save through the successful gallantry on the field of their subordinates. When a great campaign has been successfully terminated or an important battle has been won, naturally the commanding officer is given all the first credit, but no great commander in the Army Navy has ever achieved success save through the skill, gallantry, and bravery of those of all ranks and conditions under him. A captain of a company never became distinguished as such unless his lieutenants, noncommissioned officers, and private soldiers were also skillful, gallant, and brave. A colonel of a regiment must, likewise, to acquire distinction, have skillful, gallant, and brave officers and soldiers under him. An army to be reliably efficient must be and act as a unit throughout its entire organization. Alexander the Great, the Mace-donian Greek, Hannibal of Carthage, Cæsar, the most successful leader of the Roman legions, Bonaparte, in his long suc-cessful wars against the combined despotisms of Europe, would each have failed to acquire immortal fame but for their capable captains. So as to all other war chieftains who have won like fame in campaigns and battles. Indeed, it often has turned out that the glory of a battle which clusters around and clings to the successful general rests upon the valor of subordinates whose lives are sacrificed. The glory of Napoleon at Marengo, in Italy, which enabled him to wear the iron crown of Charlemagne, was won for him after he had suffered disaster and defeat on the same field by the heroism of Desaix, who gave up his own life to secure a victory. The pages of history are illumined with like or similar striking examples.

It is sufficient to say that General Ketcham is entitled to share in the honor and glory which belongs to his comrades in the greatest and most sanguinary war of the ages, measured by its bloody character and by the results secured in the interest of human rights and in the upbuilding of civilization throughout the world. He should be awarded a due meed of praise for wellperformed duty in that war. He has passed over to join the great majority of his war comrades, whom he loved and who loved him.

But our dead colleague here was only a soldier in war; he was, in all his natural instincts, a man of peace. His inspiration for war was only that of duty, when his country and its institutions were imperiled. Peace and peaceable pursuits commanded his highest ambition, and to them he devoted his best energies, duty again being his inspiration. He was not ostentatious in anything he undertook, but he had a commendable pride to do all things well. His embarrassment on account of a defective hearing for many years would have been enough to have disheartened and totally disabled an ordinary man, especially for the performance of the onerous duties of a Representative in this House. With "ear sequestrate" he had not a "tuneless tongue." His voice was raised here on proper occasions, though no idle words fell from his lips. In the period marked by his entry (1865) into Congress and his death, over forty years, a generation of people died and another was born. But few remain of those with whom he served in the early part of his service here. They have passed beyond. What a galaxy of great men they were! They, with him, did not fear to grapple with the momentous political and national questions that presented themselves. Courage in dealing with fundamental political and high moral questions was essential to success, and this they did not lack.

They were too near to the awful baptism of war to be swayed from the performance of duties enjoined by the plainest provisions of the Constitution and essential to the maintenance of the fundamental principles of equality of citizenship through-out the Union of the States. They were not imbued with the hope or belief that wrong or digression from sound political maxims will in time correct evil tendencies. Wrong is always both agressive and progressive. Nor were these earlier great statesmen lulled into feelings of security by an universal ma-terial prosperity growing up around them. The direct danger is always to be apprehended to the rights and liberties of mankind, indeed to civilization, if not to Christianity, when people are pampered with general material prosperity. At such a time high duties are forgotten and a false security takes their place. Moral degradation come more generally from universal prosperity of a people than from times when the masses of the people are so poor that they are compelled to practice economy in domestic and public affairs. They then grow critically jealous of all rights, political as well as personal. What millionaire stops to warn the people of the danger of losing a political or personal right essential to be maintained to preserve their just share of liberty?

Mr. Ketcham went on here and elsewhere in the even tenor of his way, never deviating from a settled ingrained conviction that there were certain essential and elemental principles that changed conditions or even time, that destroyer of almost all things, can not and should not do away with. He loved his things, can not and should not do away with. He loved his country, its Constitution and free institutions. He was a friend to the lowly and he bowed the suppliant knee to none save his Creator. He was in life respected and trusted by his neighbors and associates regardless of political party, and they were ready when death claimed him to honor him with an elec tion for the eighteenth time to a seat in this Hall. He died at peace with his fellow-men. He was a typical citizen of this Republic, an heroic volunteer soldier in war, a distinguished statesman in his State and national legislatures. His life was rich in deeds of good, and he did not live in vain.

Rest, citizen, statesman, rest; thy troubled life is o'er.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I had not the privilege of knowing General Ketcham in his earlier life, and were it not for the close personal association with him during the past eight years would not attempt to add to what has been so well said by those who have known him in his home and those who are to follow who are familiar with his whole life.

My first acquaintance with General Ketcham began as a Member of the Fifty-fifth Congress. In the Fifty-sixth Congress he was assigned to the same committee that I have the honor to be chairman of, and for almost eight years my right, ready at all times with his counsel and advice, taking no active part in the debate that came before us, or in fact in the debates in the House, but always thoroughly informed as to every measure we decided upon, and always thoroughly right, except when an appeal was made to his great heart, when he would sometimes admit that he would rather be wrong for a friend, where no principle was involved, than to be right and disappoint his friend.

These eight years of close association with General Ketcham fully justified in my mind the marvelous hold he had upon the people who have known him all his life and who started him upon his career, as has been said, before he was 21 years of age, and has kept him in the service of the people almost continuously for all the years since that time. I know of no other who could so patiently bear and so manfully overcome the handicap of almost total deafness.

Going up from the smaller office of the township through the office of representative and State senator, the colonel of a New York regiment by the time he was 30 years old, a brigadier-general while still in the prime of his young manhood, a majorgeneral of volunteers, and while wearing the uniform of his country commissioned by his people to serve in the Congress of the United States, and recommissioned from that time on, with but brief intervals of service, until the angel of death touched him and he slept. A marvelous record that can only be accounted for by the marvelous qualities of the man. I was impressed with the serene courage with which General Ketcham met his approaching death. Shortly after he was stricken, here in the city of Washington, with paralysis I called and spent the evening with him. He spoke about his situation and the question as to whether he would ever again assume his He referred to the advice that was given him to go duties. back to his home in New York. He said he answered: "I can meet my fate here as well as at home, and I want, if possible, when I get home to my constituents to shake them by the hand. If I can not do that, I can go back silent," or, as he expressed it, "in a box." Conscious of a well-spent life he serenely awaited the summons to appear before the great Judge.

He endeared himself to all of his associates upon my committee, and he endeared himself to all of his associates in the It has been well said that he was a Republican, but not a partisan, and I can testify from my association with him that when he could do a favor to any Member of this House the question of the Member's party affiliation was never involved. It was the kindly, generous spirit of the man reaching out to help his fellow-man.

His record is a part of the history of our country. As has been said, in civil life and in military life it forms a part of the great history of the Republic, and it is of such a character that not only his friends but his widow and his children can glory in the fact that they had him with them so long. Ripe in years and rich in experience he laid down the mantle of life without any dishonor being attached to any part of his past, with all who knew him saying from their hearts, "Well done, good and faithful servant;" and to him as a man, soldier, and statesman patriot and friend "All hail farewell." statesman, patriot, and friend, "All hail, farewell.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, it is one of the treasures of service in this body that we make friends, and that we learn to know men from all over this country of varying personality and strong character

It strikes one a little strangely to-day to find that having just celebrated the virtues of one who was in this House but for three years, we have now turned to commemorate the services of one who for thirty-three years and more was a distinguished It is indeed an impressive fact that a man who began his public career in the year 1854 could have so retained his hold over his fellow-men and his oneness with them for than half a century that neither bodily weakness nor that deafwhich so often separates men from their fellows made him any less one of humanity or any less close to all of his kind. On the contrary, every man who met him to the end of his days learned early in his acquaintance whether Gen. John Henry Ketcham liked him or not, and learned, too, if he did like anyone that he had the heart and the courage to know and to love him thoroughly. For that love I am grateful, Sitting next below him on a great committee, where I had often by his consent to take his place of precedence, and to perform the duties which naturally would have devolved upon was notable to find a friend who knew nothing of jealousy, nothing even of irritation because he could not always do everything that he wanted to do himself. It was something to find a man that had so large a heart and in whom the two meanings of the word "heart" were so united—courage on the one hand, and sympahty and love for those he knew upon the other.

It is right and proper that these two qualities should go to-other. It is fitting that he who understands and loves his felgether. lows, and who with all his heart is a devoted worshiper of his country, should likewise be the bravest of the brave, the most self-sacrificing, and the most earnest in the performance of his It is a memorable thing to me to have known one who was so long his own full self, whether in his little village as supervisor or, at only 22, in the legislature of his State, or afterwards in its senate, or before he was 30 the colonel of a regiment, or before he was 32 going back to his State to perform a duty which was almost more necessary than the duty of service -the duty of uniting the people at home in support of the President and of his policy in that awful year of 1864, and taking a place in Congress to give support and loyal backing to that President in the dreadful closing days just before the end of the war; whether in these earlier days or through all the long course of his life and to the end this brave and loving man retained the love of his fellows, the almost adoration of his neighbors and home friends, and a fire of life which burned un-dimmed, unclouded, unchecked, whether in his intellect, in his courage, in his affection for those whom he had long known, or in that perpetual youthfulness of heart which made him ready to make new acquaintances and to love them all, old and new, to the very end. To such a man as this, when he is dead, we say, as my friend has just said, Farewell and all hail; farewell to the friend, but remembrance of his friendship as long as life shall last!

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, to-day we revere the mem-ry of a remarkable man. Not one, perhaps, who had challenged ory of a remarkable man. the attention of the world by extraordinary talents and by brilliant achievements, but one, indeed, who had so ingrained himself into the affections of his people and had lived such an honorable and upright life and had manifested such extraordinary capacity for public life that for nearly fifty years he had been the chosen representative of his friends and neighbors in important places of honor and of trust.

JOHN H. KETCHAM was born at Dover Plains, N. Y., on December 21, 1832, within a short distance of the home he occupied at his death. His entire life, excepting the time when in the performance of public duties his presence was elsewhere demanded, was spent in the one locality. Descended from old English stock, his ancestors are traced back to the Pilgrim Fathers. His father settled in what was then known as the Harlem Valley, and was engaged in business as the keeper of a general store. The time of the son not spent in the district school was usefully occupied about the store and on his father's farm. He also attended a seminary of considerable renown in those days at Amenia, and subsequently attended for one term the Suffield Academy at Suffield, Conn., and the Worcester Seminary in Massachusetts.

With an elder brother he early acquired a farm which they worked together, and in time they developed into an important industry a marble quarry which was located on the farm.

Before he reached his twenty-first year John H. Ketcham was chosen a supervisor, and so satisfactory were his services that he was reelected in 1854.

At that early age the characteristics which ever distinguished him and which accounted largely for his remarkable career were quite pronounced. He was a man of sterling integrity, of untiring industry, and of unfaltering persistency. stacle ever deterred him in the accomplishment of a determined purpose. Being a keen observer, gifted with accurate judgment, his experience in the country store had given him a wide acquaintanceship throughout his own and adjacent counties and enabled him to form quickly correct estimates of men.

While still a member of the board of supervisors he was chosen to the State legislature, and in 1857, at the age of 25, he was elected to the State senate, in which body he served several terms.

Upon the second call for volunteers by President Lincoln. JOHN H. KETCHAM was appointed by Governor Morgan a member of the war committee for Dutchess and Columbia counties. With his characteristic zeal and energy he set out to recruit the requiste number of men from the two counties. His wide acquaintanceship and his high standing naturally attracted to his aid the most desirable of the eligible men. When a regiment, designated as the One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteer Infantry, was raised, he was chosen its colonel. With the same persistence and industry that had marked his efforts to raise the regiment he devoted himself to the study of military science and tactics, so that he might be of as much aid as possible in preparing his men for their task and be prepared for the duties of the place to which he had been chosen.

I shall not attempt, Mr. Speaker, to trace his military career in detail. It will suffice for me to say that for conspicuous gallantry he was brevetted a brigadier-general and subsequently major-general. He was at Gettysburg, and accompanied Sherman on his march to the sea, and during that march he received a serious wound, from the effects of which he never fully recovered

While at the front with his regiment of home folks those at home did not forget him. In 1863 he was nominated and elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress. He was reelected to the Fortieth, Forty-first, and Forty-second Congresses. In 1872, in a contest memorable in the history of New York, he met his only defeat in a political contest, being defeated for Congress by the Hon. John O. Whitehouse.

General Ketcham was then appointed a Commissioner of the District of Columbia by President Grant. His associates were William Dennison, formerly governor of Ohio, and the Hon. Henry T. Blow, of Missouri. For four years he served on the Commission. With their wide experience and marvelous pre-science these men pictured an ideal city in its physical proportions at least, and with energy and vigor initiated a series of public improvements that were destined to have a marked effect upon the growth and improvement of the city. were opened, extended, and asphalted, small parks were created, facilities of various kinds were provided for those residing in the city, and a new Washington ordained in the fullness of time to be the ideal of the dreams of General Ketcham and his associates was begun.

As is not unusual, many were found to criticise the policy followed, and to condemn the many public improvements initiated, but time has amply and fully justified the propriety as well as the wisdom of their actions, and General Ketcham lived to enjoy the comforts that followed the completion of the projects he initiated.

General Ketcham was reelected to the Forty-fifth, Fortysixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fiftyand Fifty-second Congresses, and then, owing to impaired health, he declined a renomination tendered by his party. In 1895 he returned, being elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and he was thereafter reelected to the Fifty-sixth, Fifty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, and Fifty-ninth Congresses, and but for his death a short time before the recent election he would have been reelected to the Sixtieth Congress.

He served in this House within a few months of thirty-four ears. It is difficult to comprehend a service of such length, Mr. Speaker, but it is brought home keenly to me when I realize that the length of his service here is practically measured by the years of my own entire life.

While his service was not continuous, yet it was in periods sufficiently long to enable his constituents to reap the benefits that come alone from long and continuous service

My acquaintance with General Ketcham dates from the Fifty-sixth Congress, when I commenced my service here. shall make no other reference to my association with him, Mr. Speaker, than to say that I have ever remembered with gratefulness that he was one of those who were particularly kind to me in those early days. I learned to know him and to love him, and I frequently sought his help and advice, knowing always that his generous and kindly nature would respond to every reasonable request. His wide knowledge of men and of the world was of immense value in determining many questions that perplex young men in the beginning in this body.

In politics General Ketcham was a Republican. He was a consistent party man. He believed in his party organization. While he may at times have held views on public questions not quite in accord with the majority of his party, still he was of that older, and, unfortunately, now less numerous school of public men who readily subordinated their own opinions to the consensus of opinion of their associates upon all political ques-tions which did not involve fundamental principles or matters of conscience Few in this House who made the acquaintance of General Ketcham in his later years appreciated him fully. To understand thoroughly this somewhat quaint figure of recent years it would be necessary to visit the district which he represented and hear his people speak of him. Nineteen times he was nominated by his party for Congress, and so great was his hold upon the entire people and so highly was he esteemed that it was frequently believed that were it not for the anomalous condition that would have resulted from such action he could readily have been nominated by his political opponents.

This was due almost entirely to his desire to serve his people faithfully and efficiently, regardless of political affiliations. To the last his habits of industry never changed. His was a familiar figure in all of the Departments of the Government in his numerous quests to aid some humble constituent; and many are the stories told to illustrate the tenacity and persistence that eventually brought success to his efforts.

Such men as General Ketcham play a much larger and more important part in the affairs of life than the majority of men realize. The really great men are not so much those who acquire enormous wealth or who dazzle the world with the brilliancy of their achievements or who enrich the sciences by valuable contributions to the mass of useful information already possessed by the rest of mankind; the really great men are those who perform the duties of their place in life, however exalted or humble it may be, in the most thorough, faithful, and perfect manner possible. Measured by such a standard, General Ketcham was a really great man, as he was a noble and a gentle man.

He being survived by a widow and three children, their hearts are lightened by the knowledge that he was a loving husband, a devoted father, a faithful public servant, a brave soldier, and a patriotic citizen, and a kind and a considerate man, who had helped many in the dark hour of their travail, because he was animated by lofty and noble motives; and that he is lovingly enshrined in the hearts of all who knew him.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, as we gather around the figurative bier of our late and lamented friend and colleague, I beg leave to pay my humble tribute of respect to his memory, to express my high esteem of his ability as a legislator, and to record my appreciation of the many noble qualities of mind and heart which were personified in him and combined in his amiable, rugged, honest, and manly character. Those who had the good fortune of his more intimate acquaintance, and especially during the younger years of his active life, are qualified to produce a more complete and accurate pen portrait of his very interesting personality, while I can give only my estimate of him, formed during our common service in this House.

One of the first men I met on entering the House was General Ketcham. I had heard something of his long and successful career in public life and in the business and military affairs of the country, and I was desirous, if not anxious, to make his acquaintance.

He entered public life as a young man and had represented his town, his assembly district, and his senatorial district in our State. He had won fame and distinction in the civil war. During several years he had been Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and was then the dean of the great New York delegation in the House of Representatives. He was not a distinguished debater, orator, or writer. He was not gifted with those rare mental powers and attainments by which some men charm and captivate their audiences and command followings by the sheer force of their intellect and magnetic supremacy, nor was he a profound scholar or expert in any field of the nation's great activities or enterprises. Therefore I was, to put it mildly, very curious to make his personal acquaintance and determine for myself what manner of man this was who had accomplished so much, who had behind him such a varied and successful career, who had for so many years maintained his leadership and had practically eliminated all opposition in his Congressional district, and who had tied to him his friends and constituents as with bonds of tempered steel.

Well, I met an elderly man of medium height, inclined to corpulency, and quite stooped. His hair—what was left of it—was gray, his face was wrinkled, his smile was pleasant, and his handshake hearty and below the belt. His kindly expressive eyes betrayed an approach to a wink or knowing glance, which I have since interpreted to mean about this:

Young man, I am glad to meet you, but don't know as I want to congratulate you. You may feel pretty big now, but you will feel smaller by and by. You have much to learn, and some things to unlearn. But go ahead. I have no time for idle talk, but if you need me, I am your friend.

His manner was abrupt and informal, but very courteous, and without the least sign of condescension. It is quite an art for a senior in the service to meet a freshman on the level and without giving any suggestion of a patronizing spirit. With him it was neither an art nor an accomplishment, but the ordinary manifestation of his warm heart and democratic manner. He was modest and unassuming at all times and under all circumstances—a plain matter-of-fact practical man—not the least affected or puffed up by the honors which had been showered upon him.

The first impression he made on me was agreeable, and it grew better with years of acquaintance and more extended observation. His simplicity of manner, his entire absence of affectation, his uniform courtesy, and his good nature and genial disposition made one glad to meet him if only for a moment. He wore well, for he was genuine and sincere, never striving to attract attention, never pluming himself or assuming airs of superiority. He was active, alert, energetic, and well informed. He was handicapped by the infirmity of deafness, yet he kept up to date in the current events of the unwritten as well as the written journal. His conversation when you met him was largely in the form of questions. He did not seem to have the time or disposition for long talks or the discussion of unimportant matters. He put direct questions and wanted direct and concise answers. What you could tell him about any matter in which he was interested he grasped quickly, gave you a knowing look, and went his way. He did not spend much time in the House during long debates. He could not hear, and did not seem to get much pleasure or satisfaction out of the most eloquent-looking speeches. Yet he knew what was going on and when a vote was to be taken, and had the habit of being on hand for the roll call on important questions.

He was a practical politician of the old school, before the reign of civil service, when to the victor belonged the spoils, and he got his full share. It is said that his habit of place hunting continued under the new system, and with marked success considering the obstacles which were placed in his way by the law and the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission. Determination and persistency were marked features of his character. He did not gracefully accept refusals with polite explanations and apologies, and if there was any back door or indirect way to a little patronage for his constituents, he got it.

I do not think his tireless efforts in seeking places were prompted by policy or selfish motives in the expectation that by such service he could maintain his hold on his own office. doubtful if the distribution of patronage helps in that direction. There are generally many candidates for the same place. one who gets it considers it only his due. He may forget, while those who are disappointed have long memories. General Ketcham enjoyed helping others and doing favors. generous with his own means and had learned the luxury of doing good. There is a beautiful lesson in the life he led and lived—that men exist for one another and that this is a world of mutual help and sympathy. He was in harmony with nature and his environment, and if he were willing to receive he was also disposed to give to the full measure of his ability. His tireless industry and zeal in serving others were remarkable, and could not have been actuated by any sordid consideration. He did not play to the galleries or court spectacular notoriety; neither did he shirk any duty or responsibility in order to avoid criticism. He was an honest, earnest, resolute man, who did his duty day by day as he saw it and had an unusual faculty for accomplishing results. When the country was in danger and needed strong arms, stout hearts, and resourceful brains he responded to the call, and his rapid advance in the military service certified to his courage and patriotism.

He occupied many and exacting positions in public life, and filled them all to the satisfaction of the people. His best years and energies were freely given to his country, and he continued in the service while age and infirmity were creeping on. As there was much of heroism in his life, so there was much of pathos in his death. During last summer his health was rapidly failing. He was a sick man and was conscious of it, and he was disposed to retire, but his constituents insisted that he accept another nomination. His grit and resolution were greater than his strength. He consented to run, but before election day his restless spirit took its flight. He was permitted to live out his allotted time, and then was stricken down in the fullness of his honors and in the high regard of all who knew him.

His career is an example and inspiration to young men, for he illustrated what may be accomplished by honesty, industry, perseverance, and common sense. He did not impress me as a man endowed with remarkable intellectual powers, but he was a well-rounded, well-balanced man, and made the most of his talents. He was an extraordinary man within ordinary limitations.

He was a unique and interesting character, with hosts of friends and no enemies. He left his impress on society. The world was a little better and its people a little happier for his having lived. And in his death his party lost one of its ablest leaders, his State one of her most distinguished sons, his country one of its most consistent and practical legislators, and his colleagues one of their best-beloved associates.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word as to the life, character, and public service of the late John H. Ketcham, of New York. I did not have the honor or the pleasure of his acquaintance until what may be called the later years of his life. His defect in hearing at the time I first met him had doubtless begun to limit to a certain extent his social intercourse, but we happened to live at the same hotel for a number of years, and during all the years since I first met him down to the time of his death I enjoyed his friendship and his confidence.

He frequently talked to me of his service in Congress, about his political experience, and the troubles, trials, and tribulations of a man in public life. What impressed me most in his char-acter were his toleration and his kindness. When thinking of him since his death I have often recalled the lines of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, I think it is. I may not quote them exactly, but nearly enough to preserve at least a part of their beauty and some of the sentiment:

So many gods, so many creeds, So many ways that wind and wind, That just the art of being kind Is all this old world needs.

There are men who seem to be endowed by nature to take a leading part in public affairs, and General Ketcham was one of His methods were quiet and unobtrusive, but nevertheless effective. No one can contemplate his public career without being convinced that he possessed in a remarkable degree the qualities which make for leadership among men. Intelligence, determination, and energy were qualities which he possessed in an unusual degree. He had that rare gift which enables some men to determine accurately the trend of affairs, and his judgment as to methods frequently astonished those who came in contact with him.

He was born on a farm. He came from good old Puritan stock, the authentic record of his family dating back to John Ketcham, who landed with the Pilgrim Fathers.

The Hon. John H. Ketcham was born at Dover Plains, N. Y., December 21, 1832, and was about 74 years old at the time of his death.

The first public office held by him was that of member of the board of town supervisors, to represent the town of Dover. This was before he had reached his majority. He was reelected to the office, and before his term expired and while still holding the office he was chosen a member of the legislature of his State.

In 1858, while a member of the State senate, he married Augusta Belden, a daughter of William H. Belden and Sarah A. Belden. Four children were born of this marriage—Augusta A., Henry B., Charles B., and Ethel B., the last three of whom, with his wife, survive him.

While in the legislature, or soon after the expiration of his term, came the civil war, and, as was to be expected, the serv ices of Mr. Ketcham were called into requisition. He was first appointed by Governor Morgan a member of the war committee for Dutchess and Columbia counties. Among his associates were Benson J. Lossing, afterward noted as an historian, and James Emmett, then a justice of the New York supreme court.

With his never-failing zeal and energy he prosecuted the work of the committee. The quota of the counties was soon filled, and the regiment known as the "One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers" was an assured fact. Mr. Ketcham was unanimously chosen colonel, and the departure of the regiment from the city of Poughkeepsie for the front was a notable event in the history of that locality. The ladies of Dutchess County presented the colonel of the regiment with a set of colors, and an elaborate demonstration was made in recognition of the conspicuous part he had performed in the work assigned him.

He was without military experience and training, but, nothing daunted, he set to work to acquire that military knowledge which he needed but did not possess. He succeeded in this as he did in other things, and by the same thorough methods. He was soon fighting at the front. He was with Meade at Gettys-burg and distinguished himself in that great battle. He was with Sherman on the march to the sea. He was at different times promoted for gallantry in service until he acquired the rank of major-general.

Near the close of his service he received a wound in the thigh which nearly cost him his life and from the effects of which he never fully recovered.

Before the ending of his military service and while still at the front he was nominated and elected a Representative in the Thirty-ninth Congress in the year 1864. He resigned from the Army in March, 1865, to begin his long and useful career as a Member of this great body. He was reelected to the Fortieth, Forty-first, and Forty-second Congresses, and was nominated for the Forty-third Congress, but was defeated. This was during the famous Greeley campaign. The odds were against him, and by the liberal use of money, it is said, his defeat was accom-plished, a candidate by the name of Whitehouse succeeding by a small majority. This was in the year 1872. After his defeat for Congress he was appointed Commissioner of the District of Columbia, William Dennison, of Ohio, and Henry T. Blow, of Missouri, being the other Commissioners.

The same energy, the same diligence, and the same progressive spirit characterized his work as Commissioner, but at the end of four years he was again elected by the people of his district to the Forty-fifth Congress. He was reelected to the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fifther than 1976 and tieth, Fifty-first, and Fifty-second Congresses, and declined a unanimous nomination for the Fifty-third Congress. reasons are stated for his declining this nomination. health is the one usually assigned. Whatever they may have been they were certainly creditable to him, and for him they It is certain, however, that he did not leave were sufficient. Congress with the intention of remaining permanently out of it, and he was nominated by acclamation by the Republicans of his district as their candidate for the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was again elected.

It was at this time that my personal acquaintance with General Ketcham began. He had been a Member of Congress continuously since his election to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was a candidate for the Sixtieth Congress when he died, November 4, 1906, just two days before election day.

Had he lived, he would have added another to his remarkable series of political victories. He served in Congress seventeen full terms, or thirty-four years. He was a Commissioner of the District for four years, and he was for four years a member of the legislature of his State. He had spent several years in the Army, and his home town had laid claim to his services even before he had attained to a voting status. His life was one spent in the public service, and his greatest delight and his greatest pride was in the faithful performance of his public duties.

Few men in public life have been more highly honored, and few, if any, have maintained so strong a hold on a constituency. Whenever he manifested a willingness to serve, his nomination followed by acclamation. He was in this manner nominated for Congress at least nineteen times-unanimously, and by acclamation.

It is said that he never suffered public defeat but once in his long career, and that was brought about by unusual and unfair means. It would seem that he always stood in such high esteem with his constituents that others were willing to stand aside when General Ketcham was willing to serve.

In politics he was a Republican. He ran for office on the Republican ticket—but after election, and always while in office, and in the discharge of his duties he was the servant of the people

His honor and his integrity were never questioned either in private or official affairs. His business qualifications were of a high order, and of this world's goods he had accumulated a competency.

His education was that acquired in the district school, supplemented by a year or so of academy life.

He knew all of the hardships encountered by the boy and the man on the farm seventy years and more ago, and when he had risen to a conspicuous position in life, when he had accumulated property and his influence had become great he was not found wanting in courtesy and sympathy for others less fortunately situated.

He was a brave soldier, but a most sympathetic man. was the friend of the oppressed, and kindness was his religion.

He believed in his people and they swore by him. Although his district was said to be normally Democratic, frequently he had no opposing candidate, and his election was almost always a foregone conclusion. In his home town the vote was always practically unanimous for John H. Ketcham.

By his home people he was not only respected and honored-Such a situation may exist or may have existed elsewhere, but I have never known of one.

He was proud of his ancestry, but he certainly has added luster to his family name. Those following him can look back with increased pride to his achievements as a man, a soldier, and a statesman.

While it may not be said that his name is conspicuously associated with important legislation, he was always active and he did his part in the enactment of laws through all the years he was a Member of this body, under the operation of which the nation has grown great and powerful.

He was an enthusiastic advocate of the law by virtue of which rural free delivery has been established throughout the land.

With his passing a noble character and most valuable Representative will disappear from the Halls of Congress; his State will mourn the loss of one of her most honored citizens; his district a public servant they admired, esteemed, and loved.

Thousands will miss his generous smile and his helping hand, and all who knew him well will mourn the loss of one whose place it will be hard to fill.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to know intimately General Ketcham. My entrance to Congress was so recent and his infirmities in the last year or two of his life were such that there was no opportunity to make use of casual acquaintance here to get to know him well. He was a man, however, whose record I knew and in whom I was intensely interested. I desired to learn the secret of his life and of his success.

In the days of storm and stress in our own State of New York, in the days when Sumter was fired on, he was a member of the State senate, and was one of those who made the State prompt to respond to the needs of the nation. He came of splendid stock. And he had endeared himself to the citizenship of a county peopled by men and women of splendid stock. I think I have found the secret of his life and of his success. It lay in his brotherliness of spirit. An honored judge of our State, who was a member of the famous Dutchess County Regiment, the One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers, which General KETCHAM led to the war as colonel, said this of him: "Colonel Ketcham's coolness in times of danger and thorough knowledge of his duty saved the regiment many lives. His energy, perseverence, and tact secured for his men at all times their full share of supplies." We are told that wars are fought on men's stomachs, and that the science of war is to find how most efficiently to feed the men who are on the firing line. If General Ketcham looked so well after his men that their needs were always supplied, he rendered thereby a most effective service to the fighting unit of which his regiment was a part. But he did not do that for the reasons that the science of war would apply. He did it for a noble reason—he did it out of the same brotherliness of spirit which was ever with him. When he left his regiment during the war to come to Congress he said in parting:

Be assured that day will never come which will sever the ties of friendship and affection which bind me to you.

He faithfully kept those words, as every man, woman, and child in his own Dutchess County knows. He kept them not as a pledge, but out of that same brotherliness of spirit.

I was one of the committee appointed to attend his funeral and fortunately was able to be present. It was a beautiful, crisp, clear November day. It was moreover the day after election, an election memorable in our own State and memorable in the county of Dutchess. But the services carried us from the strife of the day previous back to the more glorious days of war, for those who conducted the services were clergymen who had been part of his regiment, and many men who sat around the bier were men who had had their baptism of fire at Gettysburg and had marched to the sea under him. Those of us who belong to a generation born since the civil war, and who have missed the intense feelings for country and fellow-soldier that the fire and sword of war create, find in such memorial services an experience that broadens and sweetens life. The words of love and reminiscence spoken at these services were not only a tribute to the departed, but doubtless deeply affected many of the younger generation as they did me.

General Ketcham was laid to rest in a cemetery which lies in the heart of that beautiful valley of Dutchess County, the valley of Tenmile River, the "beautiful hunting ground," as it was known to the Indians. As he was laid to rest the valley, enfolded by the hills, was engulfed by the setting sun with a golden glow, which seemed to me to be a fitting halo for a man of such brotherliness of spirit.

Mr. Bennet of New York. Mr. Speaker, in his seventy-fifth year, full of years and honor, Gen. John H. Ketcham was gathered to his fathers. His splendidly successful carer is a part of the glorious history of our State and a part also of the still more glorious history of our nation. My own personal acquaintance with General Ketcham was slight. His service here had commenced years before the date of my birth, and when I first met him here the weight of years and advancing infirmities were commencing to interfere with his regular attendance upon the sessions of the House. But personal acquaintance with General Ketcham was not necessary in order to know of him. The way in which he served his district was and has been ever since I have reached years of understanding known to all in our State. He never had any difficulty in obtaining a renomination and rarely in obtaining a reelection. one of those honored by the Speaker of this House by appointment upon the committee which represented this House at the funeral of General Ketcham. No one could fail to be impressed with that service. It was the day after a heated political contest, which had been as fierce in Dutchess County as in any other county in the State. But within a day the men who had been partisans on November 6 became common mourners at the grave of their dead friend on November 7. were the political leaders there, but the countryside, and it was not at all out of keeping with the spirit of the service, which was really one of mourning, when one, a stranger to all of us Representatives, I am sure, evidently a lifelong friend and neighbor, and as evidently an adherent of the Roman Catholic Church, came in alone, stood for a moment at the side of the open casket, and offered up a prayer of that particular church. There were places and times when such an occasion would have been incongruous, but not at the side of the casket of one who had never in his district raised division of party or of creed.

As he served his district so his district remembered him always. In the last campaign, when all knew of his physical condition, when all knew that the complete service which he had given in the past could not be given in the future, when he was running on the same ticket with one of the most popular men who ever ran in our State, President Roosevelt, General Ketcham ran ahead of the Republican electors in every county in his district. To the last the people of that district remained faithful to one who had never ceased to be faithful to them.

And so, surrounded by troops of friends, beloved by all, he reached the time when in the beautiful imagery of the Scripture the grasshopper was a burden, and then the silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl was broken, and the pitcher broken at the fountain.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the hurry of the closing hours of a short session of Congress, even if I had the ability, I have not the time to make preparation for addressing the House upon this occasion. Having been associated with the late Representative from New York [Mr. Ketcham] in service in the House for over a quarter of a century, having been during that time close to him personally, with the best relations from the personal standpoint as well as political standpoint, feeling that I knew the make-up of the man, his fixedness of purpose, his fidelity to the service, his genuine belief in the policies of the great party of which he was a member, I feel that it is apt for me to say a word touching our late colleague.

The last time I met John Ketcham was when calling at his apartments here in the city after he had become seriously afficted with the disease which terminated his life. He could not talk very plainly, as he had had a stroke of paralysis. He reached out his hand and his grasp was firm. The eye testified that my visit was welcome, and now and then he contributed to the conversation, hopeful at that time, and I have no doubt hopeful to the end, that his life might be further prolonged in order that he might give such service as he had given and hoped to be capable still to give to the public.

There was no fear manifested of death during that conversation. Full of years filled with public service, always honorable and useful, he felt that he had contributed to the best of his ability his due share to the public service. And that feeling was justified. And the impression left upon my mind in that interview was that, while I might never meet him again, he was ready when the hour came to cross over to cross without fear, feeling that in the limit of his best endeavor he had performed his duty to his constituency and to the Benphilic formed his duty to his constituency and to the Republic.

"Many men of many minds" is an old saw. One like myself, who believes that the Government is through parties, welcomes party organization, both upon the part of the majority that may be in power from time to time and upon the part of the minority. Both the majority and the minority have a function to perform, the proper performance of which is necessary for the well-being of the Republic. John Ketcham, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, believed in the policies of the party to which he had belonged from its organization, and, without turning, stood with that organization. It might make mistakes, as all organizations make mistakes. All men make mistakes in Congress or out of Congress. Perfection is alone with Deity. And without apologizing, without seeking to avoid the responsibility for mistakes, if, perchance, they were made, manfully, with courage, Mr. Ketcham accepted it, never seeking to transfer a mistake from his shoulders to the shoulders of other individuals—a manly, courageous man that truly represented the constituency from which he held his power of attorney; and we best represent the constituency by cooperating with other Representatives from other constituencies touching the policies that are to control the Republic.

He will be seen no more here. Ah, when we cross over how soon we are forgotten! And it is well it should be so; otherwise this would be one vast world of mourning. But those of us who knew John Ketcham best will always recollect him for his sturdy manhood, fidelity to colleague, willingness to accept responsibility, performing his duty as he saw it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, when John H. Ketcham died there went from the shores of time to the abode of the blessed one of the most loyal and patriotic men of his day. In war he was a soldier of renown; in peace he was a citizen possessed of a grand character and a man of great usefulness to his home, to his State, and to his country. Those of his colleagues in Congress who did not know him until the latter terms of his service had very little conception of the grand character of the man. He had been a business man of great ability. had been a politician of rare capacity. He had been a soldier with a brilliant record in war. He had been a statesman of in-telligence, wisdom, and virtue. Many of us who saw him only in his years of practical decrepitude little understood the genius. the worth, the intelligence, the force of character with which he had been blessed in the earlier and better days of his strength and activity. He was a loyal Republican, true as steel to the principles of his party, but considerate and generous to the men of other opinions

Peace to his ashes, honor to his memory.

Mr. KNAPP. Mr. Speaker, in the death of John H. Ketcham not only his immediate constituency, but this House, of which he was an honored Member, has met with an irreparable loss. Common is the expression, "In death we are soon forgotten." The strongest, truest, bravest among us grows weary, faints, and falls along life's pathway. The busy activities of life rush in upon us, and those who are gone are too often gone from memory. Not so will it be with the subject of our tributes of to-day. His whole career, in youth, through manhood, and ripe old age, illustrates that fidelity to private and public duty which will keep fresh and green his memory.

It is only after life's changing struggles are over that man can best be judged aright. It is only after the hero has fought his last battle that we can realize the true meaning of his victories. It is only after the public official has passed away that we can realize the value of his life work. It is only after the neighbor of a lifetime has gone that we can realize the true meaning of his presence.

In life we often strive for position, place, power, wealth. These are as fickle as the shadows. It is only the character which a man builds that he is privileged to transmit as a lasting legacy to posterity. Mr. Ketcham was strong in the character which he builded.

He was not born to affluence. It was by the force of will, the practice of industry, the power of ability that he arose to honorable distinction and became almost the idol of an exacting constituency. He was not reared in the lap of luxury. He knew the hardships of poverty as well as the privileges of prosperity, and as he was undaunted by the one, so he was unmoved by the other. He was a splendid illustration of the possibilities of American manhood. As a young man struggling with adversity, as a citizen carving his way to honorable distinction, as a servant of the public, in all he invites and merits the tributes we pay to his memory.

He lived and acted in a period of exceptional importance a period which in industrial development, in expanding commerce, in the advancement of education, in the betterment of civilization was more eventful than any like period of time in national or world's history.

In his life work, both private and public, he measured up to those requisites which ever mark the true citizen and the worthy public official. But it is only of a few elements of his character that time permits us to speak. In his life work he was moved by honesty of purpose and the courage of convictions. Honesty is a virtue in which all other virtues center. With it man stands erect, challenging alike respect of self and confidence of fellow-man. Life is full of despairs and hopes, defeats and victories, trials and triumphs. The man moved by honesty of purpose endures the one and enjoys the other, conscious of his own rectitude.

Courage is an element which helps to make the character strong. The timid man can pass an uneventful existence, leaving the world no better than he found it, and dying, be forgotten. The courageous man lives to make those about him and the world happier and better than he found it, and dying, is remembered. Honesty and courage—these are characteristics which when developed walls the streng inversions remembers.

which, when developed, make the strong, imperious man.

But, again, he was an intense lover of his country. His love was not of country, right or wrong, but of country right. Its institutions were of his faith, its Government of his allegiance, its union of his love. Moved by these convictions, when civil strife threatened that union he gave of his services, and for brave and heroic deeds on fields of battle was brevetted a majorgeneral in the United States Army. And when the strife was over and the Union again made one, he ever recognized the heroism of all who participated in that struggle and fostered that spirit of heart-united Union which knows no North, no South, no East, no West, but one country, one flag, and one national destiny.

In civil life he was called to various positions of trust and responsibility—supervisor of his town, member of the State assembly, State senator, and finally as the reward of merit, he was commissioned a Representative in the council of the nation. Elected and reelected to seventeen different Congresses, while not in consecutive service, he was in length of service the father of this House. His service in this body, covering in all a period of nearly thirty-four years, was equal to nearly one-half of the allotted span of life. Few men have attained such a record, and the simple statement of it emphasizes the value of his service and the confidence of admiring constituencies.

To speak of the history of that thirty-four years, so characterized by events vital in their importance as they affected the welfare and progress of the nation, time is not ours. Suffice it to say that he was ever in intelligent touch with these; ever watchful for and of service to the best interests of his immediate constituencies, regardless of position of rank or party, and ever enjoyed the confidence and affectionate regard of his colleagues in the House of Representatives.

Thus he blended the civil with the military. He lived the civilian and the soldier, and each discharged those duties which merited the honors bestowed upon him.

But confined not alone to his public service is the interest which attached to his life and character. In the home, the community, and his immediate constituency his death is especially mourned. In that community he spent the years of his younger manhood and all of his after life. During all of his years he went in and out among them. To them his life was an open book, and they read it well. His genial ways, carrying sunshine wherever he went; his neighborly acts so many and freely given; his deeds of kindly charity so many and so unostentatiously made, all of these are as fresh to mind as if they were but of yesterday. He was ever loyal to the welfare of that community. In his death who among them has not lost a friend?

Then appropriate is it that in this Chamber, so long the scene of his associations and labors, we pay tribute to his memory. Statues are reared not only to perpetuate the name, but to commemorate the deeds of individuals; they are erected not only in tribute to the dead, but as inspirations to the living. More enduring than the bronze or granite will be the example, the influence, and the character of John H. Ketcham.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. WILLIAM H. FLACK.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be suspended and that opportunity be now afforded Members to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM H. FLACK, late a Representative from the State of New York. Resolved, That as a special mark of respect and esteem for Mr. FLACK, the House, at the conclusion of these proceedings, adjourn. Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Senate.

Resolved. That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, William Henry Flack, for two terms a Member of this House, departed this life at his home in Malone, N. Y., on the morning of February 2 last in his forty-sixth year. While the news of his decease did not come as a surprise to his friends and acquaintances, it was nevertheless a blow that brought to them heartfelt sorrow and deep sympathy for those he left behind, and for whom he entertained the love of a husband and father, idealic in its character and profound in its depth.

Mr. Flack, because of his physical condition, had not during his incumbency of office made the impress upon this House of which he was capable, yet he evinced all the qualities of a capable legislator, and he certainly was an industrious Representative, especially in matters affecting his district. His fidelity, his faithfulness, his manliness, his sturdy character were at once apparent to those with whom he came in contact. Reared to labor, and touching elbows in his younger days with men whose range of thought was limited, he sought a broader environment and soon attained it. His limited education was no bar to his progress toward honorable distinction, and he endeavored in every way, and with success, to broaden himself intellectually. Possessed of a judgment accurate and keen, he was a close and industrious student and reader, and soon began to make an impress on the community in which he lived. His political sagacity was unerring and his advice, which was freely sought, not alone on political, but on other matters, was as freely bestowed. In business as well as in politics he was ruggedly honest and every pledge was kept. Those who knew him are better for hav-ing known him and the community where he lived is better for having counted him as an integral and component part.

No man can speak ill of him. No man can say he was untrue to a trust or a promise. His every act, personally or officially, was the act of an honest man, and his memory will abide with those who knew him as that of a man from every standpoint. His heart, his brain, his endeavor, were all as true as the needle. Beloved by his intimates, respected by his neighbors and his constituents, admired by those with knowledge of his reputation, Mr. Flack went to meet his Maker with no fear of the judgment and, I believe, with no wish that even one page of his record as a man might be erased or al-tered so far as his relations with his fellow-men were concerned.

He believed in his God, in his country, in his home, and in his friends. His effort was not for narrow betterment—the betterment of the individual alone—but for the betterment which affected the individuals and the community of which he was a part. No trumpet announced his comings and goings, but results told of his being there. He knew his own capacity and recognized his limitations. He used the former with judgment and never attempted to go beyond the latter. He was what he appeared—big of body, of heart, of brain; true to his honest instincts. Without effort so to do, he made and retained warm friends. They were drawn to him by his splendid, manly qualities, and they stayed with him from choice. To have been of his friends was a privilege, the memory of which will be pleasing and lasting.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, only those who knew WII-LIAM HENRY FLACK intimately can appreciate the loss sustained by his untimely death. It was my good fortune to serve with him on the Committee of Merchant Marine and Fisheries during two Congresses. Service of this character, and especially as we both came from the Empire State, makes companions of Members.

The late Mr. Flack was a genial, honorable, whole-souled gentleman, a self-made man. He was born in 1861, hence at his untimely death he was less than 46 years of age-in the prime of life. Since his advent in this House his health had been in rather a precarious condition. Notwithstanding his physical allments he was faithful in the discharge of his duties, pleasant and agreeable in his intercourse with his associates. Of him in his daily work the words of Emerson apply:

Life is too short to waste
The critic's bite or cynic's bark.
Quarrel or reprimand;
"Twill soon be dark;
Up! Mind thine own aim, and God speed the mark.

Being honored by the Speaker with an appointment to attend the funeral services of the late Mr. Flack, in common with my colleagues on the committee, I had the opportunity of observing his standing in the community in which he was born

Upon our arrival in Malone on the morning of February instant, a general gloom seemed to pervade the beautiful little mountain city, the capital of Franklin County, N. Y. At noon all the places of business closed and remained so until after the funeral. The church was filled with his friends, and the impressive services were conducted by four ministers of the gospel of as many different creeds. His Masonic brethren and other fraternal bodies were present in large numbers. The scene was one never to be forgotten, and made a lasting impression on his colleagues who were present. An old friend of his, speaking to a member of the committee, said: "Flack was a man in every sense of the word, a model husband, a loving father, an obliging neighbor, and a kind, true friend." This was the universal opinion as expressed by friends and neighbors.

He has gone from among us, having crossed to the other shore, in the full hope of a blessed immortality. We firmly believe that our loss is his gain. It is a road that we must all travel, for it is appointed unto man once to die. This decree is unalterable; all must meet the destroyer-death. The memory of the life and deeds of our late colleague is ours to cherish and

He sleeps, but in that sleep beneath the sod
No dreams shall come—those dreams that banish sleep;
No watchers then, naught save the eyes of God,
To watch his slumber long, and still, and deep.
Then mourn him not as dead—he can not dle—
And mourn him not as sleeping in that day;
He wakes, he lives, not far in yonder sky,
But near us, though not seen, he walks to-day.

His memory will ever abide with his friends, a benediction and a blessing.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with our late respected colleague, Hon. WILLIAM H. FLACK, found its beginning in the early part of the Fifty-eighth Congress. As a Member thereof, he was to begin his Congressional life that, so unfortunately for himself and his country, terminated too briefly to permit him to attain to the higher positions in the House Representatives that he certainly would have won had his health permitted or his life been spared long enough to give him the experience so necessary for a Representative in Congressan experience that can only come from long service in the House.

Brother Flack was assigned to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I was, and had been for several years, a member. Here it was that I formed his acquaintance and learned to respect his sterling qualities. I early discovered that he was not physically strong. It was plain that he was a sick man; but his determination to perform the duties of the position to which he had been assigned, in spite of physical infirmities, attracted my attention and commanded the admiration of all his associates on the committee.

We knew that Brother Flack attended meetings of the committee very often when, if he had given more thought to his physical needs, he would have remained away; but with him it was a contest between physical weakness and a mental determination to discharge the duties of his position; it was a question that arose between a sick bed and his duty in the committee room, and duty always won with him.

Brother Flack was among the most conscientious of Members. endowed with a strong mind and a high sense of public duty; he felt that he could not evade any responsibility that came to him as a member of the committee or this House.

Moreover, he realized, as but few new Members do, that all legislation, to be effective, beneficial, and just, must be carefully considered and formulated in the committee room.

Active, intelligent committee work is the foundation upon which rests the truly wise measures that govern, build up, and expand the magnificent moral and industrial institutions of our country of which we, as a people, may feel justly proud.

These laws that are initiated and prepared largely in the committee rooms, and almost invariably based upon the principles of wisdom, equity, and justice to all men, hold within their limits more than 80,000,000 of sovereign people, the equals of any on earth.

All this, and the truth of this, was promptly grasped by the pure and active mind and great heart of Brother Flack; not because of his long service in this national legislative body, for he was just entering upon his first term; not because of a college education, for he had never enjoyed this blessing; but because of his endowment with a mind that was practical, a mind capable of grasping the logical rather than the theoretical affairs of American citizenship.

Brother Flack was not a man of high pretensions or of many words, but he possessed the faculty of grasping the true situation as it presented itself, and this enabled him to cast his vote and lend his influence for what invariably proved to be the right side of all questions that his brief service permitted him to aid in solving.

His colleagues on the committee realized that for a beginner in legislative work this Member from Malone, N. Y., was much above the average. Every Member of the House of Representatives who chanced to enjoy his acquaintance held him in the highest esteem.

There seemed to be a hidden and mysterious power not re-alized by its possessor that unconsciously drew men to him;

they believed what he thought, even though his thoughts were not expressed in many words. Men with such gifts are rare, indeed, but wherever known, in whatever walk of life they are found, their influence is well-nigh immeasurable, and this influence is either for good or for evil.

Thanks be to the Creator of the Universe for the lofty purposes, pure mind, and love of justice so conspicuous in this man from Malone; for with such a rich heritage all his might, mind, and strength were employed in the discharge of the most exalted duties of husband, a father, a citizen, and a representative of the people, whose confidence in him was unbounded.

Mr. Flack enjoyed the respect of the people in his home town of Malone, N. Y., to a remarkable degree. I was impressed with this fact from personal observation and coming in contact with the citizens of Malone. I chanced to be one of the members of the committee from this body who attended the funeral of the deceased, and it was gratifying to me to listen to the many testimonials offered by his fellow-townsmen; the evidence was unquestioned that William H. Flack was held in the highest esteem by those who had known him the longest and whose associations with him had been the closest.

Where can we look for better assurance of the true worth of any man than in his own town and among his neighbors with whom he has mingled for a long period of years?

I thought as I witnessed the sadness visible on every countenance, the genuine mourning that pervaded the very atmosphere in Malone, that W. H. Flack was all that I had believed him to be—a truly good man.

Mr. Speaker, William H. Flack, our beloved colleague, is dead; his life's burdens are cast off, his cares, his griefs, his sorrows, his responsibilities, his joys and pleasures are all ended.

He sleeps, and there is no power to arouse him till the trumpet shall sound that calls to the throne of Him who reigns supreme over His children of the earth, there to receive from His hand the final reward or chastisement according to their deserts.

The body of WILLIAM H. FLACK lies in the cemetery at Malone.

The curtain has been let down between the living and the dead, and behind that impenetrable curtain all is mystery.

It is not given to mortal man positively to know the habitation of a departed life; we know the tomb that holds the body; we know not of the spirit that has departed, because no man hath seen beyond the grave. We who believe in an allwise and just Ruler of the Universe, He who holds in his hands the destiny of men, of nations, and the world, and all therein, should be content to leave with Him the solution of life, death, and the eternity to follow.

They who do right accordingly as they are given to see the right, they who walk in the pathway that leads on to the better and nobler things of this life, who do good and avoid evil deeds, who walk uprightly before all men, doing unto others as they would that others should do unto them, may well afford to trust their future destiny in the hands of Him who doeth all things well.

I sincerely believe that these requirements were as nearly met as the frailties of human kind can meet them by our late beloved colleague, WILLIAM H. FLACK.

Mr. Bennett of New York. Mr. Speaker, William H. Flack was born and lived and died in Franklin County, in the State of New York. To those of us who come from the shifting population of a large city it is hard at times to comprehend the distinction which public office confers in other portions of the State, where the population is more settled. The counties of Clinton, Essex, Franklin, and St. Lawrence, which comprise the district represented here by Mr. Flack in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses, do not choose their representatives to public office lightly. Strongly Republican, a nomination there is usually equivalent to election. There have been many men there of whom it can be said, as of Mr. Flack, that their birth, their life, and their death have all been within the limits of one county. The habit of wandering is not strong, attachment to the soil is great; consequently a man in public life there is known to the voters, and even those who do not know him personally know of him.

I read in the biography of our late colleague that he held successively the offices of supervisor (being chairman of the board for two years), county clerk of Franklin County, chairman of the Republican county committee, trustee of the village of Malone, and Representative in Congress. Had he not been a man in the best sense of the word he would not have been so honored.

Knowing, as I do, the character of the men in the northeast portion of our State, a simple recital of the titles of these offices means much to me. It is the most complete of eulogies. I remember that from the same town of Malone came Congressman Wheeler, who in 1876 became Vice-President Wheeler; and I remember the other many distinguished men who have come from those four counties.

Prior to my service in the assembly of New York my knowledge of the men of that section was limited. But during my two years there I came to know, to appreciate them, and quite generally to vote with them. In stature large, for the most part, as was our deceased colleague, with clear minds and straight-thinking brains, it is no light or idle thing to represent such a constituency. We all know that illness prevented our colleague from making the record here that he otherwise might. During almost the whole of his two terms he was compelled by physical ailment to be absent, but we can all believe that had his health been such as to permit the record which he could have made, he would have been a credit even to that particular community. We knew him as a kindly, genial, straightforward, brotherly colleague. We shall miss him. We can rejoice that he faced the inevitable without shrinking. We are in some ways better for his having been here. Now that he is gone at so early an age, we can be glad that he had the privilege of this service. It meant much to him. His people were glad to be represented by him, and in him his district and his State had a worthy Representative. He leaves behind him that good name which is more to be preferred than great riches.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I only knew Mr. Flack during his service in Congress. There I did not know him intimately, but I knew him pleasantly. Mr. Flack was a good type of a large and valuable class of men in public life. He was not a person who sought actively for personal prominence; he took little part in the debates in the House; he did not seek to exert any large influence on legislation. His strength lay in a just recognition of what he could do well and in a conscientious performance of the work for which he was fitted.

We sometimes underestimate the value of the work of such men. The community is naturally attracted by those who take a more conspicuous part, and those we call our leaders. It is probably nearer the truth to say that a large body of sensible, well-intentioned men, who do their work quietly and conscientiously, listening to what others say and exercising their own judgment, are really the leaders in politics and legislation. The story is told of a French officer, in some internal commotion in Paris, who cried out:

My company is marching down the street, and I must follow.

In this remark, at which many have jested, there is a profound philosophy. The officer did not misstate his true position, he recognized it. It is the company that leads, and little remains for the officer but to march after his men. If he bids them go in the direction they would go, they will follow him, and otherwise he will find that he must follow them.

This is eminently true of our great political bodies, and therein was Mr. Flack's usefulness and the usefulness of those who are like him. He formed one of a body of fair-minded men, who wish to do the thing that is right and who have intelligence enough to find out what that thing is. To such men the captains and the leaders address themselves, and when they have decided on the best policy, the captains and leaders follow in their wake.

Mr. Flack's usefulness was not lessened by any itching for notoriety nor any morbid desire for personal prominence. Freed from such distractions, he did his duty as an intelligent legislator, and this entitled him to the respect of his fellowmen. That he was kindly, that he was courteous, that he bore pain and sickness with fortitude and without vain repining constitutes an additional claim upon the kindly feeling of his associates and upon their recollection now that he is no more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the State of New York has suffered irreparable loss in its representation in this Congress through death. Two men—one aged, experienced, and trained in legislative work and methods, the Hon. John H. Ketcham, the other in the prime of life, with the vigor of ripened manhood, and infused with enthusiasm for legislative work, WILLIAM H. FLACK—have passed away within a few months.

WILLIAM H. FLACK was the type of man bound to succeed in a legislative body. He had had experience as a public official, serving in local boards and other offices with credit and some distinction. He had successfully managed and enlarged and developed several business enterprises in which he was interested, and he was known and regarded as one who had succeeded in his life's struggle.

It was natural that such a man should be selected by the people of his district to represent it in the Congress. For years he had been active in the management of industries upon the success of which the prosperity of his people largely depended. He knew their legislative wants and understood their position on public questions as well as, if not better than, any other man in the district.

My acquaintanceship with Mr. Flack did not antedate his entrance to this body. While not long nor intimate, yet it was sufficient to enable me with some degree of confidence to place a proper estimate upon his character and his capacity.

He was a large-hearted, kindly spoken, generous man. In demeanor he was modest. In speech he was direct and apparently bent upon using the fewest possible words to convey intelligently his meaning. He was an indefatigable worker and devoted to the interests committed to his care. He had a high sense of the dignity and the responsibility of membership in this body, and had he been permitted to continue here he would undoubtedly have left an indelible impress for good upon the legislation enacted during his service.

Inscrutable, indeed, Mr. Speaker, are the ways of Divine Providence. At the age of 46, successful in business, honored by a great constituency by being chosen to represent it in this body, surrounded by a happy, contented, and united family, he began a career in this House which to the impartial observer seemed full of promise. Yet in the very heyday of his success and prosperity he has been called to another, a happier, and more blessed life.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I never knew Hon. WILLIAM H. FLACK until he came to Congress. He was a man of great modesty. He never, I believe, addressed the House. If he did, I have no recollection of it. He was a man who may have been said to have been reticent and possibly timid in pushing his opinions, but he was a man of intelligence, possessing strong judgment as to matters of business and legislation. He was pleasant, genial, and companionable. I can say but little of him, for I knew nothing of him in his home life. I knew nothing of him only as I gathered the mere fragments that indicate character while he served his short term.

acter while he served his short term.

He was stricken with disease, and longed to return to his duties. He was a strong advocate and supporter of the measures seeking to build up the American merchant marine, and he took especial interest in the promotion of the interests of the fish industries of the various States and Territories. He was active in support of the omnibus fish-hatchery bill, and wrote and presented to the House the report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries upon that measure. Had his life been spared and had he had strength and health, I am sure he would have made an efficient and valuable Member of Congress. But, stricken as he was, hopelessly ailing as he was, we could only hear that he was regretting his untimely disqualification for active service. His neighbors speak of him in the highest terms of praise, and the fact that he was sent to Congress from so intelligent a constituency speaks well for him and leaves little doubt that he was a man of high character and of virtuous mind.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Speaker, again, to-day, we are summoned to perform the sad office of mourning the death and commemorating the life of a Member of the New York delegation in the House of Representatives.

This is indeed a sorrowful occasion; more so than the other. The old must die and the young may die. To the one the end comes in the ordinary course and progress of natural laws. To the other it is violent, and it conflicts with some of those laws. The earthly tabernacle, however sound and strong in youth, grows old and weak with time and toil. When no longer able to sustain the soul, the spirit, the life, the vital spark, by whatever name, escapes without much struggle, pain, or suffering, and that is death. Not so with the man in youth or middle age. Some of the organs of the physical mechanism are strong and sound and perform their functions normally, while others, by inheritance or disease, are imperfect and can not do their part. In youth there is hope and resolution. The will is strong and so is love of life. The fight goes on in pain and travail until the vitality is exhausted and the patient must needs succumb. That, too, is death, but much more sad and tragic.

General Ketcham had overlived the allotted time of man on earth. He had done his work and rounded out his career, and full of years and honors he passed away. But while Mr. Flack was yet in his prime, with many hopes and aspirations, and while he was still looking forward, his message came. He was cut off in the midst of his plans when his life work was only partially completed. But notwithstanding his poor health during his last years, and his early death, he accomplished much for good. Born and reared in northern New York, with its cold, stormy, severe winters and delightful, invigorating summers, he grew up strong, sturdy, and self-reliant, with a large body and a sound, well-balanced mind. His early condition in life was about the same as that of the great majority of American boys who have worked their way and made their mark. He was poor, but that was no cross. Poverty in Franklin County, where few are rich and all are measured by what they are, is quite a different matter from poverty in Wall street, where riches are the rule and all are measured by what they have, no matter how acquired.

In the country, on the farm, the American boy is not abjectly, or. There social distinctions are not based on wealth. The hired boy on the farm hopes some day to own a farm of his The hired girl who works in another's kitchen hopes some day to be a prosperous farmer's wife. There the employee and the employer eat at the same table, worship at the same altar, and mingle in the same social gatherings. The hired man may be poor in material accumulations, but he is rich in health and vigor, in hope and promise. Poverty under these conditions and in such an environment is never debasing, for it is not humiliating or belittling. That kind of poverty and that sort of adversity develop confidence and efficiency, build character, and fit the poor boy to improve his opportunities when they In that social condition and amidst those surroundings Mr. Flack was reared, and all through his life he typified that phase of our American civilization. He was never truculent and time serving toward those who thought they were his superiors, nor was he ever arrogant or overbearing in his attitude toward those less fortunate in getting on. He was ever a plain, big-hearted man, kind and generous toward all and obsequious toward none. In these times, when gold is worshiped and the dollar is placed above the man and social castes and distinctions are being established on bank accounts, it would be well if our young men would study the character and emulate the virtues of such men as WILLIAM FLACK.

Manifestly Mr. Flack had a taste and aptitude for public life. No man could accomplish what he did by accident. He was seven years supervisor of his town and two years chairman of the board. He was six years county clerk of his native county, and he was also trustee and president of the village of Malone and two terms Representative in Congress from the Twenty-sixth district of New York. He was also leader and chairman of the Republican organization of his county. That means that he was an able politician as well as a capable and honest public servant. He was in public life nearly all his years after attaining majority, which indicates that he was respected and trusted by those who knew him well. I am aware that some people speak with disrespect of politicians. They seem to look upon them as rogues, rascals, and crooks, and enemies of good society. On the part of some criticisms of this kind are prompted by envy and jealousy, and yet others, honest but misguided people, actually believe it. There can be no greater mistake. cism has less of justification. Of course, there are politicians and politicians. Some are honest and others are corrupt. in honesty, public spirit, and in all civic and moral virtues they, are far above the general average of society. They are not theorists or idealists alone. They must be practical in order to accomplish results. This is a representative government from top to bottom.

Every official, whether elected or appointed, holds his commission by the will of the electors, and all the way from the President down they fairly represent their constituents in virtue and intelligence. And Mr. Flack was fully up to the average of his. He was kind-hearted and generous and happiest when he was helping others and conferring favors. He had learned the luxury of doing good. If he was willing to receive, he was also disposed to give to the full measure of his ability. He was not vindictive; he was always ready to forgive and forget. He treated his opponents fairly, took no advantage, and never hit below the belt. He was not a cynic, neither was he a scolding, carping critic of men and measures. He took the world as he found it and adapted himself to conditions and tried to make them better. He was generous to him. He was not hot-headed and given to passion and arrogance, for he had a kindly disposition and a good word for each and all. He was an optimist, and looked on the bright side of the picture. He was well disposed toward all, had faith in his fellow-men, and they had faith in him. He did not play to the galleries or court spectacular applause, but in a plain and unassuming manner did his duty day by day as he saw it. His head was clear, his heart was warm, and his ideals were high. He was possessed of sound common sense, and when he made up his mind and took a position, he held it with determination and consistency.

That kind of a politician was Mr. Flack, and these were the qualities of mind and heart which enabled him to retain The town of Waverly, the confidence of all who knew him well. the county of Franklin, the village of Malone, and the Twentysixth Congressional district are unusually intelligent and progressive constituencies. They successively and repeatedly honored Mr. Flack by electing him to office. Why did they do so? He was not a distinguished orator or writer. He was not possessed of those rare intellectual gifts by which some men dazzle and charm multitudes and command their obedience. He was not a man of such means that he could corrupt those electo-rates, if so disposed. They honored him because they knew and trusted him and because they liked him. He won his way step by step from place to place, always advancing by the sheer force of his good character, common sense, and personal mag-He wore his decorations so modestly and gracefully that the people delighted to honor him.

The House of Representatives is a distinguished body, so large that the ordinary Member cuts but little figure. It is governed by traditions, customs, and rules—especially rules. Because of those traditions, customs, and rules, and lack of experience the most brilliant men make but little headway during their first two terms. Mr. Flack served nearly four years, but he was handicapped by ill health nearly all the time. His colleagues from New York, and others who made his intimate acquaintance, liked, respected, and trusted him. His mind worked on honest lines. His judgment was sound, his conclusions reliable. He was careful, honest, and patriotic. With continued life, health, and service in the Congress he would have worked his way to the front here as in other fields of his activities. But after all his reputation will depend on his work and life at home in Franklin County. Assurance, cheek, and gall count for much on short acquaintance, while only substantial merit assures respect among those who know one well. Will Flack was admired and loved by his boyhood playmates and his life-long friends and neighbors. By the good people of Franklin County and beautiful and picturesque Malone he was known, understood, and appreciated. By them he is and will be missed. Their high regard for him in life and deep sorrow for his death bear witness to his worth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In pursuance of the orders heretofore made, and as a further mark of respect to the de-ceased, the House will now stand adjourned until to-morrow at 10 o'clock a. m.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

A joint resolution memorializing Congress to open Tripp County,
S. Dak., to homestead settlement.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That Whereas there have been introduced into the National Congress certain measures looking to the opening to homestead settlement that part of the Rosebud Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, lying and being in Tripp County, S. Dak.; and
Whereas said county comprises approximately 1,000,000 acres of land which needs only settlement and development to make it productive, and which when opened to settlement will add much to the assessment rolls and population of our great State; and
Whereas a line of railroad is now being constructed to the cast boundary of said tract, which will greatly assist in its development as soon as it is opened to settlement; and
Whereas in its present wild state said land brings very little revenue to the Indians, and none whatever to the State: Therefore, be it
Resolved, That we, for the good of the Indians and for the further development of our State, petition the Congress of the United States to hasten to provide ways and means for the early opening of this body of land to homestead settlement under such restrictions and conditions as they may deem wise, and that the secretary of state be authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the President of the Senate.

A joint resolution memorializing Congress to pass a law enlarging the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to keep the highways of commerce open to all upon equal terms.

highways of commerce open to all upon equal terms.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That it is the sense and belief of the legislature of the State of South Dakota that it will be to the best interest of the people of the State and of the United States that Congress enact such laws as will keep the highways of commerce open to all upon equal terms, and to put a complete stop to all rebates and abuses of traffic and of discriminations made to shippers, and to stop all rebates and discriminations of terminal track and sidetrack systems.

Resolved, That we most heartily concur in the following expressed opinion of President Roosevelt:

"The Government must in increasing degree supervise and regulate the workings of the railways engaged in interstate commerce, and such increased supervision is the only alternative to an increase of the present evils on the one hand or a still more radical policy on the other."

Therefore we most respectfully petition and request the Congress of the United States to enact such laws as will prevent abuse and dis-crimination on the highways of commerce and of terminal and side-track systems.

Resolved, That the Members of Congress from South Dakota are hereby requested to use their influence and best efforts to procure the enactment of such needed legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of North Dakota. The concurrent resolution is very short. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEAN. Let the concurrent resolution be read.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Concurrent resolution offered by Mr. Rice indorsing that certain bill pending before Congress, forbidding the internal-revenue department to issue liquor licenses in States where prohibition laws prevail to anyone without proof that the applicant has complied with the laws of the State wherein the applicant resides.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That the legislative assembly of this State heartily approve and indorse said bill. Be it Further resolved, That we recommend the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of North Dakota to support the said bill and use their utmost endeavors to secure the passage of the Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to the members of said bodies representing this State.

R. S. Lewis,

President of the Senate.

JAMES W. FOLEY,

Secretary of the Senate.

TREADWELL TWICHELL.

Speaker of the House.

P. D. NORTON,

Chief Clerk of the House.

I, James W. Foley, secretary of the senate, do hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution originated in and was adopted by the senate of the tenth legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota and was concurred in by the house of representatives.

JAMES W. FOLEY,

Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of Local Union No. 132, United Garment Workers of America, of Keene; of the Mule Spinners' Local Union, American Federation of Labor, of Manchester, and of Loomfixers' Local Union, No. 548, American Fed+ eration of Labor, of Lebanon, all in the State of New Hamp-shire, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of labor and industry from the competition of convict labor and prison-made goods; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of James R. Brown, of Washington, D. C., and the petition of William T. White, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the removal of railroad grade crossings and tracks east of New Jersey avenue to the United States navy-yard in the southeast section of that city; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Newport, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bristol, and of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bristol, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

, He also presented the petition of Theodore Morse, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called "Kittredge copyright bill;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULBERSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jefferson, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SIMMONS presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Paul, N. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of James E. Hamlin, of North Carolina, praying for the enactment of legislation for the relief of Joseph V. Cunningham and other officers of the Philippine Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of North Carolina, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the reorganization of the personnel of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA:

I, D. D. Wipf, secretary of state of South Dakota;
I, D. D. Wipf, secretary of state of South Dakota and keeper of the great seal thereof, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of House joint resolution No. 11, as passed by the tenth legislative assembly of the State of South Dakota, and of the whole thereof, and has been compared with the original now on file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota. Done at the city of Pierre, this 19th day of February, 1907.

ways of commerce open to all upon equal terms.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That it is the sense and belief of the legislature of the State of South Dakota that it will be to the best interest of the people of the State and of the United States that Congress enact such laws as will keep the highways of commerce open to all upon equal terms, and to put a complete stop to all rebates and abuses of traffic, and of discriminations made to shippers, and to stop all rebates and discriminations of terminal track and sidetrack systems.

Resolved, That we most heartily concur in the following expressed opinion of President Roosevelt:

"The Government must in increasing degree supervise and regulate the workings of the railways engaged in interstate commerce, and such increased supervision is the only alternative to an increase of the present evils on the one hand or a still more radical policy on the other."

Therefore we most respectfully petition and request the Congress of

Therefore we most respectfully petition and request the Congress of the United States to enact such laws as will prevent abuses and dis-crimination on the highways of commerce and of terminal and sidetrack

A joint resolution memorializing Congress to open Tripp County, S. Dak., to homestead settlement.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That whereas there have been introduced into the National Congress certain measures looking to the opening to homestead settlement that part of the Rosebud Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, lying and being in Tripp County, S. Dak.; and

Whereas said county comprises approximately 1,000,000 acres of land which needs only settlement and development to make it productive, and which when opened to settlement will add much to the assessment rolls and population of our great State; and

Whereas a line of railroad is now being constructed to the east boundary of said tract, which will greatly assist in its development as soon as it is opened to settlement; and

Whereas in its present wild state said land brings very little revenue to the Indians, and none whatever to the State: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, for the good of the Indians and for the further development of our State, petition the Congress of the United States to hasten to provide ways and means for the early opening of this body of land to homestead settlement, under such restrictions and conditions as they may deem wise; and

That the secretary of state be authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the President of the Senate.

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, Office Secretary of State, 88:

Filed February 19, 1907, at 4.20 p. m.
D. D. Wiff, Secretary of State. Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Pasadena, Los Angeles, and Monrovia, all in the State of California, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary Mr. HEMENWAY. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of Indiana, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD. The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Engrossed house concurrent resolution No. 3.

Engrossed house concurrent resolution No. 3.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Indiana (the senate concurring therein):

Whereas an international exposition, to be know as the "Alaska-Yukon Pacific Exposition," will be held at the city of Seattle, Wash., from June 1 to October 15, 1909; and

Whereas the purposes of said exposition are, first, to demonstrate the already great and increasing importance of our commerce with the countries bordering on the Pacific Ocean and to assist in its further development; second, to bring to the notice of the world the resources and possibilities of the Alaska and Yukon territories of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and, third, to illustrate the marvelous progress of the western market; and

Whereas all lines of American manufacture and production would be benefited by large trade relations between this country and the Pacific Ocean countries and that development of the oriental and South American markets would increase the outlets and enlarge the markets for Indiana for food products, cement, and other products; and

Whereas no exposition has ever been held in the United States having for one of its main objects the promotion of Pacific commerce and advancement of trade with the Pacific coast countries: Therefore,

Resolved, That we commend the aims and purposes of this exposition. We believe that it will be of vast value in extending the acquaintance of the Pacific Ocean countries with each other, which will undoubtedly extend our markets, give our merchanis a more thorough knowledge of how to secure and hold this trade and assist our Pacific commerce.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly certified by the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of Congress from Indiana.

The State of Indiana, as:

THE STATE OF INDIANA, 88:

We, the undersigned, the secretary of the senate and the principal clerk of the house of the sixty-fifth general assembly of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that engrossed house concurrent resolution No. 3 was adopted by the said house on February 2, 1907, and was adopted by the said senate on February 15, 1907.

In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names this February 19, 1907.

JULIAN D. HOGATE, Secretary of Senate. M. S. HASTINGS, Principal Clerk of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I present a resolution of the legislature of the State of Indiana, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Engrossed senate concurrent resolution No. 7.

Engrossed senate concurrent resolution No. 7.

Whereas the proposed deep waterway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf would be of great commercial benefit and advantage to the State of Indiana: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Indiana in the Congress of the United States are respectfully requested to promote and support such measures as would look to the construction and maintenance of such deep waterway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf.

This is to certify that the foregoing is an exact copy of engrossed senate concurrent resolution No. 7.

JULIAN D. Hogare

JULIAN D. HOGATE, Secretary of Senate. M. S. HASTINGS, Clerk of House.

Mr. BURKETT presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lincoln, Beatrice, and Kenesaw, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PROCTOR presented the memorial of Mrs. E. H. Knight, representative of the National Consumers' League and Federated Women's Clubs of Laramie, Wyo., remonstrating against the adoption of a certain amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill relative to the expenditure of money for aiding State officials to carry into effect the present pure-food law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KNOX presented petitions of Keystone Lodge, No. 147, aternational Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-Ship International Builders and Helpers of America, of Susquehanna; Local Union No. 52, United Garment Workers of America, of Scranton; Local Union No. 141, Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, of Philadelphia; Knowlton & Co., Philadelphia; Independence Lodge, No. 44, Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel, and Tin Workers of the United States, of Berwick, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of labor and industries from the competition of convict labor and manufactures; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of C. L. Woodward & Son, of Shunk, and of 32 citizens of Sunbury, in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

. REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8542) to authorize W. D. Clay and others to select lands in lieu of lands purchased by the father of said parties from the United States Government and lost by said heirs, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the Lill (H. R. 24374) to fix the boundaries of lands of certain landówners and entrymen adjoining the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8303) to establish the Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL GARLAND

Mr. STONE. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 8426) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims of Samuel Garland, deceased, against the Choctaw Nation, and I submit a report thereon. It is a bill of one section, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. KEAN. The bill provides for rendering a judgment?

Mr. KEAN. The bill provide.

Mr. STONE. It does.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. I think it had better go to the Calendar. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar.
Mr. STONE subsequently said: A moment ago I asked for the present consideration of Senate bill 8426. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Kean] asked that it might go over. I have explained to him since as I do to the Senate now that at the last session an exactly similar bill was passed by Congress, referring the claim of another party to the Court of Claims in the very language of this bill. The two claims are identical and By some oversight the name of the beneficiary are connected. mentioned in this bill was left out of the other, and this is simply to supply that omission so that both claims may go to the Court of Claims. The Senator from New Jersey having withdrawn his objection, I ask that the bill may be now considered.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Mr. FULTON. I inquire from what committee the bill

The VICE-PRESIDENT. From the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time. and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO BOULDER, COLO.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22599) to grant certain lands to the city of Boulder, Colo., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent, for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Lands, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 24134) providing for the granting and patenting to the State of Colorado desert lands formerly in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado, and I submit a report thereon. for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PATTERSON subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 24134) providing for the granting and patenting to the State of Colorado desert lands formerly in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in Colorado, was passed this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 8510.

Mr. McCUMBER. On account of other bills that have to be considered, I hope we will continue with the morning business in the regular order until it is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the bill for the information of the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. Unless there are special reasons why we should consider the bill, I must object.

Mr. PLATT. It is a short bill, and will not consume much

Mr. TILLMAN. I will consent to the consideration of this bill, but I will not consent to the consideration of any other until we get through with the morning business.

Mr. PROCTOR. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont calls for the regular order.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SPOONER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7759) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of California. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It will take but a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that objection has been raised right along to the consideration of bills when they were reported, and it certainly would be unjust to the rest to allow a bill reported to be considered and not relieve the others from the same rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Scuator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I have just come into the Scuate. I was not aware of previous objections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

RULES AND REGULATIONS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry as to what reports have been received pursuant to the resolution of the Senate of February 1, calling for copies of the rules and regulations of the Departments. I will ask information as to what Departments have reported pursuant to those resolutions.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that reports have been received from the Department of Justice, the Department of Agriculture, the Postmaster-General, and the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to request, if it is in order, that the Secretary of the Senate be directed to notify the Departments—or remind them rather—that have not yet responded to the resolution in order that proper proceedings may be had in the Senate for the purpose of procuring a response to the resolutions of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask what is the order of business? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I take it this is a privileged inquiry that I may make at any time during the morning hour, as to whether there is a response from a Department of the Government that has been directed to report to the Senate. I therefore ask for an order that the Secretary of the Senate communicate with the Departments and inquire as to why a report has not been received.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the better way would be for the Senator to introduce another resolution. I presume it could be passed this morning. It is entirely an innovation to direct an officer of the Senate to communicate for the Senate with the Department. I hardly think that that is the proper course to

Mr. HEYBURN. I was in some doubt as to what might be the proper course, because it is not at all usual for the Departments to neglect to respond to a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. It has occurred before a number of times, and other resolutions have been passed, one, I think, calling for the reasons. I think the course suggested by the Senator is one hardly dignified and proper for the Senate to adopt. If he will introduce another resolution addressed to the Departments which have not replied, it will be an indication to them that the Senate desires this information and desires it promptly, and that would be the better course.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin. It is one of those cases that seldom arises, and I merely indicated the Secretary as the ordinary officer through whom the correspondence of the Senate passes.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the resolution of February 1 asking for this information read, that we may know what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary. The resolution of February 1 reads as Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish to the Senate for its information a copy of the rules and regulations governing the Treasury Department in its various branches.

Resolutions exactly similarly worded were sent to the Attorney-General, the Secretary of State, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agiculture, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that the answers are in course of preparation, and I am told that some have been sent Certainly we ought not to doubt that the Departments are doing what they can to comply with the resolutions.

Mr. HEYBURN. Four of them, I will say, have been sent in. Some of those rules and regulations were particularly important in the discussion in which we have been engaged. While I consider that discussion practically closed and that the necessity for those rules and regulations has in a measure passed, yet it seems to me that three weeks would be a reasonable time in which to prepare the reply.

I regard this as of sufficient importance to claim the attention of the Senate until it is settled. I think I am within the regular order, for that matter. But I will prepare the resolutions as suggested, directed to the Departments that have not responded, and offer them at a later time during the day.

WILLIAM O. BEALL.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask for an order which I think may properly come under the head of reports of committees.

Some days ago the Secretary of the Interior submitted a report to the Senate and asked that the papers be returned as soon as the Senate was through with them. I have had the report printed, and I now move that the Secretary be instructed to return the papers to the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. PETTUS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23391) to change the time of holding the United States district and circuit courts in the eastern district of North Carolina, and to provide for the appointment of a clerk of the courts at Washington, N. C., to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill just reported by the junior Senator from Ala-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Is that morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a report just made by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is simply a bill to change the time of holding courts to meet an emergency

A bill (S. 8571) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Middleton Shoals; and

A bill (S. 8572) permitting the building of a dam across the Savannah River at Andersonville Shoals, Mr. LATIMER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 8573) for the relief of the heirs of Mitchell King; A bill (S. 8574) for the relief of James Marsh; and

A bill (S. 8575) for the relief of Robert Adger, executor and trustee of the estate of James Adger, deceased (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 8576) granting authority to the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania to substitute the names of new defendants in certain suits now pending before it; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PETTUS introduced a bill (S. 8577) permitting the erection of a dam across Coosa River, Alabama, at the place selected for Lock No. 12 on said river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 8578) for the relief of the estate of R. S. Simonton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL,

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the construction of a light-ship to be placed near the eastern end of Hedge Fence Shoal, Vineyard Sound, Massachusetts, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment proposing that $5,000 be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration in order to enable the President to ascertain the conditions existing under which, in the last provisio of the first section of the act to regulate immigration, approved February 20, 1907, it is made his duty to refuse to permit aliens therein described to enter the continental territory of the United States, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropria-

Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the purchase of a permanent water supply, with land appurtenant thereto, and to purchase material and construct a water plant for the supply of Fort William Henry Harrison, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 to cover the necessary expense of additional buildings and equipment for the signal station of the United States Army at Fort Omaha, Nebr., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CLAY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,333,000 for the purchase of certain land in the District of Columbia for park purposes, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed. Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500 to ascertain and reestablish the lines of the military reservation at the island of Mackinac, Michigan, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the construction of a light-house and a fog-signal station of the second order to be located at the easterly end of Gull Island, Apostle group, westerly end of Lake Superior, Wisconsin, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LATIMER submitted an amendment relative to the admission to practice before the United States court for China of all members of the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States or of the supreme court of any State or Territory, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropria-tion bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the acquisition of a site for a public building at Fairmont, W. Va., etc., and also $1,333,000 for the purchase of certain land in the District of Columbia for park purposes, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Appropriations.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $70,000 in addition to the sum of $80,000 already appropriated by the act of June 30, 1906, for the extension and enlargement of the United States building which contains the United States court rooms, clerk's office, and post-office at Lynchburg, Va., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. PETTUS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the first part of the nineteenth standing rule of the Senate be amended by inserting therein, after the words "shall first address the Presiding Officer," the words following: "nor shall such interruption be made for nor extend to debate."

BULES AND REGULATIONS OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolutions for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate, for its information, a copy of all rules and regulations governing the Department in its various branches, pursuant to Senate resolution No. 239.

resolution No. 240.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to furnish to the Senate, for its information, a copy of all rules and regulations governing the Department in its various branches, pursuant to Senate resolution No. 241.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, four of the Departments have answered. It seems to me that it is very unusual not to give a Department a full opportunity to answer. The resolutions called for a great deal of information, and I should suppose it requires a great deal of work to prepare the returns. It seems to me that it is rather inconsiderate to expect the Departments to meet these resolutions so soon. I ask that the resolutions may go

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire as to whether that is strictly within the rule? The Senate having passed a resolution requesting the information, and almost a month having gone by, I ask whether a resolution instructing a compliance with the order of the Senate heretofore directed to the Department is subject to the rule and must go over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would so hold. These are new resolutions, and under the rule, an objection being made, they must lie over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall call up the resolutions to-morrow morning during the morning hour.

SPECIAL EMPLOYEES OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Some answers have come in from the Departments to the resolution of February 8, and they have not They are from the Interstate Commerce Combeen printed. mission, the Treasury Department, and the Interior Department

While I am on my feet I will state that those inquiries are of very great importance in enabling the Committee on Appropriations intelligently to make appropriations for special agents and other persons to be employed, and I hope the other bureaus or Departments of the Government will not delay until it is too late for us to get the information for any use at this session. I ask for the adoption of the following order.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the communications from the Interstate Commerce Commission of February 15 and 20, 1907; of the Secretary of the Treasury of February 21, 1907, and of the Secretary of the Interior of February 23, 1907, in response to Senate resolutions of February 8 and 14, 1907, making inquiry as to employees, amount paid them, etc., be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HEIRS OF PATRICK WHITE.

On motion of Mr. Clark of Wyoming, it was Ordered, That permission be given to the claimant to withdraw from the files all papers submitted by her in reference to S. 5609, no ad-verse action having been taken thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. Before the close of the morning business I ask leave to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 22580) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908. I ask for its adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays the conference report before the Senate. It has heretofore been read. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

INDIAN TRIBAL FUNDS.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7759) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of California.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consid-

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT. With the permission of the Senator from North Dakota, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8510) to amend an act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 11, after the word "instance," to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That nothing in this paragraph shall be field to contravene the provisions of public resolution No. 11, approved March 28, 1904.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 1, after the word or," to strike out the words "any other" and insert "serial;" so as to read:

If the publication so ordered be an annual report or serial publication originating in or prepared by an Executive Department, bureau, office, commission, or board, it shall not be numbered in the document or report series of either House of Congress, but shall be designated by title, as hereinafter provided. Of all Department reports required by law to be printed, the usual number shall be printed concurrently with the departmental edition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 13, after the word "others," to insert "if of a general public character;" so as to read:

PAR. 2. In the binding of Congressional numbered documents and reports, every publication of sufficient size on any one subject shall hereafter be bound separately and receive the title suggested by the subject of the volume; and the others, if of a general public character, shall be arranged in convenient volumes and bound in a manner as directed by the Joint Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 15, after the word "Printing," to insert:

And those not of a general public character shall be delivered to the depositories in unbound form, and ten copies shall be bound and distributed as follows: To the Senate library, three copies; to the House library, three copies; the Library of Congress, three copies, and to the office of the superintendent of documents, one copy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARCUS WOOD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (H. R. 21121) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Marcus Wood."

STEAM VESSEL FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill S. 925, "An act authorizing the construction of a steam vessel for the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the amendment of the House.

S. B. ELKINS. GEO. C. PERKINS, S. R. MALLORY, Managers on the part of the Senate. JAMES R. MANN, FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, W. H. RYAN, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

An act (H. R. 25745) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Vermont has courteously agreed that the pending measure, the agricultural appropriation bill, may be temporarily laid aside that I may call up the pension appropriation bill. I therefore call up the bill (H. R. 24640) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and I ask that the substitute reported with amendments from the committee February 20 may be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and with amendments to the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the formal reading of the sub-

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask that the formal reading of the substitute be dispensed with and that it be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the formal reading be dispensed with, that the substitute be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee shall first be considered. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the proposed substitute.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 1, line 11, before the word "million," to strike out "thirty-seven" and insert "forty-five;" so as to read:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $145,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately: And provided further, That hereafter the age of 62 years and over shall be considered a permanent specific disability within the meaning of the pension laws.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "laws," to insert:

And provided further, That the benefits of the act of February 6, 1907, entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico," are hereby extended to include any person who served the period of time therein specified during the late civil war or in the war with Mexico and who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolution of July 1, 1902, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 4, to strike out lines 8 and 9, as follows:

For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For salaries of eighteen agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000.

So as to read:

So as to read:

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1908, $600,000. And each member of each examining board shall, as now authorized by law, receive the sum of $2 for the examination of each applicant whenever five or a less number shall be examined on any one day, and $1 for the examination of each additional applicant on such day: Provided, That if twenty or more applicants appear on one day, no fewer than twenty shall, if practicable, be examined on said day, and that if fewer examinations be then made, twenty or more having appeared, then there shall be paid for the first examinations made on the next examination day the fee of $1 only until twenty examinations shall have been made: Provided further. That no fee shall be paid to any member of an examining board unless personally present and assisting in the examination of applicant: And provided further, That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to, and the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically and accurately set forth the physical condition of the applicant, each and every existing disability being fully and carefully described. The reports of the special examiners of the Bureau of Pensions shall be open to inspection and copy by the applicant or his attorney, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further. That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in securing the introduction of a bill or the passage thereof through Congress granting pension or increase of pension; and any person who shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain any compensation for such services shall be deemed guilty of an offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

For salaries of eighteen

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 4, line 13, after the word "services," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "in the pension agencies, four hundred and thirty-five;" in line 16, after the word "services," to insert "for each;" and in the same line, after the word "agency," to insert "shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency and the salaries paid;" so as to read:

For clerk hire and other services in the pension agencies, $435,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire and other services for each agency shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency, and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment to the amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to insert:

For rent, New York agency, $4,500. For examination and inspection of pension agencies, as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4766, Revised Statutes, $1,500.

So as to read:

For rent, New York agency, $4,500.

For examination and inspection of pension agencies, as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4766, Revised Statutes, $1,500.

For stationery and other necessary expenses, $30,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. PROCTOR. The pending amendment is on page 41,

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. PROCTOR. I can not yield, except for morning business. Mr. DEPEW. I gave notice on Friday last, Mr. President, that I desired to address the Senate this morning.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think the Senator will not be delayed beyond a short time. I have had several requests, but it is impossible to yield for anything except morning business DEPEW. If it is the agricultural appropriation bill which the Senator desires to proceed with, it will take all day.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PROCTOR. I will yield to the Senator from New York [Mr. Depew], who, I understand, had previously given notice of his intention to address the Senate this morning.

Mr. DEPEW. I did.

Mr. PROCTOR. Then I yield to the Senator.

ELASTICITY IN THE CURRENCY.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I call up the resolution offered by me on February 21, 1907.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. Depew February 21, 1907, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be authorized to investigate and report what legislation, if any, may be necessary in relation to the deposit of public moneys and the issue of currency to prevent conditions of abnormal and dangerous rates of interest at certain periods of the year and provide such elasticity in the currency that it will be more responsive to the conditions of business.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I know of no legislation more important than the passage of measures for the relief of our monetary conditions, and to give greater elasticity to our currency. Our whole industrial and commercial fabric rests necessarily upon a financial policy and practice in accord with sound principles. No one pretends that our present method of hoarding public money and keeping it out of use and circulation is either wise or economical. Everyone conversant with affairs admits the need of more elasticity in our currency. We have been doing business, and almost miraculously succeeding in it, upon makeshifts brought about by political bitterness and party passion on the one hand and a device to meet an immediate financial crisis on the other.

A brief review of the situation will demonstrate our condition and its needs. There is an almost passionate feeling in the country that we should become a world power in all that phrase means. In national wealth, in marvelous productiveness, in agriculture and manufacture, in ability to command markets by the genius, skill, and industry of our citizens, and in the unparalleled opportunities which are here afforded, we are in a commanding position. We are isolated from attack and in-vulnerable because of our situation and resources.

Our Navy commands peace and our diplomacy has been brilliantly effective in maintaining it, but the flag upon our battle ships is about the only evidence in the ports and harbors of the world of our ability as a sea power. Our commerce is carried under alien flags and in foreign ships, whose officers are necessarily more friendly to their own people than to ours. nation can hold a first place whose goods and mails are dependent upon foreigners for transportation; but, apart from that and for immediate consideration, we must deal with a Chinese wall and triple-barred gates, built about that natural flow of money to meet industrial and commercial necessities, which prevent our having the place which our resources should command of financial supremacy. Passion, rather than a careful study of the lesson of successful practices in other highly developed countries, has governed our legislation.

Alexander Hamilton was one of the most marvelous creative geniuses the world has ever known. At 17 he so clearly stated the underlying principles of the American Revolution as to command the attention of all the colonies; while not yet 30 his contributions to the Federalist remain still a guide and text-book, and his labors in the New York Convention and the Constitutional Convention contributed more than those of any other to the Constitution of the United States.

When Robert Morris, the Philadelphia banker, was patriotically financing the Revolution, Hamilton, then in the army and only 23, formulated a plan which if adopted would have pre-vented the collapse of the Continental currency. When he became vented the collapse of the Continental currency. When he became Secretary of the Treasury, in the cabinet of General Washing-ton, he devised our system for treasury and customs, which has expanded, but has not been altered from his day, and made the report to Congress upon manufactures which has been the basis of all tariff legislation and of development under the tariff from his day until ours. He saw, with the prophetic vision with which he was gifted, that a country like ours, of undeveloped resources, must have a system of protection until it should be self-sustaining in every department. He saw that the country, with its vast undeveloped wealth in forests, mines, and agriculture, and its limitless possibilities in manufactures, must, to attain perfect results, have a sound and scientific financial system, both as regards the money collected by the Government and the issue of currency.

At this point, unhappily, came the breach between the ideas of Hamilton and Jefferson, which has retarded our growth, antagonized the people at different times for a century, and, culminating in the civil war, in an undreamed-of centralization of power, continues still to vex our politics and our policies.

The first national bank was the product of the teachings of Hamilton, and during its existence a most efficient help to both the Government and the people. The persistent opposition of Jeffersonian principles refused it a new charter, though its enemies, who declared the whole legislation which created it vicious and unconstitutional, did not hesitate when in power to put into the Treasury the $573,000 profit which the Government made by the sale of the stock the Government owned, through an advance of 28.7 per cent upon the original investment, because of the admirable management and beneficent influence of the bank.

It took a panic, which shattered the credit of the Government and ruined the business of the people, to bring about the organization of a second national bank. This, like the first, was founded upon sound principles, and proved to be a great suc-Through it the money collected from the people for customs and taxes was available for the people's use. Through it and its branches the Government had an agency by which it could use its credit to advantage for a market for Government bonds at an advantageous rate of interest. Through it the people had a circulating medium which contracted and expanded according to the necessities of trade; but Jeremiah Mason, standing beside Daniel Webster in reputation and ability, president of a branch bank at Portsmouth, N. H., incurred the hostility of the Jethro Bass of that period, if I may quote from Winston Churchill's novel, and he immediately declared war upon the national bank. Practical politicians, impractical theorists, and ambitious statesmen saw in this question an opportunity to create a popular issue against corporate wealth.

Andrew Jackson, one of the strongest characters in our public life, a man of dauntless courage, audacity, and ineradicable prejudices, was made to believe by these strong and able men about him that the bank had been made a political machine for his overthrow. After four years of determined warfare he drove the bank out of business. Then came the panic of '37, in which practically the whole country was sold under the hammer. Then we had the device of State banks for the deposit of public moneys and for circulating medium under charters which differed as widely as the States, until by the failure of many of such banks, which were often speculative political enterprises, the Government lost large sums of money and the business of the country was deranged. Then we had the subtreasury scheme for locking Government money up and so far as national legislation was concerned the States were left to themselves to provide currency. Wise scientific methods were adopted in New England, under the Suffolk bank system, in New York and Indiana and in some other States, but in still other States there was wild-cat banking and the so-styled yellow dog and pup currency, always uncertain and often of no value, which demoralized business everywhere, and when the panic of '57 came there were no banking means of preventing or controlling it.

When it became necessary for the preservation of the nation during the civil war, that money should be had for carrying it on, our helplessness, because we had no financial or banking machinery which the Government could use, nearly lost us the battle. From the necessities of the hour the present system of national banking was inaugurated mainly for the purpose of creating a market for the sale of the bonds of the Government. To still further provide money the Government issued an irredeemable currency which fluctuated between par and 40 cents on the dollar, and under it the war cost a thousand millions of dollars more than if we had been upon a proper basis.

When the civil war closed we had for our industrial and financial necessities in the upbuilding from its ravages the system of locking up Government money, and issuing an irredeemable currency. The wildest speculation of our time ensued and then followed the panic of 1873, the most disastrous, the most revolutionary, the most ruinous which any civilized country has experienced, and at the same time helpful in its results. But time has demonstrated that no mistakes of legislation or of unwise practice by the Government can permanently check our national development with our limitless resources and opportunities, and our people possessing the ability to adapt themselves to any conditions and the energy to rise triumphant out of difficulties and misfortunes.

Our lessons are not to be derived from the marvels done, but the greater marvels possible if we had been wise. The wheat fields of the West, and the mines in the mountains and in the bowels of the earth were productive with primitive appliances and hand-power, but it is invention, steam, and electricity, which have brought about present results in spite of the deficiencies of our fiscal system and its unscientific methods.

Ever since the destruction of the national bank by the refusal to renew its charter and the fierce political controversies which followed there has been a prejudice against banks and bankers. It is still too strong to revive in any form the old national bank. Ignorance on this subject has been the fruitful source of a library of loose literature.

As illustrating how little of sensible discussion and how much of bitter politics only there was in the debate on the question of the renewal of the charter of the national bank, I quote from the remarks of Congressman Desha, of Kentucky, who said:

The question was whether we will foster a viper in the bosom of our country that will spread its deadly venom on the land and finally affect the vitals of our republican institutions, or whether we will, as is our duty, apply the proper antidote by a refusal to renew the charter, thereby checking the cankering poison. He thought the bonus offered by the bank was a bribe offered to the nation. He had no doubt that George III was a principal stockholder in the bank, and that the English monarch regarded it as an instrument in effecting his nefarious purposes against the United States, and would bid up several millions of dollars rather than not to have the charter renewed. This is a safer method than encountering Americans in arms. Of that we made him extremely tired when we were in a state of infancy.

Old George the Third was at that time a lunatic,

A member of the committee on banks in the New York legislature, who was engaged in other business where he required the use of his credit to furnish him with capital, and this capital could only be had from the banks, seriously inquired of me whether it would not be both justifiable and wise to enact a law to compel banks to discount notes but prohibit their charging interest.

First, as to Government deposits. The practice has so far relaxed as to permit receipts coming from other sources than customs to be deposited in the banks. The customs receipts, however, which last year were over three hundred millions of dollars, are immediately locked up and that currency taken out of circulation. There are times when this hoard of the circulating medium amounts to two hundred and sixty millions of It is never less than twelve millions, and the average is greatly in excess of this minimum. The Secretary of the Treasury in times of great financial disasters from want of currency takes out a portion of this money and deposits it temporarily in banks which are Government depositories. It is done under a power which has been questioned. There should be no question whatever upon a transaction of this nature. It should not rest absolutely in the discretion of any one man, no matter how able, how pure, or how great, to contract or expand the currency. This power has never been abused, but there is always the possibility of scandal even when not abused. The market responds instantly and prior knowledge means a fortune.

In every civilized country except ours money, when collected by the government, is immediately deposited in the banks. There is no disturbance whatever in the natural flow of the current. Suppose the one hundred and thirty millions of dollars which are collected in October and November in New York City should be locked up; suppose this practice should prevail in every city, village, and town in the United States. The disastrous consequences to business would be beyond calculation. There can be no question as to the safety of these deposits. If there was the Government would have no right to make any at all. Under our national banking system failures are few in proportion to the number of banks and the amount of deposits. It is possible always to secure the Government, and it is a remarkable fact that the few banks which have failed have paid an average of 78 per cent to all classes of their creditors; but, with the rigid examinations now in force and the penalties which are provided for neglect or mismanagement, it is almost impossible for a bank to fail. The adoption of the practice by the Government, which prevails in the fiscal transaction of every city, village, and township, would at once give a measure of relief by preventing arbitrary contraction, bad at all times, and in periods of financial stringency periling the whole fabric of credit.

The currency of other countries are bank notes and gold and silver coin, but we have one thousand five hundred million dollars of gold certificates, five hundred million dollars of silver certificates, three hundred and fifty million dollars of greenbacks, and five hundred million dollars of bank notes secured deposit of Government bonds with the Government. These silver certificates are a reminder of the crises and crazes through which we have passed, of the fallacies of flat money and fluctuating silver as a standard of value, which nearly captured the country in the frenzied efforts to make it so. It is safe to say that with a scientific system of currency circulation we never would have had the flat money and silver delusions which came near wrecking our industries and destroying our prosperity.

We are the only one of the highly organized financial and industrial countries which has a currency absolutely inelastic; a currency which responds in no way to the requirements of business or to the needs of the people. Our interest rates fluctuate from 1 per cent to 125 per cent per annum, but the volume of our currency never changes. In England, France, Germany, Scotland, and Canada the volume of currency contracts or expands automatically according to the needs of business, while interest rates never fluctuate more than 2 or 3 per cent.

The German banks have a currency based upon assets, which, up to one hundred and thirty-five millions, are untaxed, and beyond that subject to a tax of 5 per cent. During most of the year the amount issued is less than the untaxed limit, and it is rare that it exceeds it. If it does it is only for an emergency which may last a week or less. There is no effort on the part of the bank to put the currency out or call it in, but it goes out or is redeemed as business requires. The same is true with France, where the currency is not taxed to the authorized limit of one thousand four hundred millions of dollars, and the amount issued has never reached anywhere near this limit. The volume of it contracts or expands automatically according to the requirements of the people. In Canada the banks are authorized to issue a credit currency based upon their assets to 100 per cent of their capital. This currency is taxed less than 1 per cent for the purpose of furnishing a guaranty fund for banks which may The amount of notes outstanding has never been equal to the limit authorized. In the fall conditions exist the same as with us. Then there is a marked increase in the amounts paid out by the banks. When the emergency is over and the demand ceases the notes return to the banks for redemption and the circulation is decreased by that amount. Under these systems the average life of the notes of France and Germany is about ten days; of Scotland, eighteen days; of the Canadian banks, thirty days, while the notes of our national-banking system remain out on an average of seven hundred and thirty days or two years. The limited time that the notes remain out in countries which have a scientific system of banking indicates its immediate response to the needs of the community.

The fact that our currency remains out until the paper is used up shows that it does not respond at all to the fluctuating demands of our business. In all great manufacturing and producing countries the conditions are practically the same, only differing in degree. On account of the extent of our territory, the volume and variety of our products, and the tremendous volume of our internal commerce, the demand fluctuates much more widely than in these older countries. Commencing with the cotton crop in the South and continuing with wheat and corn in the West and Northwest, farmers require currency with which to pay their help and conduct their harvesting operations. This demand is estimated at anywhere between one hundred and fifty and two hundred millions of The local bank has a part of its reserve with its reserve agents in reserve cities, and they have part of their reserve in the central reserve cities of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis. The demand for the currency made by the farmer at his local institution goes to these reserve banks and then to the reserve cities of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis. The demand must be responded to immediately, and this vast sum of currency is taken out of these centers and shipped bodily for distribution all over the country. As it comes out of the reserve of lawful money it results in the contraction of credits to four times the amount called for, which in no case will be less than six hundred millions and which often reaches eight hundred millions of dollars.

No wonder when this contraction of eight hundred millions of credit takes place and demand loans are called in and accommodations refused that money rises by leaps and bounds to 10. 20, 50, and 100 per cent a year. The usurer has his opportunity, the bank which is run for speculative purposes reaps its harvest, business contracts, disasters come, houses which require credit and are entitled to it can not secure loans, the wheels of industry slacken, the worker's time is reduced, and the effects reach every home, from the banker to the merchant, from the merchant to the manufacturer, and from the manufacturer to the farmer and the artisan.

When the crop harvest is over and the farmer receives his money he deposits it in the country bank and the reverse process is gone through. It is returned to the reserve cities first and then to the central reserve cities of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis. In the effort to put out this redundancy, interest rates go down to 1 and 2 per cent, there is a carnival of speculation and a subsequent harvest of disasters and distrust.

This has occurred year after year since the civil war. It increases with the growth of business. It is the incident, not the accident, of our banking system, but politics, ancient and modern, and century-old prejudices, accentuated by demagogues and doctrinaires, have prevented any remedies.

The percentage of contraction and expansion in Scotland and Ireland would, if applied to our currency, be $90,000,000, and in Canada, so applied, would be $165,000,000 yearly—quite sufficient for our needs. We are out of competition for leadership in the world's markets and controllership of the world's financial transactions. The old world will be fearless of the advance in our material interests so long as there is no corresponding progress and development in our financial system and tools of trade and commerce.

The recommendations from the committee of the Associated Bankers of the United States and from the Chamber of Commerce of New York are substantially the same, and are as follows:

First. Any national bank having been actively doing business for one year and having a surplus fund equal to 20 per cent of its capital shall have authority to issue credit notes as follows, subject to the rules and regulations to be determined by the Comptroller of the Currency:

(a) An amount equal to 40 per cent of its bond-secured circulation, but not to exceed 25 per cent of its capital, subject to a tax at the rate of 2½ per cent per annum upon the average amount outstanding. Provided, That if at any time in the future the present proportion of the total outstanding unmatured United States bonds to the total capitalization of all going national banks shall diminish, then the authorized issue of credit notes shall be increased to a correspondingly greater percentage of its bond-secured notes.

(b) A further amount equal to 12½ per cent of its capital, subject to a tax at the rate of 5 per cent per annum upon the average amount outstanding in excess of the amount first mentioned.

The total of credit notes and bond-secured notes shall not exceed the capital.

Second. The same reserves shall be carried against credit notes as are required by law to be carried against deposits.

Third. The taxes provided upon credit notes shall be paid in gold to the Treasurer of the United States, and shall constitute a guaranty fund for the redemption of notes of failed banks, and for the payment of the expenses of printing and the cost of redemption. In order that the guaranty fund may be ample from the beginning, any bank making application to take out credit notes for issue shall deposit with the Treasurer of the United States in gold an amount equal to 5 per cent thereof. The unused portion of this initial payment shall be an asset of the contributing banks, respectively, and shall be refunded from time to time when this may be done without reducing the guaranty fund below an amount equal to 5 per cent of the credit notes taken out.

Fourth. The Comptroller of the Currency shall designate numerous redemption cities conveniently located in the various parts of the country. Through the agency of the banks in such cities adequate facilities shall be provided for active daily redemption of credit notes.

Fifth. The provision of existing law limiting the retirement of bond-secured notes to $3,000,000 per month shall be repealed.

Sixth. All public moneys above a reasonable working balance, from whatever source derived, shall be currently deposited from day to day in national banks without requiring collateral security or special guaranty therefor, but in no case shall the balance carried with any bank exceed 50 per cent of the capital thereof. All banks receiving such public moneys on deposit shall pay into the United States Treasury interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

It is well to consider what are the claims to consideration by Congress of the gentlemen who ask this legislation—what do they represent, and what is their expert knowledge? They are the Chamber of Commerce of New York and associated bankers of the country.

The Chamber of Commerce is the oldest commercial organization in the United States. For more than a century it has worked for the best interests of our internal and foreign commerce. It includes in its membership leaders in every department of commercial and industrial activity. Their names are synonymous with banking, mercantile, and manufacturing probity and success in our own country and abroad. Citizens from every State in the Union are in its councils and participate in its deliberations.

The crisis became so acute and the peril so great last year, with money ruling over 100 per cent, that the New York Chamber of Commerce was moved as rarely ever before to consider the causes of the trouble and their remedies. After an inquiry covering the whole field of financial legislation in the United States and currency conditions in Europe and Canada, the Chamber of Commerce came unanimously to the conclusions substantially embodied in the recommendations which I have stated. The efficiency, the success, and the solvency of our national banks demonstrate the ability and honesty of those who manage them, and a committee representing these six hundred and odd institutions came practically unanimously to the same conclusions. It is rare, from so many independent and able thinkers and practical men, to find such unanimity. It is safe to say that these two bodies voice the best judgment and the highest and most intelligent expression of the people's thought on this grave subject.

Though the banks can now issue currency secured by Government bonds in the Treasury to the full amount of their capital. only 62 per cent of that amount has been issued. The reason is plain, that owing to the price of Government bonds and the expenses incident to the present system currency is not as profitable to many of the banks as other business which they are permitted to do. Bankers and bank directors do not differ from farmers or manufacturers or merchants in the conduct of their affairs. They do not feel authorized to employ the money of their stockholders or risk the cash of their depositors in any enterprise which does not make a profit. Experience has demonstrated that this bond-secured currency, instead of being responsive to commercial needs, fluctuates according to the price of United States bonds in the market. The holdings of the banks represent so large an amount of the national debt that they keep the price of the bonds at present figures, and it would be disturbing to the stability of business and credit if there was a radical change, which would permit or compel the throwing of this volume of Government obligations on the mar-But the proposal of these committees conserves existing conditions and only adds privileges and powers which will enable the banks-in a word, entice banks-to issue additional currency within the limits of the present law, which will be sufficiently elastic to prevent annual perils due to the present unscientific system.

It is conceded that the present currency secured by Government bonds is absolutely and uncontrovertibly safe. The question arises whether credit currency can be equally safe. can not idly dismiss the experience of nearly one hundred years and the lessons it teaches. That experience has demonstrated that upon the lines of these recommendations credit currency is perfectly safe, that it has never failed either to meet commercial demands or to be redeemed at its face value. Scotland, Ireland, Germany, France, and Canada are living wit-We can recall examples from the past in our country. The Suffolk system lasted for about forty years. Through it all banks in New England issued credit currency under a plan by which the Suffolk Bank, of Boston, was the redemption agency. The amount of currency issued by these banks nucruated widely, according to the monthly needs of the communities where they were situated, but it never reached one-half the amount authorized by law, thus showing that no inflation is possible, because it does not pay, and that issues in this elastic system will go out or come back according to the conditions of commerce.

The State bank of Indiana was a brilliant example in the same direction, and the safety fund banks in New York would have offered no exception, except that the tax intended by its originators to be a safety fund for currency alone was held by the chancellor to apply to all obligations of the banks. It has been estimated that if the currency of the banks which have failed in the forty years of the national banking system had not been secured by Government bonds, but the bill holders were forced to take their chances with other creditors in the general assets of the bank, the loss would have been about five millions of dollars. It has also been estimated in regard to the safety of this credit currency that the tax upon the circulation during the same period, of 1 per cent up to 1900, and one-half of 1 per cent since, if applied as a safety fund, would have yielded nearly ninety millions of dollars with which to meet this five millions of loss. In addition to this guaranty fund nearly twenty times greater than demanded for safety, upon the calculation of averages by which life insurance lives, there is also provided a reserve of 25 per cent in lawful money.

The fact that a tax of 24 per cent upon the first 25 per cent and 5 per cent upon the balance would make the credit currency unprofitable, except in times of extreme stringency and high rates of interest, would force the return of these notes for redemption as rapidly as the profitable need for their use ceased. Under the present system of bond-secured notes re-demption is very slow, because, in the first place, there is a limit allowing only three millions a month to be redeemed, and because of transportation and other expenses; but the new system provides that there shall be numerous redemption agencies with adequate facilities for the active daily redemption of credit notes, that there shall be no expense for transportation to the shipper, and that the redemption agencies shall never be more than twenty-four hours from the issuing bank. All these are elements which insure elasticity by the speed, ease, and inexpensiveness of issue and redemption.

A brief review of the progress of the country during the forty years of our present system presents an illuminating contrast country's growth, expansion, and necessities and between our the ironclad limitations of the system upon which our business depends. Happily for our business and the possibility of conducting it under present conditions, 95 per cent of the vast transactions of trade and production are carried on by checks. are almost the sole medium in commercial centers. They duplicate and reduplicate in manifold forms the deposits upon which they are drawn. There is no difference in a bank's obligation to its depositor or to its note holder, who equally rely upon the credit of the bank, its management, and its 25 per cent reserve. except that the note holder is better off than the depositor, because he will have a guaranty fund in the hands of the Government which absolutely secures his safety.

The greater the commerce internal and external, the greater the productiveness of the farms and mines, the greater the output of the factories, and the larger the demands upon transportation facilities by rail and water, the more need there is for a sound and scientific financial system upon which these factors of wealth, prosperity, development, and employment depend. It can almost be said that the advance of the country has been due to the ingenuity of its bankers and business men, by their checks, drafts, and clearing-house certificates, in spite of Government hoarded money and inelastic currency. Since 1870 the value of farm properties has increased from nine thousand millions to twenty-seven thousand millions of dollars, and the number of people engaged in agriculture from six millions to nearly twelve millions. Since 1870 the value of farm products has grown from two thousand millions to seven thousand millions of dollars. From 1870 our railroad mileage has increased from fifty-three thousand to two hundred and twenty-three thousand, or, with double tracks and sidings, to about three hundred and fifteen thousand miles.

Our population has increased from thirty-one and a half millions in 1860 to eighty-five millions in 1906. From the production in 1860 of 821,000 tons of iron, the basis of most manufactures, our iron production has grown to 25,000,000 tons, or nearly one-half of the world's output, and we have made a proportionate advance in steel. From about 50,000,000 of tons of coal in 1860 the production has grown to 425,000,000 in 1906. In petroleum and copper productiveness has been equally marvelous. Petroleum came upon the market at the commencement of the civil war with a limited demand, while now there is an output of 134,000,000 barrels per year; and copper has increased from an inappreciable amount in 1860 to over 420,000 tons in 1906. Our mineral products have advanced from not over $250,000,000 in value in 1870 to $1,400,000,000 in 1906.

We furnish 80 per cent of the world's supply of cotton, and incident to our own use of this and other materials our manufacturing interests have developed from 140,000 manufactories of various kinds in 1860, to over 600,000 in 1906; from 1,311,000 employees to over 6,000,000; the capital in these industries has increased from a thousand millions to fourteen thousand millions, and the value of the product of our manufactories from two thousand millions to seventeen thousand millions of dollars. For forty years we were the debtor nation in imports over exports, but since 1900 we are the creditor nation to the extent of between five and six hundred millions a year, and our foreign commerce has grown from fifteen hundred millions in 1880 to three thousand millions in 1906. Bank clearings have more than trebled, and have reached the astounding figure of about one hundred and forty-five thousand millions. Our deposits in the savings banks have grown since 1880 from eight hundred to over three thousand millions of dollars, and the depositors from two millions three hundred thousand to eight millions.

Mr. President, here is an exhibit unequaled in the ancient, medieval, or modern world in everything which makes a nation great, prosperons, and powerful. This advance is without a parallel, and yet, for two months in every year it is retarded, partially paralyzed, and put in peril. Scientific methods in every department have increased beyond calculation. They have added immeasurably to the productiveness of farms and mines, to the capacity of manufactories, and the facilities of our railroads and steamships. A compromise, makeshift, and unscientific system of finance retards our development at home and our equality abroad. The time has been ripe for years for reform, and the remedy should come as quickly and completely as is the testimony of its needs and the evidence of the ways and means for its accomplishment.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. PROCTOR. I believe the pending amendment is on page 41, the addition of $1,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that we take up the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] and pass

Mr. PROCTOR. There will be no objection to that. This is a committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Before it is read I will say that by agreement the amendment will terminate with the word "Congress, in line 5. An agreement has been reached among those who have the matter in charge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state where the amendment is to be inserted in the last print of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. After line 10, on page 43; but I do not intend to disturb the manner of proceeding suggested by the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senate committee amendment— Mr. FULTON. What has been done with this amendment? Mr. FULTON. What has been done with th Mr. LODGE. It is coming up in a moment.

The Secretary. On page 43, after line 10, insert:

Provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the proponent of the amendment proposes to leave off the latter part, leaving the amendment to terminate with the word "Congress."

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not going to urge any objection to the amendment, but I simply want to say that it is a good deal like shutting the stable door after the horse has been stolen. I doubt if the Forestry Service would have the audacity to attempt to set apart any more lands in the States mentioned in the amendment than it has already done. The amendment will not give the people of the States which have been invaded in this way the relief they ought to have, but, as the other Senators are satisfied, I will not make any further objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Next in order is the committee amendment to insert "one million," in line 5, on page 41, of the reprint. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment

The Secretary. On page 41, line 5, after the words "necessary expenses," insert "one million."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. In line 18, page 41, before the words "nine hundred," I move to insert "one million;" so as to read "$1,-900,000

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 42 the total should be $2,400,000.

Mr. KEAN. Page 43 of the reprint. Mr. LODGE. Page 43 of the reprint.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 43, line 11, change the total so as to read "$2,400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 68, line 16, of the reprint, make the total "$8,802,690."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. On page 74, at the close of the bill, make the total "$9,557,690."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. The committee has nothing further to pre-

Mr. KITTREDGE. On behalf of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver], who is unavoidably detained, I present an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota, on behalf of the Senator from Iowa, proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 62, line 16, after the words "care taker," strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "eight hundred and forty;" so as to read "care taker, $840."

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KITTREDGE. The total, in line 23, should be changed so as to read "$31,340."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is the bill open to amendment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. On page 18, line 12, of the new print, after the word "act" and before the semicolon, insert:

And the date of such inspection and packing or canning.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As to this amendment, I have been informed and understand pretty generally that there is no objection, and therefore I shall not take any time at all upon the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 27, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

Insert:

That the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907," approved June 30, 1906, be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out, on page 679, chapter 3913, of the session laws of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, the following words:

"That there is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000,000, for the expenses of the inspection of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the meat and meat food products thereof which enter into interstate or foreign commerce, and for all expenses necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act relating to meat inspection, including rent and employment of labor in Washington and elsewhere for each year," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

of this act relating to meat inspection, including rent and employment of labor in Washington and elsewhere for each year," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to prescribe and fix reasonable fees for the inspection and examination of all cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and meat and meat food products thereof, maintained in accordance with the provisions hereof, which fees shall be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at a rate which as nearly as possible will serve only to defray the cost of said inspection and examination; and the said fees shall be uniform throughout the United States, and shall be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be deposited in the Treasury; and the schedule of such fees, together with the rules and requirements relating to the collection thereof, shall be set forth in the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. The fund thereby created shall be subject to the requisition of the Secretary of Agriculture, as if appropriated by Congress, for the necessary expenses of carrying out the provisions of this act, and shall continue permanently available until used. That this section shall take effect and be in force from and after June 30, 1907; and that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to in any way affect the appropriation of $3,000,000 for the inspection of cattle, sheep, swine, and goats, and the meat and meat food products thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I yield.
Mr. WARREN. I wish to make a point of order against the amendment, but I do not desire to take the Senator from Indi-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I have yielded to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. But I wish to make the point of order and to withhold it until the Senator from Indiana can be heard.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I had the floor, and I yielded to the Senator for the purpose of enabling him to give notice that he would make the point of order. I expected it. I will say to the Senator that if he had made the point of order I would have asked him to withhold it until I could submit some remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has the

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, as the memorable fight over the meat bill drew to its close last session I was one of those who advocated as earnestly as I advocated the bill itself that the Senate should agree to the conference report which retained all the bill excepting two points-one the date on the cans, to which we have agreed this morning, and the other placing the cost of inspection on the packers. This was done to save the bill itself. We were confronted with the alternative of sacrificing these two features or else seeing the whole meat inspection bill killed.

So in the course of some brief remarks that I submitted at that time, which will be found in the RECORD, I said to those from another place who were sitting here watching, that, at the earliest opportunity, the contest for the restoration of those two points would be renewed, and since then publicly in many parts of the country I have said the same thing. beginning of this session I served notice of an intention to offer the two amendments, one of which has been generally concurred in since and has been agreed to this morning and the second of which I have risen to address the Senate briefly upon.

Mr. President, during the whole course of this argument in both Houses and during the whole controversy in the public press I have never yet seen one valid reason why it was that the packers who were to profit by this Government inspection should not pay the cost of that inspection. I have never seen one, I will not say convincing but even tolerable, reason why it is that we should deliberately put our hands into the Treasury of the United States and take out $3,000,000 every year and practically pay it to the Beef Trust.

SHALL THE PEOPLE OR THE PACKERS PAY COST OF INSPECTION?

This question now is, "Shall we continue to make the people pay for the inspection of the packers' products or shall we change that and now make the packers, instead of the people, pay for that inspection?" Of course the easy-I had almost said the cheap-argument was almost instantly advanced that the trust would not pay this cost, but that it would take this cost of inspection off of the cattle raiser on the one hand and off of the consumer on the other hand. I remember that my very much admired and eloquent friend from Montana [Mr. Carter], when making this point, was interrupted by myself when he was pointing out how this would be really a source of great revenue to the Beef Trust, which, of course, we all of us bitterly dislike; and I asked him whether or not the packers constituted an eleemosynary institution and whether he had ever heard of their being against any device by which they might swell their profits. Of course my friend said he had not. That, Mr. President, was a sufficient thing to reveal the unsoundness of the proposition that really the packers would not pay, but that the cattle grower and the consumer would pay. If by this device the packers not only could put the charge for inspection on others, but could actually swell their own profits by charging many times the cost of inspection, the packers would welcome the enactment of this provision into law instead of resisting it.

Therefore, Mr. President, it occurred to me as quite singular that from the very beginning the chief and only effective resistance to the provision requiring the packers to pay the cost of the inspection which their own fault had caused should be the packers themselves.

Mr. President, this is not a statement made without authority. I said the other day, in addressing the Senate upon the great question of the nation's forest policy, that I should try to make no statement in the Senate that could not be substantiated by testimony. I have here the evidence that the packers would pay the cost of inspection if we put it on them. The question is whether or not the packers-whether or not the Beef Trustwould bear the cost; and in using the term "trust," I do not use it in the demagogic sense. I have no dislike for it as a trust. I have no doubt the great organizations called "trusts" are inevitable and grow out of correct economic principles. What I object to is their wrongs.

Now, Mr. President, it is agreed on all hands that if this disliked Beef Trust does pay this cost, then we ought to put the cost on them; and the only objection is that in reality the Beef Trust does not pay the cost but that the cattleman, the poor fellow out in the West with his uncounted herds and his swollen millions, pays it.

WHAT THE PACKERS' REPRESENTATIVE SAID BEFORE THE HOUSE COM-MITTEE.

Before the House Committee on Agriculture the most important witness who appeared was Mr. Wilson, the avowed representative of the Chicago packers. He did not conceal his character. He very frankly said: "I am here to represent the packers," and he was complimented in that committee for the ability with which he presented their cause and his entire frankness, which in his case, as always in all cases, wins the confidence and the esteem of men. He said before that committee the following, and I desire to have the attention of Senators:

The next paragraph is one-

This is Mr. Wilson, the representative of the packers, talk-

The next paragraph is one we do object to, and we object to it very strenuously, and that is the fixing of the expense of this inspection upon the packers.

After that no person can be heard to say here that it is not the packers who are making the fight against this amendment. This is their own authorized representative, the ablest man they could find in their entire employ. Mr. Wilson goes on:

The expense at present is borne by the Government. I do not be-lieve there is another health measure on the statute books where it is different. This would be, to our notion, and as far as we are aware, unprecedented, and therefore unfair.

I will show in a minute that it is not unprecedented:

We are standing to-day

That is to say, "we, the packers"-

We are standing to-day all the post-mortem condemnations at an expense of in the vicinity of a million dollars a year on these.

Listen, Mr. President:

We stand all that expense

That is the packers talking.

The farmer, the stock raiser, the stock grower, nor the shipper do not stand any of that. The cattle come in and we buy them and pay for healthy animals. The hogs come in there and we buy them for a product that is fit for food, and it is taken into our houses, and if it is condemned, we lose it, and the aggregate of that loss is in the vicinity of a million dollars a year.

Mr. Brooks. For each plant?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir; covering the plants that I represent.

So his authority is fastened in what I read to the Senate.

The producer and the consumer get the benefit of that. The consumer is protected in getting wholesome meat, and the producer has the advantage of the inspection in creating foreign markets, and so forth, for his products, and he has no expense: and it hardly would seem reasonable to us that we should have to stand, in addition to the cost of the condemned animals, the expense of the inspection.

He testifies further, because he was particularly repetitious on this point. Mr. Wilson spoke of the German tariff and then, going on, he said:

That was not on the general inspection. That was on a microscopic inspection for trichina, and in an emergency like that one packer might be glad during that period, in order to get the inspection, if it could not be gotten in any other way, to stand the expense; but I am sure there are no packers who would feel like paying this inspection fee.

That is the representative of the packers talking-

Mr. SCOTT

This is Mr. Scott, of Kansas, the member of the Agricultural Committee-

The general belief is, I think, that the packers whom you represent here sufficiently control the cattle market and the beef market so as to make it easy for them to recoup, if they desire to do so, any additional expense that might be put upon them by this inspection. Would you consider that there would be any doubt about your ability to do that?

Now, Mr. President, any person who is going to oppose this amendment must do so in the face of that statement made by the packers themselves formally appearing before a committee of Congress. Here is what Mr. Wilson replied:

Why, yes; I am sure there is very great doubt about the ability to do that; I think it is not possible for the packers to do so.

It is not necessary perhaps to read anything further. is sufficient, because I wish to be brief. I have a mass of testimony like that. Senators who resist the putting of the cost of inspection upon the packers can do so on whatever ground they please; but, after that, they must not insist that the packers do not pay the cost of inspection and that it will be put upon somebody else, because the accredited representative of the packers appearing before the House committee upon this particular point said that the packers would have to pay it, and that they objected to it, and he gave the reasons why the packers think

WHY DO THE PACKERS OBJECT IF THEY DON'T PAY THE COST?

Mr. President, there is another reason, a reason that would be absolutely conclusive in trying a case before a jury or in presenting the facts in a case in equity before a judge. The motives of men are really the key to all their conduct. If the packers do not pay the cost of inspection, if not only not paying the cost of inspection they can create a device to make larger profits for themselves out of the cattlemen on the one hand and the consumer on the other, then, why is it that the packers are the men who from the first have resisted this provision?

If the Beef Trust is not hurt, what is the motive for its opposition? If, as has been argued and must be, the Beef Trust not only is not hurt, but is actually benefited, because it gets back not only the cost of inspection, but a great deal more, then why have these gentlemen, whom nobody ever yet heard were bright and shining examples of unselfishness, from the start most bit-terly resisted this? That they have done so can not be denied in the face of the statement of their representative made formally before the House committee.

ABSURDITY OF CONTENTION THAT PACKERS WILL PUT COST ON OTHERS.

But, Mr. President, if this direct testimony of the packers' representative himself, that it would be they and not the people who would pay the cost, was not before us; if the convincing argument that they would have no motive for resisting the cost if it did not come out of their pockets were not before us; there is another simple, common-sense argument that ought to be conclusive to the mind of any thinking man. Doctor Melvin testified before the House committee that the cost of inspection was absurdly low, much lower than we thought last year, from 2½ cents per head up to 5 cents a head. Is it within the limits of anybody's credulity that 5 cents can be so distributed over a 1,600-pound steer by the Beef Trust that buys it from the cattleman that the Beef Trust can say to the cattleman, "I will reduce the price on your steer so much of a fraction of a pound; I will scatter 2½ or 5 cents over 1,600 pounds of beef and pay you that much less?" It is not a practicable proposition. It is not business. It is not possible, and it is not true. The same thing is true of a hog weighing 400 pounds and a sheep weighing less

So, Mr. President, it is not possible that this comparatively slight cost should be taken out of the cattlemen. But, suppose it were—suppose we concede that for the sake of argument.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 13566) to amend sections 6 and 12 of the currency act approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

SUPPOSE THE CATTLE KINGS PAY.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to leave on record no ground either of fact or reason for any opposition to this amendment on the ground that we are doing a wrong either to the packers or to the cattlemen. So let us assume, for the sake of argument-and for the sake of argument only, for it is not true as a matter of fact-that the great growers of cattle on the ranges would have to pay the cost; for, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Neison] said last year, with a vigor that amounted almost to bitterness, it was the range cattlemen who were resisting this, in conjunction with the Beef Trust. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that they do have to pay this miserable 2½ or 5 cents for the inspection of a steer, in order that the American people may not be fed tuberculosis and trichina beef and pork; is that a hardship on or an injustice to them?

Their profits are perfectly enormous, and I am glad of it. but is it wrong in justice and in policy, even if they have to pay this  $2\frac{1}{2}$  or 5 cents for inspecting a steer weighing 1,500 pounds, that they should do it? Even if the range cattlemen pay, why, as a matter of justice, should not the range cattlemen pay for the determination by the Government as to whether or not the cattle they are trying to sell to the American people are healthful or poisonous? Why should the people pay for finding out whether or not a cow or a steer from their herds has tuberculosis-an animal which will scatter the seeds of death throughout the country?

So, even if it be true, which the packers' representative says it is not, and which reason proves to be impossible, that this cost would go upon the cattlemen-there are only a few of them, comparatively speaking, because that industry, like any other industry, has been concentrated into the hands of a few great holders-why should they not pay for the necessity of finding out whether the cattle they send to the markets of the country are fit for food or agents of death? Why should the people pay for that? Will the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who gives notice of his point of order, answer that?

No! Mr. President, we have seen that the Beef Trust would pay it. The Trust's representative says so. We have seen that the Beef Trust would pay it, because the Trust is the chief force resisting it. We see that the Beef Trust does pay it, because it is unthinkable that this small sum can be scattered over the hundreds of pounds of a steer or hog. But even if the Trust does not pay and the cattlemen do pay, still as a matter of justice why should they not pay instead of the great body of the people?

NON-MEAT EATERS AS WELL AS MEAT-EATERS NOW PAY

Out of whose pockets, Mr. President, do these $3,000,000 this year and $5,000,000 next year come? Out of the pockets of our entire 90,000,000, does it not? But not all of our 90,000,000 eat meat. A great body of them eat no meat at all, and yet to protect the packers or the cattlemen you compel a great body of the people who eat no meat at all and are not bit interested in this matter to pay the taxes out of their pockets instead of compelling the packers or the cattlemen to pay the cost out of their pockets.

The people who eat no meat are not even interested or affected. The cattlemen and the Beef Trust are both interested and affected. Yet you take the $3,000,000 proportionately out of the pockets of people who eat no meat as well as out of the pockets of people who do eat meat, in order to let your hand rest lightly upon those impecunious organizations known as the "Beef Trust" and the "Cattle Growers' Association.'

Can any Senator justify in reason or conscience such legislation as that? If in this Senate Chamber of ninety men ten of us eat no meat and the rest do, is there any reason for the protection of one that the ten who eat none should help to pay the taxes that that one ought to pay, and the payment of which benefits him and him only?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I cooperated with the Senator from Indiana last session to secure the adoption of an amendment along the line he is now arguing. I have been out of the Chamber from necessity, attending to other business. I understood the Senator a moment ago to say that notice was given that a point of order would be made against his amendment. Am I correct?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

THIS FIGHT WILL GO ON.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. If he is to-day defeated in his contention by a point of order, which I apprehend will lie against the amendment, I trust he will take up this matter at an early day of the next session and let us fight this thing to a finish and see whether the American people are going to be taxed for this matter, which belongs, in my judgment, to the packers and to the producers of beef and pork, and let us ascertain how the Congress stands on that question after proper debate and due consideration. I trust the Senator will do that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very thankful to the Senator, and I will say to him I shall adopt his suggestion if it be true that this amendment meets an untoward fate. I shall hope, in view of the great public exigency and in view of the history of this law, that the Chair will see fit to submit the point of order to the Senate, so that the Senate may face it. I will say to the Senator that I will accept his suggestion, and I now serve notice on this floor that at the earliest day of the next session this fight will be renewed-renewed then and renewed hereafter until the American people themselves can pass upon this question. I am very much obliged to the Senator, indeed, for calling my atten-

Now, in this connection, having demonstrated as a matter of testimony as well as a matter of reason—the accuracy of which testimony no man can deny and the soundness of which reason can not be confuted here-I will make a test of the sincerity of those who think that the cost may actually be put upon the range cattlemen of the West. It is said that it will be put upon them by charging off of the beef the amount of inspection. I remember the evolution of that explanation. When the bill was first proposed they said that the Beef Trust will put this charge off on the cattle grower and the poor farmer and the consumer.

OFFER TO ACCEPT AMENDMENT.
But the moment it was pointed out to them that it would be rather difficult to distribute from 2½ to 5 cents over the hundreds of pounds of a steer or hog, they saw the absurdity of that argument, and then this new argument was advanced-and it is the argument we are confronted with to-day—that on every carload of cattle shipped to the packers they would take off in their charges, in their bill in payment for the cattle, various items, among which would be for cost of inspection so much, and in that way they would get that off of the cattle growers.

Now, if any person advancing that argument is sincere, if it is not true, as is generally believed, that there is an understanding between the packers on the one hand and the great cattle growers on the other, I put them to this test: Let them pro-pose an amendment to this amendment forbidding the packers from charging off the cost of inspection, and I will immediately agree to it. If that challenge is not accepted the sincerity of the whole contention that the packers would not pay this cost falls to the ground.

Mr. President, the same is true with the consumer, but there is another reason. The time was, of course, when these great organizations of capital raised or lowered prices with impunity.

They took advantage of every excuse for squeezing an extra cent out of the pockets of the people. But that time has passed, because they have found that any such ruthless and inexcusable robbery as that is instantly met by the proposition of remedial legislation, and that such a battle as that does not stop until they are confronted with laws on the Republic's statute books which remedy that evil.

I do not think in the present temper of the public mind you are going to find the Beef Trust availing itself of the opportunity, even if it had it, which it has not, of raising the price of beef or lowering the price of beef on this particular account. As I shall show you in a moment, bitterly as they resisted this law, now that it is in effect they would not have it repealed for millions of dollars.

THE LAW AN ADVERTISEMENT WORTH MILLIONS TO THE PACKERS.

Why, Mr. President, would they not? The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor], the chairman of this committee, was the first man to point out why the packers when the law was actually on the statute book would be its most earnest supporters, and his prophecy has come true. Has anybody heard of any packer questioning the constitutionality of this law in the courts, this law which great constitutional lawyers declare was unconstitutional? Has there been another attempt, like there was in Kansas City over the first meat-inspection law in this country, to overturn this law? Does any Senator think that that is on account of any delicacy in the hearts of the packers or any forbearance toward the Government of the United States? Why are they not opposed to the law, now that we have put the cost of inspection on the people? Because the most beneficial thing that ever happened to them after they were put to the inconvenience of cleaning their plants, was the advertisement which this law gives them. That was pointed out at the beginning of this fight by the Senator from Vermont last session.

The Government of the United States, in protecting millions of American people who eat meat from the death that was being spread broadcast by the packers, afforded the packers an advertisement worth not figuratively, but literally, millions of dollars every year. To-day every citizen of the United States knows when he buys any beef or when he buys a can of meat food products that it has been passed upon by the experts of the National Government. That is so recognized by the packers, and they have put an advertisement like this [exhibiting] in all the widely circulated periodicals of the country. I want to read it. It is so large that the entire Senate can see it. I am reading, Senators, from an advertisement in one of the most widely circulated periodicals in America:

"U. S. Inspected

Under the Act of Congress of June 30, 1906."

S PO 1906

THESE are the words that must be attached to every article of meat and meat food products offered for sale in interstate and foreign commerce. This is the law of the United States. Its purpose is to assure the public that only sound and wholesome meat and meat food products may be offered for sale.

It is a wise law. Its enforcement must be universal and uniform. The public is greatly interested in this law and will closely watch its workings and its effects.

watch its workings and its effects.

You are familiar with the metallic tap-tap of the machinist when he inspects the wheels of the railway coach; you are familiar with the methods employed in the inspection of gas meters, street lamps, street car indicators, telephones, and many other forms of commercial and public activity. We should like to make familiar to you just what "U. S. Inspected and Passed" means as applied to Swift & Company, who supply a large proportion of the meats and meat food products consumed in America.

There is only one absolutely satisfactory method by which you can obtain this familiarity, and that is by seeing the law put to the daily test.

Swift & Company cordially invite spectors, carrying out the provisions of the act of Congress of June 30, 1906.

Any person who is unable to visit one of the Swift packing plants, where we dress and prepare for market Beef, Mutton, Pork, Veal, Poultry, Hams, Bacon, Lard, Sausage, and other meat food products, will be cordially received at any of the Swift distributing houses—we have them in nearly every city in the United States and Great Britain—where U.S. Government Inspection will be explained and demonstrated. You, as a user of meats, lard, and other food supplies, are vitally interested in the products prepared by Swift & Company. We believe that you will, when you see how effectively we are carrying out the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, always mentally associate "U. S. Inspected" and the mame of "Swift" with everything that is good, wholesome and appetizing in meat and meat food products. Our packing plants are always open to the public. No passes are required and no introduction is needed to secure admission. Polite attendants, who will cheerfully answer questions and give information, will be found in every department. We sincerely wish you to know all about Government inspection—wish you to know just what it means to you as a consumer—and the best way to know is to see it in operation in one of Swift & Company's establishments.

SWIFT & COMPANY, U. S. A. By Louis F. Swift. President.

Mr. President, that is one advertisement like a great many. and it is not necessary, of course, for me to read more, though I have a large number of them here which the various companies which constitute this meat trust have scattered broadcast over the country; in other words-and I am sorry that it is lunch hour, for every Senator before he votes upon this ought to hear and consider these statements—the United States Government has given to the Beef Trust of this country an advertisement which it recognizes as being worth millions of dollars a year to them.

THIS ADVERTISEMENT NOW PAID FOR BY THE PEOPLE.

We not only give it this advertisement, but we pay it $3,000,000 of the people's money in addition. Can any Senator justify that? You could not purchase with any sum of money an advertisement such as we have afforded the trust, and a sample of which I have just read to the Senate. It absolutely could not be purchased by any financial resources; but we, the representatives of the people, give it to the packers, and present them, in addition, with $3,000,000 of the people's money for their own purposes.

I have heard within the last three or four days some very impassioned declarations about the necessity for economy. do not want to appropriate the people's money, it seems, for great public uses; but has anybody heard anyone who was preaching economy insist upon practicing it by making the packers pay the cost of inspection instead of making the people pay the cost of inspection?

Mr. President, what was the philosophy back of this idea of permanent appropriations for this inspection by the Government instead of putting it all on the packers? The real reason was the same reason that made the packers resist the increase of appropriations made last year. Senators must remember that when the agricultural appropriation bill was pending and we were appropriating only $750,000 a year for inspection, the packers resisted the increase of that appropriation because that sum of money, it was claimed, did not afford adequate inspec-tion. It afforded enough for their export trade, and so they had to send abroad their good meats, and they availed themselves of that opportunity of keeping at home and of selling to the American people bad meats which they could not and dared not sell abroad. So they resisted the increase of the appropria-

The first compromise was $1,000,000; the next compromise was $2,000,000, and finally we were told that they would agree that it should be made $3,000,000 if we would not put the cost on the packers. How generous! and how "economical!" Think of that !-$3,000,000 of the people's money to save the packers the cost of the Government's inspection, which the misdeeds of the packers themselves had caused.

But that was not and is not the worst. It was pointed out then that this great meat business would grow with the growth of the country; that this meat law would help its growth, and that, even if $3,000,000 were sufficient last year, it could not be sufficient in two or three years, and that we would find ourselves confronted with exactly the situation that we were confronted with last year, to wit, an inadequate appropriation for an expanding business, so that within two or three years the Government would not be able to supply an adequate inspection, although at that very time the Beef Trust would be able to advertise to the American people that there is adequate inspection.

Does any Senator here believe-and I see one or two who are familiar with the work of the Appropriations Committee-that when two or three or four years from now the Department is compelled, in justice to the American people, to ask for an additional appropriation for inspection-does not every Senator here know that that increased appropriation will be resisted upon the specious plea of "economy?" I can hear now some of the speeches that will be made here by some of our Senators, who will say, "Why, we are paying $3,000,000 a year already for this service, and that is enough; why increase it; let us be care ful how we spend the people's money. Let us be "economical." That is the speech that will be made. Well, why not be careful with the people's money now—why not be "economical" now; why not practice "economy" now—and put this whole cost on the Beef Trust, where it belongs?

We all know that the hardest thing possible is to get an appropriation increased for a service like that. I see the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] shakes his head. Does the Senator from Wyoming imagine that when, two or three years from now, the mighty growth of this tremendous industry will require not three, but five, millions, the Senate will not be alive with protesting Senators, who will say that in the interest of the people's pocketbook—in the interest of "economy"—we ought not to make an increased appropriation for inspection?

Very well! If that is true, and after you have thus impaired the inspection for which the law provides, you have introduced into that law an element of fraud. You have enabled the packers to say to the people, "Our meats are inspected; you have given them an advertisement that is unpurchasable in money, and yet you have refused to give enough money to enable the Government to properly inspect their meats.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to take the Senator's time, but since the Senator alluded to me, I will say that I hardly think the Senator's argument is good-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not expect the Senator to think it was good.

Mr. WARREN (continuing). That the Committee on Appropriations will not be able to meet all the calls that are made in view of the fact that we have gone during a two-year term of Congress from $1,000,000,000 to about $2,000,000,000, and that within a very few years.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah, Mr. President, I had not any doubt that the Senator from Wyoming would be willing to proclaim, as he has, that the Committee on Appropriations is able to take to its ample breast all the problems of the Government and solve them satisfactorily to the Senate and the country (or will it be to the satisfaction of the country?); but I call the Senator's attention to recent history in this very matter, and the Senator can correct me if I am wrong. Last year, when this law was proposed-which we heard very passionately denounced as the deathblow" to the American meat industry—we were appropriating each year $750,000. When we proposed to put this cost of inspection on the Beef Trust, I have read to you from the reports before the committee how the Beef Trust resisted it. Can the Senator from Wyoming tell the Senate and the country whether it is not true that we were met with three or four propositions, the first one of which was to raise that $750,000 to $1,000,000 and the second was to raise it to $2,000,000?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may have heard of that; but this is the first time I have heard of any objection whatever to the amount being $3,000,000.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I did hear it. I do not think there was anything very much going on that sooner or later I did not hear about in that now historic fight. It was said, "We will give you a million;" then it was said, "We will give you two millions;" and finally it was said, "Well, make it three millions." If the Senator did not hear that, then he was not as completely in the counsels of those for whom he spoke upon the floor last session as I would reasonably expect him to be. The $3,000,000 that was finally gotten was drawn like a strong and unspoiled tooth from the jaws.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will give us some reference where we will find that in the Record, or in print somewhere. I did not know it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no reference. We all know what occurred; we know how loath they were to increase it from one million to two, and from two to three millions. a matter of practical experience, does not every Senator know, does not the Senator from Wyoming know, that when, two or three years from now, the immense increase in this meat industry, of which I will speak in a moment, requires an appropriation in addition to the $3,000,000 a year, that it will be one of the most difficult things in the world to get?

Mr. WARREN. On the contrary, Mr. President, it will be cheerfully met, as every other increase has been.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that is true, why do you make it a permanent" appropriation? Why is it said in this bill that hereafter," etc.?

Mr. WARREN. Because you insisted upon it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not insist upon it. I have insisted upon the packers paying the cost of inspection from the start. Does the Senator say that the packers would not pay? There is the statement formally made before the House committee by the packers' admitted representative that they would pay, and that they do not want to pay, and an increased appropriation will be necessary because of the growth of the business

Last year I listened, not in alarm, but, on the contrary, with amusement, to the worn-out, the disgustingly moth-eaten argument that we were going to hurt this great business by the meat-inspection law. "Let us not agitate," they said, because to inspection law.

tell the truth will be to hurt unrighteous profits; but it appeared to me that to tell the truth could never injure righteous profits; that to tell the truth would be finally to put the business upon a foundation of absolute honesty, from which it would grow and expand with a vigor and healthfulness impossible to it when its foundations were fraud.

And that, Mr. President, is what has occurred. Instead of the business decreasing after the law went into operation, it steadily and rapidly increased. I will give you one illustration that shows this and that demonstrates that this increase was due to the advertisements which the law permitted to be placed upon every pound of steak and every can of meat food product. In January, 1907, breadstuffs declined in one month nearly $1,000,000, but they did not have "U. S. inspected and passed" upon them; while meat products increased in the month of January over two and a half million dollars because they did have—"U. S. inspected and passed" upon them. The U. S. inspected and passed" upon them. The reports-and this is on the domestic products only-show that from the month of November the increase has been constant and immense. So this business will grow. It is growing now.

Next year it will be many per cent greater than it is this year, and the year after still greater; but nothing will be so easy, and therefore nothing is so certain, that any increase of appropriation for the necessary increase of inspection can be gotten through Congress.

That, Mr. President, shows the necessity of the system of making the packers themselves pay the cost of this inspection. There will be no danger then. It is not only just that they should pay, but it is an automatic arrangement. If they pay these fees into the United States Treasury, they pay in only as many fees as there are cattle, sheep, and hogs killed, and, therefore, they create a fund which grows with the growth of their business and shrinks with the decline of their business.

Therefore, the fund applicable to this inspection would be always as great as the business needs and never greater than the business requires. There would always be a fund in the United States Treasury sufficient to cover the cost of the entire inspection. That comes out of the pockets of the packers, who profit from the inspection, instead of coming out of the pockets of the people, who do not profit by the inspection, except to be saved from a death which they ought not in any event to be in danger of.

It was said by some Senator here last session that this was It was said by some Senator here last session that this was not the usual method; that this method of making the packers pay was exceptional. The contrary, Mr. President, is the truth. The national banks pay the cost of their inspection. Why should not the packers? The immigrants who come to our shores—the necessity for whom we are now opening our eyes to—are compelled to pay the cost of their inspection out of their own slender pockets. Why should the immigrant, who is coming here to make his home, to build up the country, and to develop its resources, pay the cost of his inspection and and to develop its resources, pay the cost of his inspection and the packers not pay the cost of their inspection?

It was pointed out by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] last year that the oleomargarine manufacturers pay the cost of their inspection; and so, Mr. President, I might go on to enumerate others. But the national bank can pay the cost of its inspection, the immigrant can pay the cost of his inspection, the oleomargarine manufacturer can pay the cost of his inspection, but let us protect the packers; they are poor men!

It is true that their business has been so unprofitable that four men in Chicago alone in the last twenty-five years have become worth altogether something over $200,000,000, and as to men who are in that impecunious condition and who have a business who are in that impectations condition and who have a business so unprofitable, it is suggested that we ought not to lay our hands upon their pockets or the pockets of that business, but upon the pockets of the people, which are capacious and unfailing! It is true the immigrant pays, but do not let us see the packers pay; it is true that the oleomargarine manufacturer pays for the inspection of that product, but for heaven's sake let us protect the poor cattleman of the Western plains even if he does pay.

I have heard one other argument, Mr. President. It is an argument which to my mind deserves a pretty severe adjective. It is that if the packers pay the cost of inspection the consumer will not have confidence in the product. Well, of course an argument so meretricious as that ought not to be addressed to a body supposed to be as sound of mind and as sensible as this. The packers do not pay the salaries to the inspectors. The packers, under this amendment, pay a tax into the Treasury; and on the funds created by that tax in the Treasury the Secretary of Agriculture draws his draft for the salaries of the inspectors. It is the United States directly who pay the national inspectors; it is not the packers. And so the argument was absurd, and but for the respect I have for the men who used it

I would say it was intellectually dishonest to say that for the packers to pay the cost of inspection would mean to destroy the confidence of the people of our own or foreign countries in the product of the inspection. So that falls to the ground.

Mr. President, I have often wondered why it was that in a reform like this such vast effort was made to conjure up arguments artificial and fanciful, which, on an instant's examination by a fair and honest mind, are seen to be entirely untenable.

Of course, Mr. President, I am perfectly well aware that the great storm of wrath under whose power this bill was passed at the last session has died away, because the meat-inspection bill has passed so far as the immediate lightnings of that storm are concerned. There is no great public agitation about it now, because the great wrong and the filthy crimes it was meant to stop have been stopped; but if Senators imagine that there is not an interest in the hearts of the people as profound now, and all the stronger because it is silent, that it is wrong to make them pay this money instead of making the packers pay this money, they have made a very great mistake. I tell the Senate that those lightnings only slumber.

I have tested that over a wide extent of this country, putting the arguments against the proposition of the Government pay-ing for the cost of this inspection before the farmers and the laboring men and other men of my own State and many other States, quite as frankly and quite as fairly and quite as much without feeling as though I were arguing upon the other side of the question, and I think I have had personal evidence as to how the people think upon that. Of course, in a matter of right and wrong it does not make any difference what the people think at first. That is not the thing which influences me. It is the sheer justice of this; but I refer to the people's state of mind.

No! Mr. President, the great hurricane of wrath which swept over the American people and caused the enactment of this law has passed away only in appearance and not at all in fact.

Mr. President, when this matter was before the Senate on a former occasion a great many speeches were made upon it. find that the chairman of the committee [Mr. Proctor] made a very emphatic speech, in which he said:

find that the chairman of the committee [Mr. Proctor] made a very emphatic speech, in which he said:

In regard to the other provision, the cost of inspection, it seems to be a radical departure and a very unwise one for the Government to defray this expense. I do not look upon it as a tax that can be put on the cattle grower or upon the consumer. It is a very small one at the most. I look upon it as a proper expense of advertising that should be charged to that account. These packers do a large amount of advertising, and certainly they do none that will yield such a tremendous return as the one of having the Government stamp on their products. I might cite the oleomargarine law as an illustration. There is a tax of one-quarter of a cent upon renovated butter. The result of that very small tax has been that the production of that article has Increased largely—I think nearly double—and that it has yielded an income to the Government of about double the expense of administering it. There has been a good deal of pressure brought to bear regarding this expense, and multitudes of telegrams have been received. It is plain, in looking them over, to see that they emanate from Chicago, and they are sent to different sections of the country to be forwarded to Congress. Many of them are in almost identical language. Several of them have a mistake in grammar, which is repeated identically in different telegrams. Here is a package of them, in which the sender asks "prompt action in passing meat-inspection bill providing for rigid inspection at Government expense."

That identical expression occurs in a large number of the telegrams, and, in fact, in nearly all of them that have been received. Here is another with the same expression, "rigid inspection at Government expense." The same language occurs in this entire package, "rigid inspection at Government expense." Here is another form, perhaps gotten out by one of the other packers.

They seem to be adroit packers, not only of meat products, but of men as well. They know ho

And the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the committee, goes on at a good deal of length to show the injustice of making the Government pay the cost of inspection.

Later on the same day the senior Senator from Massachusetts

[Mr. Lodge], in one of the most earnest, brilliant, and effective speeches that I ever heard fall from the lips of that talented -and I will read only the extracts bearing member of this bodyon this point-said:

Now, as to the payment of the tax. We make the maker of oleomargarine pay the tax for the inspection of his product. We collect from the steamship companies, nominally from the immigrants, a head tax to pay for that inspection service. When we put the Government label on these goods going out from the packing houses, we give them a value which they could obtain in no other way, especially after all that has occurred, and they ought to pay this expense. The inspection tax is a trifle, and it ought to be borne by those who are pecuniarily benefited by it.

Later on he said:

It is right and proper that this tax should be paid by those who directly benefit by it, and whose business methods have made severe inspection absolutely necessary.

Moreover, Mr. President, there is another very serious danger in the opposite direction, and that is if we leave the inspection service to an annual appropriation, we shall find very soon that it is a convenient place for economy—

Just the point I made a moment ago-and that we are going to cut down inspectors and cut off the expense of inspection until it is impossible to make it effective or efficient.

I for one hope, Mr. President—and it is for that purpose I rose—that our conferees will stand with the utmost strength for the views expressed by the Senate on those two points when they embodied this amendment in the bill.

Later on, when the conferees, after as gallant and able a fight as I ever knew a conference committee of the Senate to make, were defeated upon this, when it became clear that we had to yield on these two points or else see the bill itself go to its death, in a conference with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] I said:

Very well, the bill itself is more important than these two items. The principle is more important than these two items, important as they are. I will support the report of the conference committee if it leaves these out, but saves the bill.

And I did that, and I did my best to prevent other Senators, because we were drawing into the hot days of summer, from saying anything about it, so that we might get through. But I found it impossible. My dear friend, a man whom I admire as much as any man I ever knew in public or in private life, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], made a speech the passion of which will be remembered by those who heard him, in the course of which he said:

I watched the course of this measure, and in many quarters it has been considered from the standpoint of the packers and the cattlemen. The American consumers and the ordinary American farmer have been left out of the question.

Nobody has heard any protest from the ordinary farmer who raises cattle. I come in contact with as many personally, I venture to say, and putting it mildly, as any man in this Chamber. I have talked publicly with thousands and privately with hundreds. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] was right about that, and he went on:

Was right about that, and he went on:

Three objects have been sought to be accomplished—first, to placate the packers; next, to placate the men who raise the range cattle, and, third, to get a good market for the packers abroad. What is the outcome of this?

Mr. President, we are to expend $3,000,000 in inspecting the products of the packers, and then the American people are not to get the full benefit of that protection. When we come here and ask for the plain privilege of having the canned goods labeled, so that the American consumer can tell whether he is buying a fresh product or a stale product, the packers and the men who represent them get up on their hind legs and say, "You can not have it. We are omnipotent."

The Semetor from North Packets [Mr. McCurpers], in a greech

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], in a speech of great courage and remarkable eloquence, said:

So they are insistent upon that single proposition-

The packers-

So they are insistent upon that single proposition, but they want the Government to pay. Why? If the packers will make a net income of from ten to fifteen million dollars more during the next twelve months by reason of the Government certificate on all their products, then I want to know what loss or damage the inspection is going to be to the packers; and if it is not a loss I want some Senator to tell me why we should pay out for them the sum of $3,000,000.

And the question of the Senator from North Dakota has never been answered to this day. Senator McCumber continued;

But, Mr. President, the Senators who take the opposite view of this case base their claim upon the insistent proposition that if we charge the packers $3,000,000 for inspecting their meat, they will charge it back again not only against the producer, but against the consumer. Mr. President, if that be true, then I am assuming that it will be because of the necessity upon their part. Is there any necessity that they should charge it back either to the field of production or the field of consumption? Will any Senator stand up here and deny the proposition that the packers charge the consumers all the consumption trade will stand?

I guess nobody has ever been found to deny that sound economic proposition of Senator McCumber.

Will any Senator deny the converse proposition that the packers pay as little to the producers as the producers' business will stand? If those two propositions are undeniable, then we may safely assume that the packers will act in the future as they have been in the past, and that is to charge to the consumptive trade and pay to the productive trade just as great and just as little as the two fields, respectively, will stand. They will follow that proposition.

Mr. President, we are asked to do it for another reason. It is stated to us that if we pay a bribe of $3,000,000—to the packers, they will cease to rob the producers, who must rely upon them for what they get for their products. We tried that proposition many years ago in our intercourse and trade in the Mediterranean, when we paid to the Bey of Algiers a certain sum every year to prevent piracy upon American merchantmen. Did it work? The very next year they charged more, and so on. The piratical demands grew greater and greater, until the cry went forth that we would pay millions for defense but we would pay nothing for tribute to be protected; and we got our defense.

I shall never forget how that burning word "bribe" fell from the lips of the Senator from North Dakota-

I do not believe that the producers in my State, or a single one of them, stand upon the proposition that we will ask the United States oughly a Senator of the people he is. I will ask permission to insert some paragraphs from it in my remarks, as I can not find it at the moment among the many books on my desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. Gallinger. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. After the wretched and revolting exposé that has been made of the condition of things in the packing houses at Chicago, I have very little sympathy for the men who are engaged in that industry, men who

Government to bribe the packers in the sum of $3,000,000 a year that they may not do any further or greater injustice to the producers; and if I thought my people did so feel, I say candidly that I would not attempt to represent their views upon the floor of the Senate of the United States.

There spoke the ideal spirit that ought to animate every American public man. When a man can not represent his constituency's views and do justice to the Republic and to his conscience, he is not an honest man if he does not say "Get some person who is more tractable than I."

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons], who is now occupying the chair, made a speech of very great vigor and of some length. I will not read it all, but I will read one paragraph of it.

Mr. President. I can conceive of nothing that Congress can do which will be of more benefit—and when I use the term "benefit" I mean financial, pecuniary benefit—to the packers of this country than the passage of this inspection law. They ought to be willing from a business standpoint, to say nothing about considerations of justice, to pay for this inspection if the cost were twice as great as it is.

That, last year, was the opinion of the Senator from North Carolina, who was and is a most valuable member of this committee, and I violate no confidence when I declare that it is his opinion now.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] the chairman of the committee, also made another speech in addition to the one from which I quoted, in which he said:

tion to the one from which I quoted, in which he said:

It seems to me a self-evident proposition that if producers fail to make their products such as to command public confidence, it is their duty to do whatever is necessary to restore that confidence. When fairly considered, the severest charge made against the packers is by their friends, who say that if the packers are made to pay this expense, they will charge it to the cattle grower and also to the consumer. I am prepared to believe most anything of this monopoly, but I can hardly think so meanly of them as this, which their friends admit will be their course. Their conduct in regard to this measure has been such as to show that at least they have no nice sense of proprieties. We have all had much experience with round-robin telegrams. We expect them from certain associations, but I have never seen such open and bare-faced use of this method of trying to influence Congress as has been made by these packers in flooding us with telegrams from all over the West in identical language, all evidently emanating from Chicago. If we are to be buncoed—

This is the language of the Senator from Vermont—

This is the language of the Senator from Vermont-

If we are to be buncoed, as I hold that we are to be in this matter of expense, it would be pleasanter to have it done with some neatness and so as to conceal the cheapness of its style. But, Mr. President, gentlemen of another body are about to go home to their constituents to take their judgment upon their acts.

Then he proceeds to give the reasons why the Senate conferees found it necessary to make an agreement.

The other member of the conference committee was the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], whose value to this Senate everybody here knows. He made a speech whose earnestness impressed this Senate powerfully and whose argument is unanswerable, in which he said:

I have myself arrived at these views after a very thorough study of the question and after the fullest consideration which I have been able to give to the subject. I have been particularly impressed with the character of the literature which has been sent to Senators and Repre-sentatives from all parts of the country.

Then he goes on also to call attention to the nature of the telegrams with which Congress, and both Houses of it, were flooded by the packers. The Senator from North Dakota goes

It is very strange, to my mind, that the advocates of the provisions contained in the House amendment and the packers should be fearful that the stock raiser will be obliged to pay this fee which has been spoken of here.

And both of those Senators from North Dakota come from a cattle-growing State.

I can not understand such a situation. If the stock raiser is going to pay this fee, why should the packer be interested? It is not any affair of his. If the man who raises cattle is taxed to pay the inspection, why should the packer be interested? The fact is there has been a good deal of controversy and a great deal of argument here intended to show that if we collect an inspection fee on the animals slaughtered it would be assessed upon the stock raiser, and the one individual above all others who seems to be most fearful of that outcome is the nacker himself. packer himself.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] made a short but powerful address. It was full of feeling, for the Senator is a physician and spoke with emotion of the deaths this murderous practice had caused. That day he proved again what he has proved through so many faithful years, how thoroughly a Senator of the people he is. I will ask permission to have made their millions and their tens of millions, and who, if they had been men of public spirit and correct impulses, would have had their packing houses as free from filth and disease-breeding conditions as is this Senate Chamber. They have absolutely neglected the conditions that ought to have existed, and have horrified not only this country, but the nations of the world, because of the conditions that were found to exist there.

packing houses as iree from hith and disease-breeding conditions that ought to have existed, and have horrified not only this country, but the nations of the world, because of the conditions that were found to exist there.

Mr. President, I want an inspection of meats in Chicago, an inspection as thorough as human ingenuity can devise. I feel like felicitating myself and my associates in this Chamber, in view of what has been spread before the world, that we are permitted to be here to-day. Almost every day I hear of the illness of some friend, and very often the information comes to me that it is due to ptomaine poisoning. Why should it not be, considering what has come to us as a matter of record knowledge?

I have listened to the reading of the letter which was sent to the desk by the Senator from Lowal [Mr. Dolliver] and the telegrams which were sent to the desk by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren]. They are for a rigid inspection, but they want the Government to pay for it. I recall the fact that Artemus Ward once said that he read and had been told that boils were good for the health of the human family. He said he had made an investigation of that and found it to be true, but he wanted the boils to be on the other fellow. [Laughter] So, Mr. President, these people think inspection is necessary, and they say it ought to be thorough in the interest of human health, but they want the Government of the United States to pay for inspecting meats which, if they did their duty, would not need an inspection.

I do not believe that the Government ought to have this burden of $3,000.000 placed upon it for next year and $5,000.000 the next, and perhaps $10,000,000 in a few years, for inspecting the meats that pass which, if they did their duty, would not need an inspection.

I do not see why it could possibly fall upon the producers—the men who raise and sell the cattle to these packing houses—as the Senator from Wyoming contends. My fear is, in view of the conditions that already exist, that it will fall upon t

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I have about concluded what I desired to say upon this amendment. I wish a little bit to recapitulate. I am sorry that during the time when I was making two or three of the points made here the Senators who are now in the Chamber were necessarily at luncheon, because I showed from the record that the representative of the packers themselves formally admitted that if we put the cost upon them the packers would have to pay, and not the cattlemen, the producer, or the consumer.

I showed that the chief resistance to this measure last year and now comes from the packers, and that if they do not have to pay it they are absolutely without a motive for resisting it. I showed that even if it be true that the great range men, referred to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NEISON] last year, paid the cost of the inspection—the trivial cost of inspecit was a matter of justice that they who profited from the business should pay for the inspection and for finding out whether their cattle were diseased, instead of spreading the cost of the inspection all over the American people, both those who eat meat and those who do not.

I will say to the Senators who are now here that I have read at length this flaring advertisement, every word of which de-scribes the law, asking visitors to come and see how this great concern puts into execution the law, calling their attention to what "U. S. inspected and passed" means.

I am aware that there have been some changes of opinion from last year, but I have not yet heard any reason given for any change of opinion. I have shown, as was said last year by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Procror], who was then passionately in favor of this amendment, that in this law we have given the packers an advertisement which money could not purchase. And I have asked why, in addition to giving them an advertisement that has increased the sales of their meats, we should also put our hands into the pockets of the people and give them $3,000,000 of the people's money besides.

I showed the absurdity of the proposition that the inspection cost would come off the eaters of meat or the growers of beef, in view of the admission of Mr. Wilson, in the employment of the beef trust, who formally represented them, and of whom it was said in committee he was the ablest as he was the frankest man they had. I showed that what was prophesied at that time about the improvement in the meat business instead of its decline had come true, and that in the month of January meat and meat food products increased from fourteen millions and something to seventeen millions and something, and I tried to point out how absurd was the proposition that if the packers paid the cost, the people would lose faith in the products, because the charge made on the packers does not go from the packers to the inspectors.

It is collected by the Treasury of the United States. It constitutes a special fund in the Treasury, upon which the Secretary of Agriculture draws checks in payment of the salaries of the inspectors, and therefore that it was not only false but bizarre and grotesque to hold that the faith of the people in the products would be impaired if the packers, like the national banks or like the immigrants or like the oleomargarine manufacturers, pay the cost of inspection.

I have finally asked why it is if in all these other cases we make the business that receives the benefit pay for the inspection that renders it safe, why it is that the packers should be excepted? I shall insist on keeping on with that question, as suggested to me so kindly by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger]. Will anybody tell the Senate or the people why we should deliberately put our hands into the Treasury of the United States and in addition to giving the packers an advertisement, which the Senator from Vermont pointed out last year was beyond price to them, give them $3,000,000 of money taken out of the pockets of the people; those of the people who do not eat meat as well as the people who do eat meat?

Mr. President, notice has been given that a point of order will be made against this amendment. I understand fully that that is a question for the Chair to decide; but as respectfully as it is possible for a Senator to do I suggest at least the permissibility of submitting the point of order to the Senate. There are for that some very notable and, I might say, historic examples, with which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] is especially familiar. For example, in the case of the Panama Canal bill that was made as an amendment to the river and harbor bill. It provided for the government of the canal. It was the whole canal law. As I remember it was what is publicly known as the "Spooner Act."

Mr. SPOONER. Was not that a question of germaneness? Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will read it. Mr. Pettigrew made Mr. SPOONER. the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. It could not have been a change of existing

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Here is what he said:

I think the amendment is obnoxious to Rule XVI, as general legislation on a general appropriation bill.

Then they tried to pin Mr. Pettigrew down to the other point, but he declined to make the other point. He made it upon the ground that it was general legislation. I understand the rule provides for two things—general legislation and relevancy. would be perfectly competent for me to suggest to the Chair the relevancy of this matter and demand that it be submitted to the But I am not doing that.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not antagonizing the Senator. I am only asking for information.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know.

Mr. SPOONER. The Chair is obliged to submit to the Senate the matter of relevancy.

Mr REVERIDGE. Yes; but the point of relevancy was not made and I do not make it now and here. It was that it was general legislation and that is the point of order now raised by the Senator from Wyoming. Nevertheless upon request the Chair did submit it to the Senate as a matter of public consideration.

The Senator from Wisconsin and older Senators will re-The Senator from Wisconsin and older Senators will remember very well the famous Platt amendment. It was put on the Army appropriation bill. No point of order was made against it. The public exigency was too great. It was passed in the closing hours. I remember very well where the Senator from Wisconsin sat across the way when the Platt amendment was passed. It is perhaps hardly in point, because no point of order was made upon it.

But the Philipping circle government bill is one. That was

But the Philippine civil-government bill is one. made as an amendment to the Army appropriation bill and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Pettus] made the point of order upon it. Nevertheless it was submitted to the Senate, and a yea-and-nay vote had.

The case in which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] made the point of order was upon the Hawaiian cable, which was put on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. In each of these cases and in a large number of others, and it is not necessary to refer to them, the point of order was submitted to the Senate, not as a matter of right, but because of the great public considerations involved.

I respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the facts as to this particular amendment. First of all, it was an original part of a measure which was, without objection, put upon the appropriation bill unanimously last session. Secondly, that law has now been reinserted in this bill, and this amendment is the exact reproduction of that portion of that identical measure, which last year went through this body unanimously, which the Senate stood by through its conferees, and which finally was stricken out in conference only to save the bill itself. a matter of vast public moment, upon which the American people have been pretty well informed and upon which a large amount of discussion has taken place.

I have tried to present here at some length, though I have labored to be as brief as I could, the profound reasons, resting not only in justice, but in business expedience, why this taking of money out of the Nation's Treasury instead of out of the coffers of the packers should be stopped and the other method substituted. I have tried to show that if that is not done, the whole purpose of the law will within a year or two be imperiled, because it will be difficult to increase the appropriation with the increase of business.

Mr. President and Senators, I have concluded what I have to say on this question. I think there is nothing more immediately important or upon which the American people are more permanently determined or upon which they ought to be more persistently determined, and I shall close by doing what the Senator from New Hampshire so kindly rose to his feet and suggested that I should do, that is to say whatever the fate of this may be now, we will renew this contest until finally this principle, that where a business is benefited by an inspecit and not the people shall pay for that inspection, is established.

We are doing this for the people. We are only preventing by this law disease being sown broadcast throughout the Republic. I remember that last year the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], who is a physician, rose and spoke with a feeling that almost choked his utterance, and called attention to the fact of cases of ptomaine poisoning of children and those who are not children from diseased meat.

Mr. President, I see no reason against, and I have examined with great patience the reasons for, and I shall ask any Sento tell me whether there is any reason why the packers should not pay the cost of the inspection, which is worth to them untold millions as a business advertisement on the one hand, and which, on the other hand, prevents them from injuring the people. Shall the packers pay for this inspection or shall the people pay?—that is the question for the Senate to

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word on this subject.

Addressing myself more particularly to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren], who evidently made some remarks on this question to-day which I did not hear, but from the argument made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] I assume that the Senator from Wyoming took the position that if this sum of three million, or whatever other number of millions it may be

Mr. WARREN. I will relieve the Senator from North Dakota by saying that I made no argument whatever.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. I understand that the basis for any claim that the Government should pay for this inspection is that the producers in the end will have to pay it if it is charged against the meat trust, as we call it, or the packers. If I am right in that, I want to know on what assumption it is based. Is it true or is it not that the raiser of cattle is wholly at the mercy of the meat combination? If that is true, we need some other law on the subject than a mere law as to who shall pay the fees. Is it true, also, that the meat trust or the meat combination fixes the price to the consumers all over the country? If that he true, then the whole American public are, to a greater extent than I have ever anticipated, wholly at the mercy of a dozen or so individuals in the United States.

If there is no other remedy than that, we must submit to such prices as shall be fixed by a few men or a dozen men. Then certainly we are reaching very closely to that condition where paternalism would be better than to be at the mercy of so few individuals, and nothing can be much worse than that same paternalism.

Mr. President, I again ask Senators: Do the people who produce the stock pay this $3,000,000? Is it charged to them and must they themselves bear this extra burden of inspection, and not the whole country? I understand it is the position of the Senator from Wyoming that one class of people ought not to be compelled to pay that which is for the benefit of all the people.

Now, let me call the attention of the Senate to the people. Perhaps Swift & Co., Libby & Co., and Armour & Co. pay not less than $3,000,000 a year in advertising their goods. In all the great papers of the country, in all the magazines of the country, they pay, we will say, $3,000,000 for advertising. To whom do they charge it? To the public. The same people, of course, have to pay for advertising. sumer and the producer of meat pay for that in the end. Therefore upon the same argument that will sustain a Senator on the proposition that the Government should pay for the advertising which they get through this bill the Government should pay for the other advertising, and if the Government does pay for it, of course they can pay more for their hoof cattle and charge less for the finished product. The reason is just as good in one instance as it is in the other.

Mr. President, there is no advertising scheme in the world that is so beneficial to the meat producers of the United States as that single printed statement upon every ham or barrel of meat that goes from their place of business into a foreign counthe words "Inspected under the national law, and passed." That carried with it the same verity that the American eagle carries with it when it is stamped upon the twenty-dollar gold piece. It stands for purity and everything that the law requires. Nothing could be more beneficial. Have not their exports increased enormously since that time? Have they not been almost 10 or 15 per cent higher than they were in the previous years, giving them eight or ten or fifteen million dollars, and without requiring of them the sum of $3,000,000 to pay for that which benefits them more than anyone else?

Mr. President, it does not require a long argument to demonstrate the fact as to who is benefited. We to-day have a system of inspection of all grain—the corn, the oats, the wheat, the barley, and the flax-that is marketed all over this country. Have the farmers, the producers, come to Congress and asked that we should vote the necessary $10,000,000 to cover that inspection? They pay for it. It is charged to them at the time. No one else makes the payment. Why should we mete out one rule to them and another rule to the meat producer? We could just as well say that in regard to the great grain crop, the great elevator companies would pay the farmer a greater price for his wheat if the Government would pay the cost of the inspection. We can say that as much as we can say that the producer will benefit in this instance if the Government instead of the person who is peculiarly benefited shall foot the expense.

Mr. President, I hope that this matter may be submitted to I hope that we can vote upon it directly. no reason why we should not as well as upon any other matter that has been presented to us. I certainly with all my heart will support the proposition of the Senator from Indiana that the people who are especially benefited by the legislation requiring meat inspection shall pay the expense of it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I regret very much that the lateness of the hour and term prevents us from taking up this subject and going fully into it, for I should very much like to review the arguments or contentions presented by the two Senators who have preceded me-the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from North Dakota. I will only take time to say now that I dissent entirely from their views and contentions.

As to the point of order, I think I never saw a clearer and I suppose the Senators will admit that. It is general legis-It repeals in terms a standing statute and puts another in its place, and it is not of a class that is usually submitted to the Senate, either on an appropriation bill or in a separate bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I made no argument upon those two lines, but I related the special and particular circumstances attending the enactment of this legislation and the presentation of this amendment, and the only three cases which were equally if not more pronouncedly objectionable to the rules than this which were submitted by the President of the Senate. I will say to the Senator and to the Chair, who of course knows more about that than I do or than any of us, that I might have covered not the three great historic cases, but scores of them. It becomes a matter of public propriety and public duty to permit the Senate itself to vote upon this public question and not dispose of a matter of great public justice by a technicality.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there have been thousands and thousands of times when a point of order has been raised and promptly ruled upon by the Vice-President, and of course along with this many thousand times the Chair has occasionally, but very seldom, submitted the question of order to the Senate.

A point of order could rest against this amendment on various grounds. This matter was one which was not estimated for. It has not been considered and reported favorably upon by a committee. It is general legislation, and of the most dangerous kind, because it understakes to place money in the Treasury and pay it out without any appropriation by Congress, not only for this year, but for all time. This is a question of order that is neither new nor upon which there can be any doubt, and it is not a question of relevancy. It is a question to be settled absolutely upon the exact terms made here last year by the Senate and House.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly, but I will be through in a moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask if it is not true that it was adopted just before the closing hours of the session and when we were as hurried in the matter of consideration as we are to-day?

Mr. WARREN. Let it remain settled then, since it is so well settled, until we can get time to consider the whole subject

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WARREN. I am going to yield the floor in a moment. I will be just as anxious to discuss the matter when the time comes as the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from North Dakota or the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says this matter was settled by the Senate. I wanted to ask him if it was not settled on a conference report?

Mr. WARREN. It was presented in all its forms in various reports and finally and fully settled by the Senate-by the

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senate, as I remember it, acted adversely to the Senator's present contention when it adopted it.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. It did. It did twice, if I may interrupt the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

BEVERIDGE. The Senate only yielded because of a deadlock in the committee of conference with the conferees on the part of the House. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. Whether it did or not the Congress of the United States settled it in the usual way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word. When this matter was submitted to the Senate and debated by the Senate and voted upon by the Senate, the Senate decided that the packers ought to pay this amount of money, not the people of the country. It went to conference. The conferees on the part of the Senate, under stress at the close of a session, yielded to the House, and the law was enacted as it is now.

I think the Senator from Wyoming is not quite frank when he represents that the Senate itself has ever placed itself on record in favor of the present status. On the contrary, the Senate has placed itself on record as opposed to the principle that is embodied in the present law.

Mr. WARREN. I will have to challenge the Senator's accusation of lack of frankness on my part, because he will remember that this whole meat-inspection legislation came in on the agricultural appropriation bill en bloc, in one long amendment, and no objection was made in the Senate. It was a case of unanimous consent, knowing that it would go to conference and be settled there. It was an unusual proceeding. By unanimous consent it came in in terms, the Senate expecting to have it changed in conference.

I am ready to submit the question.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the contention of the Senator from Wyoming that this is general legislation I think needs some elucidation. My idea of general legislation is a measure that pertains to more than one subject. This amendment pertains wholly to one subject and one subject only.

I can understand, Mr. President, how the point of order could be raised against the original meat amendment, because that was general legislation, but here it is proposed to amend that amend-Surely it will not be claimed that it is not germane or that it is not relevant.

The distinction may be very fine; I know there have been numerous decisions here that are antagonistic to my contention; but I think it is worth considering, if the question is to be submitted to the Senate. I maintain that there is a wide difference between the original meat amendment and the proposed amendment to that amendment at this time.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, to be absolutely frank, as I always wish to be, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing much, if any, the point of order which has been made, mainly based upon the ground that this is general legislation. I do not understand the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Hans-BROUGH] in his proposition that it is not general legislation because it applies to specific individuals. It applies to all packers in the United States. The fact that in the main packpackers in the United States. The fact that in the main packers reside in Chicago is quite immaterial. They also reside in Omaha and in Kansas City. Wherever there are packers in the United States the law as it now exists applies to them.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I would admit that if this amendment pertained to the question of public lands or to Indian affairs or to the financial question or to any one of a dozen other questions in addition to the meat question it would be general legislation, but I think it is taken entirely out of the category of general legislation, and that the only question before the Senate is to decide whether it is germane or relevant.

Mr. SPOONER. The question is not yet before the Senate. It is lodged within the jurisdiction and the decision of the Chair. It would be just as logical to contend that an excise tax upon tobacco was not uniform because there were some States in the Union in which no tobacco was produced as to claim that this is not general legislation because there are portions of the United States in which there are no packers. But I did not mean to go into that.

I want to say a word about what I often hear in the Senate latterly when a question not of relevancy, but of order, is made, and it is accompanied by a request from the floor that the Chair shall submit it to the Senate. For myself I shall never make, as I have never made, any such request of the Chair. It is explicable only upon the theory that the Chair may not or is expected not to decide it in accordance with the wish of the Senator making the request.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, it must not be forgotten that the decision of this question upon a point of order does not rest as a finality with the Chair, because whatever the Chair may decide upon a point of order a Senator may appeal from that decision, if he prefers the decision of the Senate to the decision of the Chair. It may fall merely within the Latin proverb, de gustibus non est disputandum, but I have more than once been quite impressed with the peculiarity of a request from the floor that the Chair, instead of deciding the question according to his best judgment, as the Chair always does, should surrender to a doubt implied upon the floor and decline to rule in order that in the first instance the Senate might decide. that the Chair should be left to decide. Questions of relevancy the Chair must submit, but the Chair should be left to decide questions of order, and the Senate should be rather a court of appeal than a court of original jurisdiction, request being made that the Chair abdicate the function which is put by the rule primarily upon the Chair.

Mr. President, I have often heard reference made upon questions of order to the Platt amendment. A point of order was made upon the Platt amendment. Does the Senator from Indiana wish to interrupt me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was going to interrupt the Senator, but think I will ask permission when he gets through to say a

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has that right. I did not mean to decline to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right. I think no point of order was made on the Platt amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. It was put in by unanimous consent.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. A point of order was made on the canal amendment, the Philippine civil government amendment, and on the Hawaiian cable amendment. Those are a few notable instances where the point of order was made that it was general legislation on an appropriation bill, and it was generally agreed to be so. When the Senator gets through, I will ask permission to say a word.

Mr. SPOONER. It is useless, then, to cite the Platt amendment upon a point of order, because it was incorporated by unanimous consent. It would not have been subject to a point of order. While some Senators thought it might be, the patriotism of this body led Senators to forbear to make any The action of the Congress, which alone can question about it. declare war, had put the Army of the United States into Cuba, and the action of the President and the Senate, which alone can make peace under the Constitution, had brought about a cessation of the war between the United States and Spain, with an obligation upon us that we should occupy Cuba and exercise there all the powers and discharge all the duties imposed by the rules of civilized warfare and the law of nations upon a military occupancy. So I always believed firmly that it was entirely competent for Congress in an Army appropriation bill providing expenses for the Army in Cuba and everywhere else to provide upon what terms that Army should be withdrawn

I remember another amendment to that Army appropriation bill which was much challenged. I do not remember now whether a point of order was made upon it or not. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], who never forgets anything, will remember. It was a Philippine government amendment which I offered to the bill. I always believed that that amendment, while very bitterly attacked upon the floor, was absolutely in order upon that Army appropriation bill, because it provided what international law provides as a part of the military function-civil government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me a question? Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator claim that it was not general legislation?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course it was not general legislation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that amendment created on the face of it the most perfect suzerainty on paper in the world.

Mr. SPOONER. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that that amendment created no suzerainty

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is quite accurate now, and I accord to him his opinion in perfect good faith, as he accords the right of opinion to me, for which I am profoundly grateful. Mr. President, the Platt amendment simply provided, as a condition of the withdrawal of the Army of the United States from Cuba, that the people of Cuba should place in their constitution, or as an appendix to it, its stipulations, and it was voted into the constitution of Cuba or annexed to it by the people of Cuba. They made it a part of their own constitution. Congress did was to prescribe the conditions upon which the Army might be withdrawn from Cuba. Of course, when the Platt amendment was appended to the constitution of Cuba by the people of Cuba, it bound the people of Cuba. It was not a law operating in the United States, and it established, I think, in no proper sense a suzerainty.

But to go back, Mr. President, to the amendment which I have had the honor to offer for a civil government in the Philippines, to the military bill, I never shall forget—and I will take but a moment about it—two or three things in connection with that amendment. I was earnestly requested, Mr. President, to offer that amendment to the military bill. I had offered it as a distinct propositon long before that. There was no originality in it. It simply adapted the Louisiana resolution of 1803 to the situation in the Philippines.

One evening I was at the White House with President McKinley, who, when he took the office of President, was a ripe and well-disciplined statesman, who grew in mental stature and in measure of statesmanship every hour under the tutelage of grave responsibility of that exalted office—a wise, sane, patriotic, powerful statesman, always unruffled; and, Mr. President, not only that, but always considerate and one of the sweetest and most charming personalities ever known or ever to be known to the history of this Government. He said:

Under the war power of the Constitution for some years now the whole responsibility of governing and caring for the 7,000,000 people in the Philippine Archipelago, 7,000 miles from us, has been upon me, with no line of legislation or Congressional enactment behind me. I am weary of it; the burden is too great; and I hope before the Congress adjourns—I plead for it—that whether of much efficacy or not, it shall not adjourn without putting behind me some enactment upon the subject.

And he suggested as what perhaps best might be enacted by Congress as a part of the military bill an amendment very similar to that which I had the honor to offer, and which I had, as I have said, long before offered and had referred to the appropriate committee.

It was not cowardice; it was not grasping for power. It curtailed the President's power, because up to that hour there was no limit upon his power, Mr. President, but the limit which international law puts upon the power of the commander in chief of a conquering army. So that amendment was offered and adopted by the Senate, and it was of unspeakable comfort to the then President of the United States, whose memory is revered by all within the bounds of the United States and by all civilized peoples beyond our bounds. I never spent in my lifeand if I should live to be a thousand years old I never could spend-a more uncomfortable three hours or more than I spent in that debate. I sat here, listening to Senators on the other side denouncing the amendment as unconstitutional, as an innovation, as conferring upon the President arbitrary power, as a delegation of legislative power clearly in violation of our fundamental law, I thought myself well prepared to answer the argument, Mr. President; but I sat here dumb because elaborate debate would have compelled an extraordinary session of Congress, which at that time every public interest was against. I only want' to say now that since then the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that amendment to be constitu-

Mr. President, as to this point of order, I have nothing to say. I am content to leave it to the Chair, and if I am discontented with the decision of the Chair I know my remedy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, in respectfully submitting to the Chair the permissibility, I have not even gone so far as to say the propriety, of submitting this question of order to the Senate no one knows better than the Senator from Wisconsin, unless it be the Chair himself, that that implied not the slightest lack of confidence in the judgment of the Chair. We all know very well that on large public matters these questions are sub-mitted to the Senate. It is not for an instant that anybody questions the wisdom of the Chair; but it is that the matter in dispute is of such great public moment that, as a matter of public policy, the Senate itself should have an opportunity of passing upon the question directly, and it can only pass upon the question directly by the Chair taking that view of it and submitting it to the Senate. Nothing could have shown this more plainly than the last illustration given by the Senator Wisconsin himself. He showed that the exigencies surrounding the Philippine civil-government bill were such that notwithstanding the fact that it was unquestionably general legislation, still it ought to have been—

Mr. SPOONER. No; I did not say it was general legislation.

I say it was not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, you say that. I beg the Senator's pardon, then. I have mistaken the Senator's view upon that matter. The Senator did not say so at that time, but I presume the entire Senate remembers the legislation, as it was not very long ago. The one I am referring to now, the paragraph giving the President full power, which went onto the appropriation bill, was clearly general legislation, new legislation, and did not pretend to be anything else.

But leave that aside. Some, at least, thought it was general legislation and some thought it was not general legislation, just as now some may think and some may not think this is general legislation; but the reason the question was submitted to the Senate was what the Senator describes as the "public importance" of the measure itself. It of course always becomes a question for the judgment of the Chair.

Therefore it is that the rule itself is not ironclad. none of the instances that I cite would not have been submitted to the Senate. If that was not general legislation, then the Chair ought not to have submitted it to the Senate, but ought to have held it in order directly; but he did not hold it in order directly, but he let the Senate vote upon it because it was a matter of too large public concern to be killed by a rule of the Senate.

Now, with respect to the Platt amendment, I wish the Senate to observe this analogy. The Senator says that the Platt amendment was not general legislation because it affected the Army, and, therefore, it was all right on the Army appropriation bill; but apply that in this case. This amendment affects agriculture, and therefore it is all right on the agricultural appropriation bill. But this goes further. This is an amendment to the meat-inspection law, which is reenacted in the agricultural appropriation bill. So if there is any analogy this case is stronger than the Platt amendment case, and if, upon the reasoning given by the Senator from Wisconsin, the Platt amendment was not general legislation, much less is this general legislation.

In addition to that, we have the consideration of the public policy for the Chair's attention, which is that this very provision, an integral part of the meat-inspection bill which went on the agricultural bill this last year unanimously and which is reenacted this year, is a part of the law itself.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana what he thinks of this proposed legislation contained in his amendment:

The fund thereby created shall be subject to the requisition of the Secretary of Agriculture, as if appropriated by Congress—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that is a very good thing.
Mr. WARREN. The amendment proposed by the Senator continues:

for the necessary expenses of carrying out the provisions of this act, and shall continue permanently available until used.

Does that square itself with the legislation that we have been enacting of late by Congress?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I very frankly say-and I do not desire to split any hairs about it—that the very purpose of my amendment is to cut off this taking of $3,000,000 a year out of the Treasury of the United States and paying it for the packers' advertisements of inspection. We ought to make them pay it

Mr. SPOONER. In other words, you propose to enact general legislation in the broadest form.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, I was making some analogies with the illustrations given by the Senator from Wisconsin. It was not upon those considerations, however-Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me a moment. It was not upon those considerations that I was suggesting—and that I put it very delicately both the Chair and the Senate must admitthe propriety of submitting the question to the Senate. It was upon the real reason, after all, why all questions of this kind are submitted to the Senate, the real reason why all the illus trations I have given from the Philippine civil-government bill, the Hawaiian cable bill, and all the rest. They were submitted to the Senate by the Chair because they were matters of such large public concern that the Chair, acting in his discretion, said that they were things for the Senate to pass upon, and therefore he would not exercise his privilege of passing upon them. In making the suggestion I have made I will state again that that was the reason, and not, as the Senator knows, any distrust of the Chair's ability or the Chair's conscientiousness.

Mr. President I did not impute to the Senator as an individual Senator any reflection upon the capacity or good faith of the Chair. I was speaking in a general way upon what I considered to be in its nature rather offensive to a presiding officer-requests which have been more than once made at this session of Congress that the Chair submit a question to the Senate. The rules give the Chair the right to submit it to the Senate. That enables the Chair, if he has doubt or for any reason he prefers that the Senate should pass upon it in the first instance, to submit it to the Senate. That is one A request from the floor of the Senate that the Chair shall submit to the Senate a given point of order, I say implies, Mr. President, of necessity, a fear, not that the Chair perhaps may decide it improperly—of course, not that—but that the Chair may not decide it as the Senator making the request wishes it to be decided. It is not polite and courteousam not speaking of the Senator from Indiana-to the Chair, whoever he may be. That is a matter committed by the rules to the Chair. It is to be done or not to be done upon his initia-It is to be done if he prefers to do it. It is not to be done, Mr. President, upon request from the floor, and under the constraint which such a request carries with it. That is what I think about it.

And, Mr. President, there is another thing to be said about it, which is a repetition upon my part. I take it the Chair—and I am not referring to the present occupant of the chair (the Vice-President in the chair), but to all occupants of the chair—sworn to the discharge of an important and conspicuous duty, will always decide points of order as to the Chair shall seem right, but any member of the Senate has a right-and it is not regarded by the Chair as offensive, and the Chair has no right to regard it as offensive-to appeal from the decision of the Chair to the decision of the Senate.

I should be very sorry if into the suggestion which I have made, not because the Senator from Indiana made this request, but it has been made several times at this session, and I have never heard it made without regret.

Mr. President, it does not imply any lack Mr. BEVERIDGE. of confidence in either the judgment or the conscience of the Chair to make, not a request—because that has not been made but to suggest in the most delicate and polite terms that a great public question should be submitted to the Senate. It is not discourteous to the Chair that that should be done. If so, the books and the records of this session are full of similar affronts made by men who had served many years in this body and who made the suggestion for the same reason that the suggestion is made to-day, and upon the same reasons upon which the Chair all through our history has seen fit to submit to the Senate certain questions in regard to which, perhaps, the Chair himself was in no doubt.

Mr. President, I do not think very much discussion would have arisen here, because the RECORD will show that my suggestion, made before the point of order was made and perhaps while the Senator from Wisconsin was out of the Chamber, was put in language studiously courteous that the permissibility-of course, I was aware that the Chair understood that it was permissible for him to do so-of its being submitted to the Senate.

In the instances that I have cited there was no impropriety discovered by the requests then made to submit those great questions to the Senate. Nobody ever thought to raise the question of impropriety. Every Senator knew, what I assume every Senator here now knows, that the only reason was that, in the mind of the Senator suggesting it, the gravity of the public matter involved in the decision was such that it would seem to be wise, as a matter of public policy, that it should be submitted to the Senate instead of being killed by the arbitrary operation of the Chair's decision under a rule. Chair might be bound in deciding by rule to unfavorably dispose of a measure which the Senate and the country, for the deeper reason of public policy, might want to enact.

do not think there would have been ten sentences of argument about this, save only the suggestion of the permissibility of submitting this to the Senate, so that the Senate itself could pass upon it. The citations of the precedents for such action were given without reading from these records on my desk; and when I was giving them, the kindly suggestion was made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger]—and everybody is well informed as to his complete mastery of the parliamentary law and precedents of this body-that whereas

I only gave three I might have given a score.

In each instance that I did cite, argument was not made that the subject of the point of order was not general legislation at all. Senators frankly met the question, which was that the matters were of sufficient importance to justify this body as a body in passing upon their merits, instead of compelling the Chair, by decision under an arbitrary rule, to defeat a measure which would benefit the people. It all comes down to that, and the Senator from Wisconsin recognized that when he described, with a pathos that touched me, his conference at the White House with President McKinley. I had almost arisen then to ask him—though I resolved to hold my inquiry until afterwards—if that did not demonstrate the fact that when the public exigency was great enough the Senate, in the exercise of its common sense and the Chair recognizing the gravity of the situation, would not relax the rule and submit to the Senate the merits of the proposition. Of course, that is exactly what that illustration did prove.

All there is in this matter is this: The question is whether or not the Chair might think that this or any other question he would submit to the Senate was a matter of enough public concern for him to suspend the rule and do it.

I want to state to the Senator from Wisconsin that I hardly think he would respect me if I did not resent the suggestion that there was any discourtesy in speaking, in my own right as a Senator, to the Chair upon the point of order and the rules governing this body, of which I am a member. I remember that at the last day when the Senate was in session the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] rose-he could only do it by permission, and it was within the discretion of the and proceeded to give the Chair some advice concerning how he should rule upon a point of order. I have listened to the Senator from Wisconsin, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, at whose feet I sit, like Saul at the feet of Gamaliel, arise and instruct the Chair scores of times, and I never before suspected that in his instructing the Chair or giving the Chair the benefit of his knowledge upon points of order he really was cherishing in his breast any discourtesy.

I think the Senator and all Senators must, and gladly will, agree that the only question involved in submitting a question of this kind is the gravity of the measure and its importance to the American people. It is true that I was unfortunate in de-livering my remarks and the proofs that I submitted to this body during the lunch hour, and while the Chair was compelled to be absent at luncheon, but I think it has been demonstrated, after all, in the brief discussion that recently occurred here, that this is a matter of sufficient gravity and sufficient general public concern to the nation for the Chair to permit the Senate itself to vote on it.

If the Senator from Wisconsin or the Chair cherishes any notion that in the suggestion, which was put with studied delicacy and politeness, there was anything to the contrary, I apologize in advance to the Chair. It has been done, of course, in the Senate before, frequently, without anybody ever questioning anybody's right to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it is only fair that I should say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] again that in what I have said upon the question of propriety I imputed not at all to him any intention to be offensive to the Chair. I was dealing with the practice which is growing up in the Senate, and which I make bold, without apology, to criticise. I am not opposed to the attitude of the Senator from Indiana on the merits of the proposition, and what I have said therefore is not antagonistic to his contention upon the merits.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. What I want is exactly what the Senator from Wisconsin wants-an opportunity given Senators to vote upon the question.

Mr. SPOONER I want more than that. The Senator referred to me as chairman of the Committee on Rules, which I have been for some years. I do not wish it to become a practice in the Senate, whenever a Senator thinks the Chair would, under his oath, decide the question of order one way and the Senate perhaps another, to request the Chair to forego his duty and to submit the question of order to the Senate. I do not think it is seemly in the Senate. The rule was not made for The rule was made in order to give the Chair the opportunity, which is sometimes, and sometimes ought to be, availed of, and it is the right of the Chair to submit a question of order to the Senate. The rule was not intended to give to Senators the proper function of asking the Chair-and a suggestion is a request about such a matter to an occupant of the chair who has any delicacy-not to decide it himself, but, in deference to the views of some Senator, to submit it to the Senate.

Mr. President, if a Senator rises and asks ordinarily that the Chair submit a question of order to the Senate, it places the Chair in an impossible position. It places the Chair under an embarrassment from which it is impossible for him to release himself except by submitting the question to the Senate. A notice of that sort from the Senate has peculiar weight and rather painful weight upon the Chair, the present occupant of the chair more than other occupants of the chair, because he is not a member of the Senate. A member of the Senate for the time being occupying the chair would feel a little more at liberty than an ex-officio occupant of the chair.

I was not speaking with reference to the Senator from I was speaking of the subject, and I resolved not long ago that when next it rose, whoever presented it, I would submit that it is unjust to the Chair and not quite the dignified thing for the Senate to do.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana talks about degrees of importance in questions of order as bearing upon this sub-I confess I am not quite able to discern any substantial distinction in that respect. In small things, as in great things, the honest man does his duty; and the Chair will decide points of order, whether they are important or unimportant, as the Chair deems it a duty to decide; and, I insist, that whether the Chair will submit to the Senate a question which under the rules he has a right to decide himself ought to be left for the Chair to determine and not be upon open petition from the floor that the Chair abdicate his function and leave it upon request to the Senate. The decision of the Chair in no matter, small or great, is not final. The Senator makes a mistake when he asserts that a matter-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When I was making my remarks a moment ago I intended to answer the point, so far as I am per-sonally concerned, by saying that although it is a right, I would under no circumstances appeal from the decision of the Chair or from the decision of any Presiding Officer in the Senate, although it is a legal right, unless it involved a matter of the profoundest conviction or the gravest danger. It would be a discourtesy. I recognize, like every other Senator, the entire right of the President of the Senate to do as he pleases.

Mr. SPOONER. It is no more a discourtesy to the Chair to appeal from his decision than it is a discourtesy to a judge to appeal from his decision; and not to appeal from the decision of the Chair when a Senator thinks it is wrong, and involves anything of substance, is to sacrifice duty to the phantom, and mere phantom, of etiquette or supposed etiquette.
